Mr. EDMUNDS. That amendment is in manuscript, and as it affects the welfare of the people of this city as well as this corporation, it appears to me that it would be better that it should be in print. While I am up I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Maryland, who has charge of the bill, I see, instead of the chairman, whom I addressed before, to the point whether the bill should not contain in reference to these new locations of track in the streets an explicit provision that there is a large of the streets an explicit provision that there is a large of the streets an explicit provision that there is a large of the streets an explicit provision that there is a large of the streets an explicit provision that there is a large of the streets an explicit provision that there is a large of the streets an explicit provision that there is a large of the streets an explicit provision that there is a large of the street. explicit provision that those tracks should be laid down and the street restored and kept in order the same as the law now is about the other parts of these railway tracks, at the expense of the company. I cannot quite understand the amendment as read from manuscript; but while it authorizes this company to lay tracks in new streets, I think it does not provide that at the company's expense shall the streets be restored to a suitable condition. Of course it ought to be at their expense; at least it appears so to me, and that ought to be at their expense; at least it appears so to me, and that they should not be allowed to tear up the pavement, the asphalt or stone or whatever it may be, or even the earth, and leave it in a condition unsuitable for travel.

Mr. WHYTE. This is not a new road; this extension is under the old charter. The bill does not change the charter.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I know it does not change the charter; but the charter does not say that if they lay a track in these streets not mentioned in the charter they shall make a proper restoration and keep the streets in repair between their tracks and two feet on either side, if that is the distance that the law usually requires. So it would be open to question; and my friend knows perfectly well that these corporations like all their kindred take advantage of every technicality and doubt to avoid performing their duty in these respects toward the public. It is a somewhat singular fact, for I understand it to be a fact and am sure it is, that some other of these railway corporations which have been explicitly required by law to bear their share of the pavement of the streets in the city of Washington in snare of the pavement of the streets in the city of Washington in proportion to the share that the adjoining proprietors and the public have been required to bear, have refused to pay their assessments, and that suits have been brought to compel the payment and for some reason or other these suits linger along from year to year on the dockets of the courts and never get tried; that hundreds of thousands of dollars—more than one hundred thousand dollars certainly and I think more than two, for I remember to have seen the printed reports that were called for about a year ago—are honestly due to the transprived. were called for about a year ago-are honestly due to the treasury of the District from these corporations that for some reason or other donot come in.

In that state of things I think we ought to be extra careful to have this provision for tearing up new streets made so clear that there shall be no opportunity for the astuteness of counsel either to get rid of performing that just obligation or to unreasonably delay the enforcement of it, if they do not choose to pay promptly. I rather suspect that the fault now in respect of these existing corporations and the former assessments is in the officers of the District, that they do not push the suits to enforce the penalties and collect the assessments, in whatever form they may be, with the zeal and diligence that the public interest requires; but I say that of course under reserve, because I do not wish to do injustice to anybody; but the great fact remains that a very large sum of money which belongs to the treasury of the District and to the United States that these corporations on Pennsylvania avenue and the other railways ought to pay in as their fair and honest share in respect of these street mat-I have the rest and another share in respect of these street matters are not paid. That I believe to be a fact, and therefore it is that I wish in this instance, as far as I can, to make the thing so very clear and simple that there cannot be any possible creep-out about it.

Mr. WHYTE. I agree with the Senator from Vermont that if there

Mr. WHYTE. I agree with the Senator from Vermont that if there is any doubt upon that subject it ought to be removed entirely by apt words inserted as an amendment to this proposition. My judgment was that inasmuch as in the original charter the obligation is laid upon this company to do this in any street which they have the power to tear up, that is, to replace and keep the street in proper order by proper pavements, I presumed it would operate upon every street subsequently allowed to be used by the company. So it did not occur to me that it was necessary whenever an amendment was offered lifting a truck (sathe entropy have amounts to the lifting offered lifting a track (as the only change here amounts to the lifting of the track from Ohio avenue and carrying it over and putting it on another street) relieved them in the slightest degree from that general obligation which in their charter was imposed upon them. There is no difficulty about making it clear beyond all question, but I agree with the Senator they ought not to have any loophole through which they could escape they could escape.

There is no objection to the delay asked in regard to this matter and to having the amendment printed; but at the same time I should like to have the letter of Mr. Baird, the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, and also the letter of Mr. Irish, the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, printed in the RECORD, so that we may look at the whole subject in a better light.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment, with the communications of the property of the proper tions referred to, will be printed in the RECORD, and the bill will go

The communications are as follows:

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION, Washington, D. C., May 21, 1880.

Washington, D. C., May 21, 1830.

Sir: I am in receipt of your letter of the 20th instant, and in reply beg to say that I would earnestly commend to the favorable attention of the proper authorities the proposed plan of extension of your line of street railway. Passing along Fourteenth to B street south, the line would accommodate visitors to and employés of the United States carp ponds, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, the Washington Monument, the Agricultural Department, the Smithsonian Institution, and the new National Museum building. One of the principal entrances of the last mentioned establishment will be on B street, the entire north side of which belongs to the General Government.

Although B street is not among the widest streets of the city, ample roomwould be left for a railroad were a single railway track laid near its north curb. There could be sidings or turn-outs at Ninth or Twelfth street.

Very respectfully,

SPENCER F. BAIRD, Secretary.

CHARLES WHITE, Esq.,
President of the Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railway Company.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING, Documber 9, 1880.

Six: This bureau is now established in the new building erected for its use at the corner of Fourteenth and B streets, southwest, and it is very important in the legislation now pending in regard to the extension of certain street-car lines, or in the incorporation of new lines, that the accommodation of its employés be kept in the incorporation of new lines, that the accommodation of its employes be kept in view.

The Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railway is the only line in this part of the city, and those of our employés who live more or less distant, near other lines, in order to reach the bureau and return home, will continue to be obliged to pay two fares each way, unless Congress in granting additional privileges to the companies seeking to extend their present or lay new lines to or near the bureau does so on such conditions as will secure them against it. Many of our employés are females, receiving comparatively small wages, who are compelled to make use of street cars, on whom this extra tax of sixty cents a week, or $2.50 a month, over and above the ordinary fare is very burdensome.

The tracks of the Capitol and North O Street Company (which is now soliciting additional legislation in this regard) intersect the tracks of the Washington and Georgetown line five squares distant from the bureau, or about one-third of a mile, and the Metropolitan line nine squares distant, or about two-thirds of amile. It is thus seen that the distance over which passengers will be carried on the Capitol and North O Street line, (if that company is permitted to remove its tracks from Twelfth to Fourteenth street,) from intersecting lines to our new building, does not average more than seven squares, or less than half a mile, for which short distance full fare should certainly not be charged. In this no reference is made to the Columbia Railway line, since but a very small number of our employés live along it.

The Capitol and North O Street Company applied to the last Congress for legislation authorizing it to remove its tracks from Twelfth street and to extend its present tracks down Fourteenth street as far as the new building, which would give that company the exclusive benefits of the travel to and from the bureau. That there should be given to other companies besides the above-named equal privilege with it of extending and laying their tracks along Fourteenth street to the bureau as was desired by them, or that the Capitol and North O Street Company, if given this privilege exclusively, should carry passengers over the short distance from its point of junction with other lines of road at a much reduced fare, was conceded as just by the committees of Congress by whom the subject was considered. At the instance of members of these committees, I submitted the matter to the Capitol and North O Street Company, and after full consideration by its management, its president and one of its directors, duly authorized to act in its behalf, united with the chief of this bureau in the following letter to Hon. E. H. ROLLINS, who, as a member of the Committee of the Senate on the District of Columbia, had the matter in charge:

"Washington, D. C., February 25, 1879

"SIR: After consultation we have agreed that the following amendment shall be added to House bill No. 5371, at the close of section 1, in order to accommodate the employés of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing: Provided, That the said railway company shall convey employés of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing to er from said bureau, located at the corner of Fourteenth and B streets southwest, to or from the nearest intersecting point on the line of any street railway at a fare not to exceed two cents. not to exceed two cents.
"Very respectfully.

"Chief of Bureau.
"EDW'D TEMPLE,
"President Capitol, North O Street Company,
"GEO. A. MCLHENNY,
"Director Capitol, North O Street Companu,
("In behalf of said company.")

("In behalf of said company.")

This subject is now again before Congress, and I deem it my duty in behalf of the employes of the bureau, all of whom are of limited means and many of very needy circumstances, to call your attention to this question of reduced fare, which closely affects all of them, and to ask that you will, as far as possible, endeavor to protect their interests and the interests of the Government in this regard. It would, of course, better serve the public interests not to have this reduced rate limited to employes of this bureau, but to be open to the entire traveling public. Toward the close of the last session of Congress it was proposed by one of the committees having the matter under consideration that, instead of removing their tracks from Twelfth street to Fourteenth street, the Capitol and North O Street Company be given permission to lay a branch track along B street from Twelfth street to Fifteenth street, which, if done, would involve the opening up of the grounds of the bureau and make more difficult the protection of the important public interests committed to its charge, and at the same time give in front of the building the annoyances of noise and the offensive odors resulting from the standing of horses and conveyances. I earnestly hope that Congress will not assent to this proposition.

Very respectfully, yours,

O. H. IRISH, Chief of Bureau.

Hon. I. G. Harris, Chairman Committee on District of Columbia, United States Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the next bill on the Calendar.

Mr. BECK. Before that bill is passed over, the chairman will allow me to offer an amendment, which I should like to have printed,

SEC. —. That it shall not be lawful hereafter for any street railway company in the District of Columbia to carry, or receive pay from, passengers on any of their cars in excess of the number of seats provided for passengers in such car, and they shall provide and maintain on their respective lines a sufficient number of cars to accommodate the public. The District commissioners are hereby authorized and directed to determine the number of cars required and the number of seats in each. For violation of the provisions thereof relative to passengers said companies shall be liable to a fine of $5 for each offense, recoverable by the party aggrieved in any court in the District, and for violation of the provision relative to the number of cars required the charters of said companies shall be forfeited by proper proceedings instituted by the District commissioners on behalf of the people of said District.

ANACOSTIA AND POTOMAC RAILROAD LINE.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1381) to amend the act giving approval and sanction of Congress to the route and termini of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad line.

Mr. WHYTE. There are some provisions in that bill which may come in conflict with the bill just passed over, and I think it had better go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

METROPOLITAN RAILROAD COMPANY.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 387) to amend the charter of the Metropolitan Railroad Company of the District of Columbia.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, to add the following as additional sec-

SEC. 2. That the said company shall complete the tracks and run the cars along the streets herein named within twelve months from approval of this act.

SEC. 3. That Congress may at any time amend, alter, or repeal this act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It seems to me that the question suggested as to the North O street road ought to be considered in connection with this bill, and I ask the Senator from Maryland whether it would be agreeable to him to let this go over also in order that the committee may adjust the whole matter satisfactorily?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

DISTRICT WATER SUPPLY.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 1493) to regulate the use and prevent the waste of Potomac water in the District of Columbia.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. This bill has been previously considered as in Committee of the Whole, and an amendment is pending proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. ROLLINS.]

Mr. INGALLS. It is so long a time since that bill was considered that I presume it had better be read so that the Senate may be aware of its provisions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The substitute reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia for the original bill will be read.

The Secretary read the proposed substitute, as follows:

The Secretary read the proposed substitute, as follows:

That the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia are hereby declared to be, and made, water inspectors, and it shall be their duty, and they are hereby required, from time to time, under the direction of the commissioners, to examine and inspect, without previous notice to the occupants, all premises where Potomas water is taken or used, and if at any time they shall find water running to waste on any premises, they shall forthwith report the number and locality of the premises, the name of the owner or occupant, and the character of the waste, to the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. That upon the receipt of such report or of any other satisfactory evidence that water is running to waste on any premises, it shall be the duty of the commissioners to cause the water registrar forthwith to notify the owner or occupant of said premises, and if such waste is not stopped within forty-eight hours after such notice, the water supply shall be cut off under the provisions of the foregoing section, it shall not be turned on again until the owner or occupant of such premises has paid to the water registrar the sum of $2.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. ROLLINS | proposed an amendment to add as a new section what will now be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. —. That the provisions of the preceding section shall not apply to any premises the owner or occupant of which shall procure and attach a water-meter in such manner and of such kind as shall be approved by the commissioners of said District; and upon the attachment of such water-meter the said premises shall be charged with an annual water rent of $4, and in addition thereto shall pay for the water consumed on the said premises at a rate prescribed by the said commissioners not less than one cent per one hundred gallons for the quantity consumed in excess of fifty gallons per day for each person permanently occupying such premises.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The first question will be on the amendment reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to call the attention of the committee to one or two points in connection with that proposition. entirely in sympathy with the object of preventing the waste of water, because (putting it upon the lowest and most selfish grounds) happening to reside in a geographically high part of the city, it is very difficult a good many times in the day to get water where I happen to live, and I think it arises from the excessive use or waste of water in other parts of the city.

Now, the first thing I wish to call attention to is one that, if there Now, the first thing I wish to call attention to is one that, if there is anything in it, can be remedied in a moment; that is, the provision which makes the police water inspectors. If there are no authorities now that have any right of inspection at all, I do not see but that the provision is entirely correct so far as form goes; but if it happens that the water registrar or any of his agents or any other authority in the District now possesses the power of any sort of inspection, even with the consent of the owner, then I submit to the committee whether this provision does not by implication repeal all other authority of inspection. If it is intended to do that, it may be right, though it would strike me that whatever powers the water other authority of inspection. If it is intended to do that, it may be right, though it would strike me that whatever powers the water registrar and his employés now have in reference to inspection and superintendence, &c., need not be impaired, but that this police provision ought to be additional to any existing power. If I am right about that, then I think it would be well to say in the first section that they are constituted water inspectors in addition to any officers or persons now having authority of law in reference to water affairs.

Mr. ROLLINS. There is no objection to the amendment the Senator from Vermont suggests. It is not intended to deprive the present officers of the water department of any power which they have.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If they have any powers now, I am strongly inclined to fear—to put it very mildly—that this would be a repeal by implication of whatever inspecting powers now exist in any other implication of whatever inspecting powers now exist in any other officers than those here named.

Now I will come to the other point that struck me. I am afraid that this provision for inspecting is not adequate to meet the end in view. Suppose at my house a policeman comes and perceives that the water is running to waste, He gives notice to the District commissioners. They notify me to stop it. If I do not stop it in forty-eight hours, then I am to be cut off. Very well; I do stop it in forty-seven hours. I cannot be cut off under this bill. Two hours afterward, forty-nine hours having elapsed, I let it run again. What is to be done then? I am to have forty-eight hours' notice again to stop the waste. At the end of forty-seven hours I proceed to comply and two hours afterward I turn the water on again. So I can go on with waste. At the end of forty-seven hours I proceed to comply and two hours afterward I turn the water on again. So I can go on without the slightest inconvenience or without any practical inconvenience in this way. If I did it wrongfully, as I should do if it was a waste, I ought to be punished, and I think this bill ought to contain a penal clause that any person taking the water that the public furnish to this city and letting it waste unreasonably either by neglect or by any willful act of his should be the subject of being brought up in the police court and fined every time he did it. I think then when the policeman found it out it would mean something. I merely make the suggestion. the suggestion.

Mr. WHYTE. I want to ask the Senator from Vermont whether the punishment of paying $2 for every time he is stopped would not amount to a sufficient fine in the end?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, but in the case I have supposed this two-dollar affair is only in case he does not stop the waste within forty-eight hours. Mr. WHYTE.

Mr. WHYTE. But every time he is detected in letting it run again he is to pay $2 before it is turned on again.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not so understand.

Mr. WHYTE. That is the intention.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The way I understand it on hearing it read is that Mr. WHYTE. That is the intention.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The way I understand it on hearing it read is that if the person who is found negligent in this respect ceases his negligence within forty-eight hours after notice, that is the end of that affair. His offense has been condoned; he does not have any $2 to pay then, and he only has $2 to pay in case he neglects for forty-eight hours to correct his misuse and wants to have the water supplied to him again. After it is turned off, when he goes to have it supplied, then he must pay $2, but if he stops his negligence within forty-eight hours there is no right to cut it off, and then he has no $2 to pay because he only has to pay $2 to have the water restored to him after it has been cut off. The consequence is that it appears to me that the provision is not adequate to what I agree is the real emergency.

Mr. ROLLINS. I hope the Senator from Vermont will suggest an amendment which will obviate the objection he sees to the section.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The difficulty about amendments of this character which relate to provisions in their nature penal, is that I should not want to take the responsibility on the very spur of the moment of delaying the Senate to prepare an amendment which I should be willing to stand by myself. I think it would be better to let the matter be and let the gentlemen of the committee examine carefully, and when they are at leisure endeavor to get it right.

Mr. ROLLINS. Some bill of this kind is necessary.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I fear it will not do any good as it is now.

Mr. VOORHEES. I differ entirely with the Senator from New Hampshire. I do not think there is any necessity for a bill of this kind. I am not aware of how it comes before the Senate at this time, but whenever it reaches a vote, in whatever shape, I am not prepared to vote for it. I have had something of a long service in Wash.

kind. I am not aware of how it comes before the Senate at this time, but whenever it reaches a vote, in whatever shape, I am not prepared to vote for it. I have had something of a long service in Washington, and my experience has been a want of water rather than a waste of water. You may take the level of I street for instance, in the houses this city, and water does not flow in the second stories of the houses. this city, and water does not flow in the second stories of the houses. If a stranger were to come along here and listen to this discussion so strenuous in favor of cutting off water, he would think we were living on the great plains or in the deserts of Africa. I am not prepared for the purpose of saving the waste of a few drops of water to throw open the houses of this city to police inspection under any circumstances. I will not do it. On the contrary I shall be glad to vote for legislation making water plenty, and making it flow in the upper stories of the houses. stories of the houses.

This question was up at the last session, and I remember very well the impression made on me then. We have on the east side of this city a large, deep, and wide stream of water. We have on the west another; and on the south a magnificent river, with falls a few miles above which are sufficient to throw any amount of water into this city. Instead of being here legislating for the parsimonious use of water in order to have inspection go on here to see whether a few drops of water are being wasted, I would have a measure to pour abundance into the city, even if here and there a little was wasted, and even if the property-holders, the poor especially, were not compelled, as they will be under this law, to be subject to buy meters. We have had some experience about meters in this Government. They are generally matters of fraud and speculation. If this be not one of that kind it will be an exception to the general rule. I do not know how it is. know how it is whatever disposition may be made of this measure by the Senate, I wish to record my opposition and disapprobation to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I concur with all that has been said with regard to the necessity of some action upon this important subject for I believe it is the experience of all who reside here that the Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I concur with all that has been said with regard to the necessity of some action upon this important subject, for I believe it is the experience of all who reside here that the water supply is literally diminishing year by year. I notice this winter that water will not rise during the day-time to the level that it gained last year, and I am told that this cause of complaint exists generally all over the city. It is strange that, while the population does not materially increase, by some mysterious process the supply of water distributed through these pipes is constantly disappearing and diminishing. But I have very grave doubts whether the difficulty that exists can be remedied by this proposed measure. I conceive that there are several objections to the amendment proposed by the committee, any one of which ought to prove fatal.

In the first place, while a system of water-meters might do much to remedy these evils, it must be apparent to any person that it would be unjust to allow the board of commissioners of this District to become the judges as to what meters should be supplied. It would introduce an element of speculation into the affairs of this District, where such elements are already too numerous. In the next place, as the Senator from Vermont has observed, the system of visitation which this bill contemplates will be wholly inoperative because there is, after the waste has been discovered, by the terms of this bill a locus penitentiæ, a time for repentance, of forty-eight hours within which the offending user of water may turn his spigots and stop the waste and avoid the payment of any penalty. Any one can see at a glance that a provision of that kind will be entirely nugatory. It is idle, it is foolish to think of attempting to enforce a great public measure by such means as that. And in the third place what is the justice of saving that these offenders shall have the right of the state. justice of saying that these offenders shall have the right to resume their privileges upon paying $2 to the water registrar? It will enable that officer, if he is desirous of replenishing his finances, to do so with very little difficulty.

It seems to me that this bill is so ill-considered and so poorly guarded, and so open to objections which cannot be cured by any amendment so far as I can see, that the subject ought to be committed again for the purpose of seeing whether some method cannot be de-vised that will cure the evils which we all admit and all deplore.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator make any motion in that behalf?

Mr. INGALLS. I will not until the debate is over.
Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, when this bill was before the District Committee, we examined it and discussed it, and I was of the opinion then that there was in the bill itself ample power, sufficiently severe in its character, to protect the District from the waste of water, and in looking at the bill now I think my original notion of it, notwithstanding what has fallen from the lips of the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Kansas, was a correct view. The whole matter is put in the hands of the water registrar. He is to be the judge whether the party allowing water to run apparently improperly can give a satisfactory explanation, and if he do not give a satisfactory explanation to the water registrar, the water is to be satisfactory explanation to the water registrar, the water is to be turned off.

Mr. INGALLS. Right there, if the Senator will permit me, does he not understand that under this bill when notice has been served he not understand that under this bill when notice has been served on the water taker that there is a waste, he has the period of forty-eight hours within which to correct that difficulty and stop the waste, without the payment of any fine?

Mr. WHYTE. No, I do not.

Mr. INGALLS. That is my understanding of it.

Mr. WHYTE. On the contrary, it gives him forty-eight hours to go and explain to the water registrar whether he is in default or not. If he can satisfy the registrar that the pipe burst and that he sent for the plumber and the plumber was so occupied that he could not get there there he neight not to suffer the penalty of having the sent for the plumber and the plumber was so occupied that he could not get there, then he ought not to suffer the penalty of having the water turned off; but if he does not give to the water registrar a satisfactory explanation of why the water was apparently running to waste, the water registrar has it turned off, and before the man can have it turned on he pays a fine of $2. If it occurs the next day the same process is gone through with. No man will pay $2 to let the water run to waste, time after time, during a week or a month or a year. The language is very simple.

That upon the receipt of such report or of any other satisfactory evidence that water is running to waste on any premises, it shall be the duty of the water registrar forthwith to notify the owner or occupant of said premises, and if no satisfactory explanation shall be made within forty-eight hours—

Not that if the water stops running within forty-eight hours, but "if no satisfactory explanation shall be made within forty-eight hours

"It no satisfactory explanation shall be made within forty-eight hours after such notice, or upon a second report of waste in the same premises, the water shall be cut off."

It seems to me to be ample to accomplish the purpose in view. It strikes me it is satisfactory enough in that regard; and all that I would suggest to my friend the Senator from New Hampshire, who has the bill in charge in behalf of our committee, is the interlineation between lines 3 and 4, in section 1, of the words "in addition to the other regularly appointed water inspectors," so as to bring the police in no conflict with the regular water inspectors discharging police in no conflict with the regular water inspectors, so as to oring the police in no conflict with the regular water inspectors discharging their duty under the water registrar. I move to insert after the word "inspectors," in section 1, line 4, the words "in addition to the other regularly appointed water inspectors;" so that the section will read:

That the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia are hereby declared to be and made water inspectors, in addition to the other regularly appointed water inspectors; and it shall be their duty, &c.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maryland to the amendment of the Committee on the Senator from Maryland to the amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BECK. The objection to that, it occurs to me, lies in this: complaint has been made always, as now, that we did not have a sufficient Metropolitan police force to guard the city; and if its members are to be made water inspectors as well, their failure to do their duty by protecting the citizens will be accounted for more than half the time by the fact that they are inspecting the water-works or houses and places where they have now no right to be. I doubt very much whether the police of the city ought to be allowed to evade the responsibilities with which they are now charged, and which they allege they cannot perform because of their insufficient number, by imposing this duty on them, and allowing them to say they are engaged in ing this duty on them, and allowing them to say they are engaged in examining the water supply.

Mr. ROLLINS. I think the duty is imposed on them now. This only makes their acts legal. They are required, under existing regulations, to make certain reports to the District commissioners in reference to the waste of water. The object of this bill is simply to make an effort, it may be a feeble one, to stop the unreasonable waste of water in the city until a larger supply can be had. This is absolutely necessary. The supply in the city, as was stated at the last session of Congress, is some one hundred and fifty-five gallons to each individual in the city—a larger supply than any other city in the country has; but the difficulty is that in certain localities, at certain places, the water is allowed to run to waste, depriving those people who live upon a higher level of an adequate water supply. The object of the committee is to try, in some way, to remedy this difficulty. Of course a large additional supply of water cannot be had immediately. It will take time to accomplish that object. In the mean while some steps should be taken to prevent this waste. This bill may be inadequate, but I think it will do something in that direction.

Mr. HARRIS. In answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Kentneky [Mr. Beck] I desire to say that not much of the time of the Metropolitan police will be necessarily consumed in the performance of this duty. A policeman on his regular beat going on his rounds will be able to discover cases of waste of water without the abstraction of much, if any, time from his other duties.

The Committee on the District of Columbia, at the expense of very considerable labor, undertook to investigate and did investigate the whole water question. The facts are developed that there is perhaps 50 per cent. more water consumed or wasted in the cities of Washington and Georgetown than in any city in Europe or America, and yet there is a large proportion of the cities of Georgetown and Washington where the supply is wholly inadequate in many localities. ington where the supply is wholly inadequate in many localities. That the water brought to the two cities is abundant for all the necessities of the two cities is clear; and yet that it is inadequate in localities is owing to the waste of the water. It is believed by the committee that while the bill they propose to adopt is not perfect and will not be a perfect remedy for the evil, it will tend to stay waste, and just to the extent that it does stay waste will it contribute to the supply in those localities at which the supply is now inadequate. For that reason, as a temporary expedient, the committee recommend the adoption of the bill reported. If the supply of water is to be increased, it can only be done to any large extent by extending the aqueduct to the high grounds north of the city at a cost of about a million of dollars. The committee thought proper to recommend the adoption of this bill as a temporary expedient, believing, as the committee did and as I do now, that it will tend to stay waste as the committee did and as I do now, that it will tend to stay waste and relieve the necessities of those localities where the supply is inadequate. I hope the bill will be passed.

Mr. BECK. The suggestion I made relative to employing the police in this regard did not grow so much out of the fact that a very small portion of their time might necessarily be required to aid in this water inspection, as out of the apprehension that a very large portion of it might be actually used by the police in what they called water inspection. When they were found in my house or any other gentleman's house off their regular duty, the pretense would be, if they were seeking a comfortable place on a cold night, that they were watching to see if there was any waste of water where they had suspected it. That would be the excuse for passing a comfortable picht by the fire when they ought to have been at their more had suspected it. That would be the excuse for passing a comfortable night by the fire when they ought to have been at their more appropriate duties. It was because of the small number of Metropolitan police we have now that I desired to give them no further excuse to evade the performance of their legitimate duties by furnishing them with pretenses for being where they ought not to be, but where they surely will be if they can have an excuse for keeping out of danger and being comfortable when they ought to be exposed. I think we had better detach them as much as possible from duties of this character.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Whyte] to the amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 26, noes 9;

no quorum voting.

Mr. BECK. Let the amendment be read again. I wish to understand precisely what it is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 4 of section 1 of the committee's amendment, after the word "inspectors," it is proposed to insert "in addition to the other regularly appointed water inspectors."

Mr. WITHERS. I hope we shall have another vote. The amendment was not understood, I think.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will put the question again.

The question being again put, there were on a division-ayes 27,

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question recurring on the amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia as amended, it was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. ROLLINS,] to add a new section, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Sec. —. That the provisions of the preceding section shall not apply to any premises the owner or occupant of which shall procure and attach a water-meter in such manner and of such kind as shall be approved by the commissioners of the said District; and upon the attachment of such water-meter the said premises shall be charged with an annual water rent of $4, and in addition thereto shall pay for water consumed on the said premises at a rate, to be prescribed by the said commissioners, not less than one cent per one hundred gallons for the quantity consumed in excess of fifty gallons per day for each person permanently occupying said premises.

Mr. BECK. I call for a vote on that. I regard that meter business as a miserable job, and it will so prove whenever attempted.

Mr. ROLLINS. I have no special desire to press the amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to strike out the words "in such manner and of such kind as shall be approved by the commissioners of said

Mr. WHYTE. I hope that none of these propositions in regard to meters will prevail. I do not think there has been a city in the Union where the meter system has been a success.

Mr. ROLLINS. If the Senator will allow me one word, I will state my object in moving this amendment, and will then yield to him. My object in moving this amendment at the last session was to obviate objections which were raised to the bill. There was objection made on the floor of the Senate to the visitation by police officers of premises of parties here in the District of Columbia, and in order that a man might relieve himself of that burden or of the risk of such an unwelcome visitor this way was marked out, that if he did provide meters which met the approval of the commissioners of the District of Columbia and did certain other things, the provisions of the bill would not apply to his premises; but there seems to be objection to it, and I will, with the consent of the Senate, withdraw the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire is withdrawn.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 6529) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 6514) concerning settlement of boundary-lines between New York and Connecticut.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution providing that when the two Houses adjourn on Wednesday, the 22d instant, it be to meet on Wednesday, the 5th of January next; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. No. 148) granting an increase of pension to J. J. Purman;

and

A bill (S. No. 992) granting a pension to Mrs. Julia Gardner Tyler, widow of ex-President Tyler.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. EATON. I ask to be relieved from further service upon the Select Committee to examine the several branches of the Civil Service.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to excusing the Senator from Connecticut from service on the committee named? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Connecticut is excused.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 6529) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill (H. R. No. 6514) concerning settlement of boundary-lines between New York and Connecticut was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following resolution of the House of Representatives:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That when the two Houses of Congress adjourn on Wednesday, the 22d instant, it shall be to meet on Wednesday, the 5th day of January next.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I move that that resolution be referred to the usual committee, the Committee on Appropriations. The motion was agreed to.

EDUCATIONAL FUND.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour has arrived for the consideration of the unfinished business.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Is there a regular order for this morning !

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is the unfinished business which comes in at the close of the morning hour under the Anthony rule. The unfinished business is the bill to establish an educational fund.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 133) to establish an educational fund and apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to public education, and to provide for the more complete endowment and support of national colleges for the advancement of scientific and industrial edu-

Mr. TELLER. I rise to offer an amendment to this bill. I move to strike out all of section 3, after the word "fund," in the ninth line, down to and including the word "act," in the thirty-fourth line. If this amendment be adopted the bill will then require some few further amendments to carry out the idea of its authors. I make this motion in the interests of the principle upon which the bill is founded, al-though by the amendment I shall have stricken out a portion that it will be necessary to reincorporate in the bill in order to carry out the idea that I am willing myself to support.

Mr. WITHERS. Let the amendment proposed be reported from the desk

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ROLLINS in the chair.) The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed after the word "fund," in line 9 of section 3, to strike out all down to and including the word "act," in line 34, as follows:

in line 34, as follows:

And shall be invested in the bonds of the United States bearing a rate of interest not less than 4 per cent. per annum, both principal and interest payable in coin the interest on such educational fund only to be paid to said States for educational purposes as herein provided: And provided further, That for the first ten years the said apportionment of said net proceeds and the interest on said fund to and among the several States, Territories, and District of Columbia, shall be made according to the numbers of their respective population, of ten years old and upward who cannot read and write, as shown from time to time by the last preceding published census of the United States: And provided further. That one-third of the income arising from said educational fund, and which shall be apportioned to each State or Territory, shall be annually appropriated to the more complete endowment and support of colleges established, or such as may be hereafter established therein, in accordance with the aforesaid act of Congress, approved July 2 1862, until the annual income thus accruing to the said colleges in each State shall have reached the sum of $30,000, then the said amount only shall be annually appropriated to said colleges, and the whole remaining annual income of the aforementioned educational fund shall thereafter, in the manner provided in this act.

Mr. TELLER. I was saying that if this amendment should be adopted, in order to carry out the principle of the bill a portion of what I now propose to strike out should be added to the bill; but that can readily be done. I am in favor of making this appropriation upon the principle adopted by the committee; that is, as provided upon the principle adopted by the committee; that is, as provided in lines 16, 17, 18, &co., of section 3, that this fund shall be apportioned to the States according to the number of their respective population of ten years old and upward who cannot read and write, as shown from time to time by the last census; but it is not easy to amend the section without striking out the whole of that clause, and if this amendment is adopted then that part of the clause can be reincorporated by a separate motion.

The objection I have to the bill in its present form is that it pro-

The objection I have to the bill in its present form is that it proposes to take about a million of dollars (which I understand will probably be the yearly sum realized under the bill) and invest it in United States securities at 4 per cent., the proceeds to be for ten years paid over for educational purposes substantially to the late slave States. The illiteracy of the slave States is shown by the reports based upon the census of 1870 to be a little more than 45 per cent. of the population, while the illiteracy of the other States in the Union, all told, amounts, if I recollect aright, to about 6 or 7 per cent. of the population. It seems to me proper, if the Government is to make an appropriation of this kind, that the first benefit should be realized by the States having the greatest necessity for it. The total number of children in the United States between the ages of five and eighteen, as shown by reports based upon the census of five and eighteen, as shown by reports based upon the census of 1870—which, of course, is the only accurate basis on which we can proceed—is about twelve millions. There may then be said to be proceed—is about twelve millions. There may then be said to be twelve million children of the school age. I suppose it is safe to say that in the States to be benefited by this bill there are now five or six millions of children, at least five millions, who ought to have the advantages of this money. If we distribute the proceeds of this fund, which will be about $40,000 a year, we shall give for these children about seven cents apiece; a sum totally inadequate, a sum of so little importance as to make no perceptible difference in the ability of those States to educate their children.

I find by an examination of the census returns of 1870-and I believe that is the only authentic source to go to; everything else is more or less conjecture—that on an average the States to be specially benefited by this fund have themselves appropriated yearly about $1 per capita for every man, woman, and child within their borders. Some of them have done more. For instance, Arkansas has appropriated about a dollar and a half to every person in the State, Mississippi about a dollar, Louisiana something less than a dollar, Florida less than a dollar, and so on.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I should like to ask the Senator if he has gone through all the States and made a list? If he has such a list I should be glad to see it in the Record.

Mr. TELLER. I have not prepared a list in such a way that it would be entirely accurate, but I have approximated to it. For instance, I have said that Alabama had 996,000 people; there is a fraction over. I have said the money expended there was $937,000; there is a fraction over. I have got the list correct enough for practical purposes, so as to be able to say that the average is a dollar apiece, a little more in some States and a little less in others.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Cannot the Senator furnish the memorandum, even if it is only approximately correct?

Mr. TELLER. I can furnish it to the Reporter for publication if that be desired. But, Mr. President, if we are to make an appropriation that will amount to about $40,000 a year for such a vast population as inhabit the fourteen late slave States, where I have just lation as inhabit the fourteen late slave States, where I have just stated the illiteracy covers 45 per cent. of the entire population, it will practically amount to nothing at all. My object in this amendment is that the principal sum, a million dollars, shall be appropriated as soon as it is realized for the purpose of educating the people of those States. It is but fair to say when we speak of the illiteracy in those States that a large proportion of it applies to people who were recently slaves, who never had an opportunity of acquiring an education, and their children to-day who are ten years old and within the school age ought to have the advantages of this fund, and not merely the children who shall come ten years hereafter. shall be a million dollars realized from the public lands and from patent fees, I am in favor of dividing that sum to-morrow among the States, and not waiting until ten years from now. The States are suffering from an uneducated class of people to-day, and if we postpone this apportionment and give them but the interest for the next pone this apportionment and give them but the interest for the next ten years they will continue in some measure to suffer, at least so far as any national assistance goes.

I think, Mr. President, that it is unwise to attempt to establish a fund-for the future. Let the money go this year and the next year thereafter to the education of the people who need it. I do not know that the money will be properly expended. I heard it said a few moments ago when I made the suggestion that if this whole sum was appropriated, a million, it would be squandered and expended in a way not to accomplish the purpose intended. If the whole fund of not to accomplish the purpose intended. If the whole fund of a million will be expended in such a way, it is safe to say that the mere moiety of $40,000 will also go in the same way.

I yield to no man in my admiration of the public-school system of this country. I believe it is of the utmost importance that every man, woman, and child in this country should be an educated person. I have seen a statement made recently that in the last election more than two million men cast their votes who could neither read nor write, and that a million and six or seven hundred thousand of these votes were in a single section to be benefited by this bill. If there is that number of men of that kind exercising the rights of freemen, is that number of men of that kind exercising the rights of freemen, they are exercising them ignorantly and unsafely for the Republic. The children who are now ten years old or fifteen years old will grow up to exercise these rights in the same ignorance so far as any benefit can be derived from this bill. Therefore I say that the child who is ten or fifteen years old to-day, who is within the school age, ought to have the advantage of this provision at once, and not be postponed for the purpose of creating a fund that other children, ten, fifteen, or twenty years from now may have advantages which are denied to the children of to-day. If there be any principle in the bill, if there be any reason why the Government of the United States should seek to hoard this fund at a small interest, and pay the interest for this purpose, if it be right at all that we should take part in the education of children, if national aid should be furnished, then it ought to be furnished to the children of to-day, for there never will come a time in the history of this country when there will be more ignorance time in the history of this country when there will be more ignorance than there is to-day. All of the late slave States have improved upon their old method of education; all of them have school systems of some kind or some character, and it is fair to say that the percentage of illiteracy in five years will be less than it is to-day, and in ten years very much less than it is to-day. It is the evil of to-day that we ought to meet, and that is why I say that the whole million dollars should be at once appropriated to meet the emergency that now exists, and that is why I move the amendment.

Mr. President I have another objection to this portion of the bill

Mr. President, I have another objection to this portion of the bill that I have moved to strike out. It is provided-

That one-third of the income arising from said educational fund, and which shall be apportioned to each State or Territory, shall be annually appropriated to the more complete endowment and support of colleges.

I think that is unwise. I think that the first thing to be done is to give every child in this country a common-school education; and if the fund provided is not sufficient, as we know it is not even if we should appropriate the entire sum and not merely the interest, it is unwise to set apart any portion of it for collegiate purposes. I do not names to set apart any portion of it for collegiate purposes. I do not yield in my admiration of the collegiate system to any man in this country. I do not believe in the new idea and theory that has been advocated so extensively that the old classical colleges were useless. I believe in a thorough classical education for every man and every woman in the United States who has the ability to acquire it, and I would make as far as practicable all of these advantages free to every man, woman, and child in this country, regardless of color or previous condition. The State that I have the honor in part to represent has proceeded upon that theory. We started out and did many years ago. proceeded upon that theory. We started out and did many years ago, long before we became a State, with the idea that the State owed to every child in its borders an education, that the taxable property of the State was burdened with it, and it did not depend upon the ability of the parent but depended upon the will of the State. We have made it possible in that State that every child shall-have an education that would make him fit to sit in this Senate, and we have provided in addition to the common-school system that there shall be a higher grade of education for all such students as see fit to aspire to it. Therefore, I am not the enemy of the higher course of education; I believe in it and I believe men will never be cultivated, intelligent men and fit to fill the highest places in society who do not get in some measure what are called the higher branches of education; but I say it is unwise when you have a vast number of ignorant children to be educated, with very little money to be applied to the purpose, to appropriate a third of it or a tenth of it or any other proportion to collegiate purposes. First give your children a common-school education, and if they are anxious for a higher education they will find the means to acquire that education either at home or abroad.

I make these remarks in the interest of education and not as op-I make these remarks in the interest of education and not as opposed to the bill. I believe the bill as it now stands will be practically useless to the people who ought to derive the most benefit from it. I do not think that $40,000 this year and $80,000 next and $120,000 next will be felt in those communities at all; but when you take a million dollars and divide it, if $40,000 would incite them to greater efforts in behalf of education, then a million would correspondingly incite them and be of much more than corresponding benefit, and for that reason I have moved to strike out the whole of this provision, as I say, with a determination, if it shall be passed, then to move an I say, with a determination, if it shall be passed, then to move an amendment to the bill which shall carry out the idea of the bill that this money shall be divided according to illiteracy and not according

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I hope that my honorable friend from Colorado will, on reflection, and after hearing the reasons for the present framework of this bill, be willing to abandon the objection

The public lands of this country, so far as they are national property, The public lands of this country, so far as they are national property, are regarded, and I think justly regarded, by the people as an inheritance in fee-simple. I do not think the proceeds of these lands, acquired by the labors and energy of past generations as well as the present, should be exhausted and used up to serve the purposes of a single generation or a single year. I agree that there is a higher character to the public lands than that of property; that capacity to form the territory of great States and the homes of settlers and citizens is the main thing to be dealt with, and there is nothing in this bill which in the least affects the policy of the Government which devotes as to its principal use the public land to the home of American citizens; but the land is to be sold, some price is to be fixed, and it seems to me that it is not just either to the past or to the future to apply the proceeds of this vast property to the necessities of a single apply the proceeds of this vast property to the necessities of a single year or a single generation. It is true that the interest on this fund is but a small sum for the first year, but it is to increase annually and forever. It is to be $40,000 the first year, $80,000 the second, and so

Mr. President, it is also true, as my friend from Colorado says, that the sum of $40,000 is but a trifle compared with the necessities of the people of this country for their education; but it is also true that the experts, whose instincts upon a question like this are better than any reason, agree that the process provided in this bill will be enough to accomplish the purpose. Probably the highest authority who has lived in this country since the death of Horace Mann, on this precise class of questions, was the late Dr. Sears, the distinguished agent of the Peabody fund, who died during the last winter. I received from him shortly before his death a letter filled with an enthusiasm which his usual cautious and scientific habit of expression rarely indulged in, in which—I cannot quote the exact language, but very nearly—he said, "The bill will in my judgment be sure to accomplish the end." and I believe the committee who have had this subject in charge will agree with me when I say that the educators of the country, the superintendents of public schools, the State superintendents, North and South, are in substantially unanimous accord in the same opinion.

Mr. President, the common schools of the State which I represent were, within the memory of men now alive, in a very deplorable condition, and a revolution in that condition was brought about by the genius of one man, the late Horace Mann, and the one sole instrumentality by which he accomplished the marvel, the miracle of benefaction to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, was by the simple provision for annual reports of the condition of the common schools and the atfor annual reports of the condition of the common schools and the attendance of the school children. In Massachusetts the town which found itself at the bottom of the list felt a sense of disgrace, and there was some person found always in that community who set himself to redeem his town from the condition of being at the foot of the list. So it will be with the States. The State which in these annual reports—simply reports of the attendance in the schools required as the sole condition of receiving this fund—shall find itself at the bottom of the list will have some citizen who will set himself to work as an execute until that exil is remedied and that stigma removed; and the apostle until that evil is remedied and that stigma removed; and the principle of generous emulation among the States of the country, which this provision for annual reports enacts, will accomplish this

Now, my friend from Colorado thinks, and justly, that this fund, considered as a sum of money, is very small; but in my judgment, when the fund is once established in the Treasury of the United States, it will be rapidly and largely increased by private benefaction; it will be the catch-all of the benevolent of the country. Even now I think gentlemen would be surprised to learn the number of individual gifts and the extent and amount of the individual gifts made for educational purposes in this country. In the year 1873, the last year before the great depression of business, the Commissioner of Education, without any mechanism for getting accurate statistical information, merely clipping the items found in newspapers, learned that the amount of individual gifts for educational purposes in this country amounted to between $11,000,000 and $12,000,000; in 1872 it was between $8,000,000 and $9,000,000. Of course a large proportion of the gifts and devises by will to this class of charities will go to increase the national educational fund, if it is once established and wisely administered.

My friend says, also, that he objects to the provision in this bill which would divert a portion of the fund, one-third, to increase the endowment of technical schools and colleges. But one of the greatest obstacles in building up the common-school system at the South and elsewhere in this country is the want of suitable teachers.

Mr. TELLER. That is provided for in another provision.

Mr. HOAR. Not fully. The best teachers are the best educated people always. Mr. TELLER. I would call the attention of the Senator to page 6, where he will see that a sum not exceeding 50 per cent. of the amount received from the United States is set aside for the instruction of teachers in addition to the collegiate fund.

Mr. HOAR. That is allowed to the States. That is an amendment Mr. HOAR. That is allowed to the States. That is an amendment proposed in the bill; it is not in the original bill. In the discretion of the State Legislature that is permitted; it is not an absolute requirement of the bill. But I understand that a very large percentage of the pupils of these technical and agricultural colleges to-day, especially in the southern and southwestern portion of the country, become teachers; and if at any time hereafter it shall be found that become teachers; and if at any time hereafter it shall be found that an undue proportion—undue as compared with the necessity which this is intended to supply—of this fund goes in that direction, it will be for Congress, representing the public sentiment of the entire country, to make the correction.

Now, Mr. President, I know very well that it is on the individual judgment and responsibility of Senators that their official action must depend, and it is seldom even respectful to ask Senators to surrender convictions which they have formed on full, careful, and thorough consideration to any outside opinion; but still this bill may be an consideration to any outside opinion; but still this bill may be an exception to that. This is a practical question, a question of the best and most efficient mode of accomplishing a practical result, a result which my friend from Colorado has as much at heart as any man who lives, I know from my knowledge of his general way of man who lives, I know from my knowledge of his general way of thinking, and almost with entire unanimity the educators of this country who have been heard before this committee recommend this scheme, which, too, has been a subject of consideration for years, which passed one House of Congress at a former period, and the Committee on Education and Labor, after the fullest consideration of the subject, unanimously reported the bill in this form, and I submit to my friend from Colorado, it being not a question of constitutional duty, not a question of general principle, but a matter of practical detail a question of what arrangement is the most efficient to accomdetail, a question of what arrangement is the most efficient to accomplish the purpose which he and they have alike at heart, whether he will endanger the success of the entire scheme by insisting strenuously upon a mere matter of individual judgment.

Mr. TELLER. If I thought it would endanger the bill, I should not press the amendment; but the argument of the Senator proceeds upon the theory that the States to be benefited by the bill have done nothing, and that the states to be beneated by the bill have done nothing, and that the very fact that we make them a very small, insignificant donation is to incite them to action. Let me call the attention of the Senate to the amount of money that some of these States ten years ago paid for educational purposes, and every one of them has increased since.

Mr. HOAR. I made no suggestion that they did nothing.
Mr. TELLER. But there is no strength to the argument unless it is on the theory that they are without action, and now they are to be moved by the fact that we give them a donation. At least that is the way I look at it.

Mr. HOAR. If my honorable friend will permit me to interrupt him, what I said was that the stimulant of these reports would have that effect upon the State.

Mr. TELLER. The report is still there if my amendment prevails.
Mr. HOAR. I know, but that is what will operate very largely on the States that accept and carry out the scheme of the bill in the be-

Mr. TELLER. I find that Alabama in 1870 paid for school purposes $937,851; that Arkansas paid $674,662; that Delaware paid $212,712; Florida paid $147,819; Georgia paid $1,186,739. I did injustice to Louisiana when I said Louisiana paid less than a dollar per capita. Louisiana paid $1,164,000 and something more that year. Mississippi paid $768,839; North Carolina over $600,000, and South Carolina over half a million.

Mr. President, these States have already inaugurated the system; they have the methods already prepared to receive this money and to pay it out. I agree with the Senator that it is a wise thing to do. The only difference between him and me is, he says it is providing The only difference between him and me is, he says it is providing for the future generations that he is looking after, and I say I am providing for the wants of the people to-day. When he says that this system will continue, and year after year you will get a great educational fund, he is mistaken. The million dollars realized principally from the land sales will in a short time, it seems to me, cease to be represented at all in the returns of the Government. It will be but a few years till you will cease to receive any revenue from the public lands, and every year it will decrease undoubtedly from this We have pursued a course that is very unwise with reference to the public lands. We have given away millions and millions of acres for educational purposes where they did the States receiving the grants no good at all. It was wise perhaps to have given, but the gift was not guarded. Many of those States received no practical benefit from the agricultural scrip, and some of the States, like the one that I in part represent, have never had the advantages of any donation of the public lands. We are not here now clamoring for a dollar of this money. The people of Colorado will educate their children without governmental said for they are not so unfortunate as to have such a governmental aid, for they are not so unfortunate as to have such a great mass of uneducated people as some other portions of the country. Aside from the few men that were there when we took that soil from Mexico, all the people of the great Northwest read and write. Only 5 per cent. of the population of Iowa do not read and write. The Northwestern States are not complaining; but we say now there is immediate and pressing want for the use of this money in communities where the people, whether they are rich enough or not, do not believe they are rich enough to educate the children in their commubelieve they are rich enough to educate the children in their community.

Take the State of Georgia, of which we heard yesterday. Not one-fifth of the colored children of that State are in the public schools. Take the State of Mississippi. But a small proportion of her colored children have an opportunity to be educated. I say that if there is a necessity for the Government to pay out of its Treasury money that is to be devoted for the purpose of education, it ought to go to benefit the children who to-day are crying for the advantages of education, and not for the future generations that may come. I am for legislating for the immediate wants of these people, and not for those who may come years afterward, who will be in a better condition and have better opportunities to educate themselves if the States decline or refuse to educate them. Give the children of to-day an opportunity to be educated. When the money has gone out of the Treasury of the United States, let it go where it will begin to tell on the people now, and not in another generation or another decade.

Treasury of the United States, let it go where it will begin to tell on the people now, and not in another generation or another decade.

I am as much a friend of education as any man living, and I am a friend of common-school education, because there is where the great mass of men will be educated. I believe fully that when you have educated all the people of the country, and every man who votes is intelligent enough to read the Constitution, you will have less of sectional difficulties and you will have less trouble than you have to-day. I believe the man who digs in the soil digs with better courage and with more intelligence and he accomplishes more if he is an educated man: I believe that when you have educated the labor of this cated man; I believe that when you have educated the labor of this country, then you have dignified labor itself, and when the labor of this country shall be performed by skillful hands and men who have cultivated brains, then it will no longer be disreputable for men to

If you want to strengthen the foundations of the Government and build up the nation, you must educate the people everywhere. Because I believe in that doctrine, I am willing to vote for this bill, and I am willing to vote that the dollars that come from this source shall I am willing to vote that the dollars that come from this source shall go to-morrow, and the next day, and the day after, as they come, to educate this unfortunate class of people, who, without any fault on their part, whether they be black or white, have been unable to acquire the education that those in more favored sections of the land have been able to acquire. Therefore I say, let us put this money now in the hands of the authority constituted in the States for the purpose of paying out the money that they collect from their own citizens, and let them pay it over for this great purpose. If we cannot trust them with the principal, we cannot trust them with the interest. I am willing to trust them with the principal, and if they squander a dollar where they expend a dollar for the public good, I am still willing to vote for the appropriation.

squander a dollar where they expend a dollar for the public good, I am still willing to vote for the appropriation.

Mr. President, I am not only willing to vote for this bill, but I am willing to go further and to appropriate another portion of the public revenue if somebody will move an intelligent proposition in that way, for the education of that same class of people. I offer my amendment in the interest of the people who to-day need education, and not of those who shall need it ten, twenty, or thirty years from

Mr. PUGH. Mr. President, my first knowledge of the character of the bill now before the Senate was obtained from reading it yester-day; and while my sense of propriety disposes me to postpone until a later day any attempt of mine to influence the action of this body by the expression of my views and opinions, I cannot allow a bill of the importance of the one now under consideration to reach its final disposition without making my support of it stronger than by a silent

All government is corrective, and must have strength enough to be self-sustaining within the scope of its defined objects and delegated powers. The powers of a government should be measured by the capacity, intelligence, and patriotism of the people. If the people are incapable of self-government, it follows that they must be ruled by force. All repressive power in government is necessarily founded on distrust of the people. Our system of free representative local and general government is founded on the capacity, intelligence, honesty, and patriotism of the people. Trust and confidence in the ability and willingness of the people to support their government and obey and execute its laws from love and affection for their benefits, and not from fear of their punishments, is the substratum of our confederated republic. Mr. Jefferson's key-note in the formation of the republican party of 1798 was that in republics the people must be trusted. Distrust of the people is the basis of strong, centralized government. Those who question the capacity, intelligence, and patriotism of the people oppose a subdivision and distribution of governing power among the States and favor a consolidation of it in a central government. The only reliable foundation of free representative government is trust and confidence in the capacity, intelligence, and patriotism of the people. These qualities are indispensable to the qualification of the people for self-government. Patriotism must be substituted for the power of coercion in republics. Repressive power in governments has been the cause of all popular revolutions. The only immediate personal agency of the people in their government is tax-paying and voting. All else is done popular revolutions. The only immediate personal agency of the people in their government is tax-paying and voting. All else is done through trusted agents and representatives. The most invaluable right of the citizen is the right of representation, and the highest privilege and duty of the citizen is the intelligent, honest exercise of the right of suffrage. Representation is valuable, safe, and reliable in proportion to the proximity, and identity in interest, and sympathy of the representative and the constituent. And the efficiency pathy of the representative and the constituent. And the efficiency and safety of representation also depends largely upon the accountability of the representative to the constituent. And the sense and fear of the responsibility of the representative depends again upon the capacity and intelligence of the constituent to comprehend representative action and enforce accountability.

Slavery and the results of our civil war have incorporated into the voting population of the Southern States over a half million of colored people, who, without their fault, are manifestly disqualified by ignorance from exercising intelligently the right of suffrage and discharging the duties of citizenship. The institution of slavery was the only powder magazine in our political superstructure, and the friction of the effort to destroy it by contraction and of the effort to preserve it by expansion ignited the magazine, causing explosion in war and ending in the destruction of every dangerous combustible element in our political system except sectionalism. This sectionalism was engendered and developed by our late war, and its present existence is founded on distrust of the white people of the South by a majority of the whites of the North and the fear of the white people of the South of repressive and aggressive legislation by the maa majority of the whites of the North and the fear of the white people of the South of repressive and aggressive legislation by the majority section, destructive of the right of local self-government. This mutual distrust and fear are chargeable mainly to ignorance—ignorance of the real feelings and dispositions and purposes of the white people of the South, and the ignorance of the colored voter in the business of law-making and civil administration.

I emphasize the declaration, made on personal knowledge and in full view of my responsibility as a Senator, that the white people of the South have been and are comparatively united in their voting power for no object or purpose unfriendly to the rights, interests, and pursuits of any other State or section, or any other people, white or colored. They have been and are solid for self-defense, self-preservation against unfounded distrust by a majority of their fellow-countrymen of the North, and the dire evils that have and must again follow the domination of ignorance in the State governments of the trymen of the North, and the dire evils that have and must again follow the domination of ignorance in the State governments of the South. The unavoidable and unalterable results of the war have made my convictions deep and unchangeable that the highest interests and greatest safety and prosperity of the people of the South are to be found in harmonious, confiding nationality; not the nationality resulting from a centralized government, but nationality secured by fidelity to the Constitution, with all its delegations, prohibitions, and limitations of power, and to the promotion of all the great objects recited in it, as reasons for the formation of our indissoluble Union of indestructible States.

The Senate agreed yesterday to take the vote on this bill to-day at four o'clock, and this leaves me no time, nor is it necessary, to go into the details of the bill or to discuss the self-evident proposition that the details of the bill or to discuss the self-evident proposition that the safety, success, and perpetuity of our free institutions depend upon the educated capacity of the masses of our people to understand the privileges and discharge the duties of citizenship. No legislation within the range of the constitutional power of Congress can be more uniformly beneficial than that proposed by this bill in strengthening the basis of American institutions, in freeing the masses from sectional distrust, sectional jealousies and rivalries, and sectional criminations and recriminations, and in raising the people to a higher plane, where they can see and understand each other and be above the arts and appliances of the demagogue and mischiefmaker, and where they can cultivate sectional pacification and harmonious union and co-operate as friends and fellow-citizens in carrying on the great work of exhibiting to the world the highest perfection of free government and Christian civilization.

Mr. GARLAND. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. BURNSIDE] who has charge of the bill to one feature of it. In line 34 of section 3 the language is:

Be appropriated by each State and Territory, including the District of Colum-

Be appropriated by each State and Territory, including the District of Columbia, to the free education of all its children between the ages of six and sixteen

The frame-work of the bill otherwise contemplates the using of this fund under the State laws, if the State has a free-school system.

In the State of Arkansas, under the constitutional provision, the school age ranges from six to twenty-one years, and I find that the school age is different in different States. This clause in the bill limits the distribution of the fund to States providing schools for the ages ranging between six and sixteen years. I think if the Senator who has charge of the bill will consider it he will see that it would be proper to put an amendment into the bill to make it con-form to the requirements of the different States' laws as to the ages of the persons who are to receive the benefit of the free-school system in the States, because where the ages range from six to twenty-one years, as in the State of Arkansas, there are five years for which years, as in the State of Arkansas, there are live years for which they would be cut out under the operation of this clause of the third section. I will call the attention of the Senator to this point, that he may consider it before the bill is finally acted upon.

Mr. BURNSIDE. The apportionment is to be made upon data taken from the last census of the United States, so that I cannot see that any injustice would be done to any one State if the fund be apportioned in the manner described in the bill.

Mr. GARLAND. The idea, to make myself definitely understood, is that looking at the frame-work of the bill it contemplates no distribution of this fund except as specified in the bill under the laws of the different States that have a free-school system.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that of course it is necessary to have the returns uniform, or at least include whatever the Government actually requires.

Mr. GARLAND. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. They may add as much more to it as they have a mind to, but it is necessary to have an enumeration of children on which the apportionment proceeds, within certain fixed ages in all the States, so that the bill had better be left as it is, which secures those things; and then to meet the Senator's point add a proviso that if the school system in any State includes a provision for children beyond these specified ages the appropriation of the fund to these as well as the others shall be deemed a compliance with the provisions of this bill—others shall be deemed a compliance with the provisions of this bill—something of that kind.

Mr. GARLAND. Very likely that would meet the point.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Let me say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I can see no injustice in distributing this fund in accordance with the terms of the bill, and then allow the State to use it—

Mr. HOAR. I do not think the Senator from Rhode Island quite sees the force of the point of the Senator from Arkansas. The condition of the bill is that the State forfeits its right to the fund unless it has appropriated it to children between the ages of six and sixteen.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I understand it perfectly, and perhaps some amendment may be necessary to cover the case stated by the Senator from ment may be necessary to cover the case stated by the Senator from

Mr. GARLAND. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island to the proposition that the bill may be perfected before its final disposition.

Mr. BURNSIDE. As far as I am concerned I have no objection to add some clause covering that point.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, I will make a few remarks on the bill as it now stands before the Senate. When I first heard read the Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, I will make a few remarks on the bill as it now stands before the Senate. When I first heard read the amendment that is pending, offered by the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. Teller,] I was disposed to favor it, under the weighty influence of that argument, which is always powerful, that it is to relieve the present pressing necessity; but when I come to look at the frame of this bill in connection with what I know in reference to the free-sheel everyway of the different States and as widen the feat that this school systems of the different States, and consider the fact that this bill has been before the Senate now a good long time and has been before the committee and matured there after a long and patient inthe bill stand as it is, because this is an experiment at best, and we had better test such things slowly and by degrees and see how this system will work. If after it has been tested, if after it has operated awhile, we see our way clearly, then we can dispose of this fund absolutely without making it a fund simply to raise interest which is to be devoted annually to the benefit of these schools. I think, on reflection, the bill is better in that respect than it would be if amended as proposed by the Senator from Colorado.

The system of adding converged by the Colorado.

The system of aiding common schools by the Government of the United States is thoroughly ingrafted by every conceivable plan of legislation in the proceedings of this Government, even antedating the Constitution itself. From that splendid and magnificent opinion delivered by Judge Campbell in the case Cooper rs. Robinson, in 18 Howard, where all this matter was reviewed, going back to the ordinance of 1787, down through various cases till the late one in 5 Otto's Reports, which was a case that originated upon the sixteenth section grant to the State of Wisconsin when she came into the Union, there never has been a doubt of the power of the Government to aid, to foster, to do all that it could for the system of common schools. Besides, we have legislative precedents without number. The Territories of Colorado, Washington, Montana, Wyoming, Dakota, and several others that I do not now call to mind, received not only the sixteenth section, but the thirty-sixth section, as will be seen in the Revised Statutes, sections 1946 and 1947. Congress has granted lands to the States for internal improvements, for public buildings, to railroad companies, and certainly there is no longer any doubt as to the power of the Government of the United States that owns these lands for the benefit of the people at last, through Congress, to appropriate them directly, or the proceeds of them, as this bill proposes to do, for the highest of all objects, the education of its citizens. It is too late in the day for us now to undertake to speak not of the benefits but of the absolute necessity of education. That has been so thoroughly done by other gentlemen who have preceded me that I shall not occupy the time of the Senate upon that point. We have the Government appropriating money for exhibitions at home and abroad, all of which I have indorsed when such questions have come before the Senate since I have been a member of it, all of which I have indorsed before as a citizen of the Government. When clause 2 of section 3 of article 4 of the Constitution says that "the clause 2 of section 3 of article 4 of the Constitution says that "the Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States," as was so well argued yesterday by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] it seems to me the question is at tor from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.] it seems to me the question is at an end, and particularly when for many years, as far back as the fourteenth Peters, in the case of the United States vs. Gratiot, the Supreme Court said that the word "territory" in that section of the Constitution meant nothing more than the word "lands." So we have the power in the Constitution, we have judicial decision, and we have the precedent of legislation.

From the act of 1862, which was referred to by the Senator from Vermont yesterday, sprang up some of the best institutions of learning in the country. The very best that we have ever had in my State, the Industrial University at Fayetteville, which is now an ornament not only to that State but to the country, owes its birth, and in great part its growth as well, to the act of 1862. This, Mr. President, is but another step forward, though small it may be year by year, to aid the States in this noblest of enterprises. As stated by the Senator from Colorado, the State of Arkansas lays a tax; it is a liberal tax in her impoverished condition, and we have a very good and promising system of free schools under the management of a most competent and acceptable superintendent of public education. This is a great help acceptable superintendent of public education. This is a great help to that State, struggling in her poverty, and it must necessarily be a great help to other States situated as she is situated, and there is a number of them.

I hope, Mr. President, the bill will pass, nearly, so far as I have examined it, as it is now presented to the Senate.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President—

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Texas permit me to offer an amendment to cover the point suggested by the Senator from Arkansas? I do not propose to address the Senate.

Mr. MAXEY. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I propose to add at the end of the ninth section—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest to the Senator that there is one amendment pending.

Mr. HOAR. This will be received by unanimous consent by the committee, I think.

committee, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection the amendment will be received.

Mr. HOAR. I propose to add at the end of the ninth section these words, and I ask the Senator from Arkansas to give me his attention:

Provided. That if the public schools in any State admit children not within the ages herein specified, such States shall not be deemed to have failed to comply with the conditions of this act by reason that such children share in the benefits thereof.

Mr. GARLAND. That, I think, will meet my view, with the addition, after the word "children," of the words "of different ages."

Mr. HOAR. It reads "children not within the ages herein specified."

"Of different ages;" that language I believe would make it plain. That, however, is a mere verbal change.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the committee to accept the amendment.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that the amendments of the committee have not yet been acted upon.
Mr. BURNSIDE. This amendment can be received by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This amendment may be considered by the unanimous consent of the Senate. The Chair hears no objection to the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be reported again. The amendment of Mr. HOAR was read. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I ask leave to modify my amendment in such a way that it shall present the simple question whether we will pay the interest or the principal to the States. In section 3, line 9, after the word "fund," I propose to strike out all down to and including the word "provided," in line 15, as follows:

And shall be invested in the bonds of the United States bearing a rate of interest not less than 4 per cent. per annum, both principal and interest payable in coin, the interest on such educational fund only to be paid to said States for educational purposes as herein provided.

And in line 16, after the word "said," to strike out the words "net proceeds and the interest on said;" so as to read:

That for the first ten years the said apportionment of said fund to and among the everal States, Territories, and District of Columbia, shall be made, &c.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President—— Mr. MORRILL. If that is now to be voted on, I desire to say a recognized.

Mr. BAILEY. I will yield the floor. First, however, by request of the committee, in lieu of the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, I move to strike out lines 10, 11, and 12, in the following words:

And shall be invested in the bonds of the United States bearing a rate of interest not less than 4 per cent. per annum, both principal and interest payable in coin; perfect the text of their bill I have no objection, and then let the question come on my amendment.

And entered upon the books of the Treasury to the credit of the fund, and bearing interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum.

Mr. BAILEY. I have no objection to that course. I will move to perfect the text as indicated in my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That motion will be in order. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. BAILEY] to perfect the text of the bill, as has just been reported.

Mr. TELLER. It is proper enough.

Mr. BAILEY. The only change that that makes is this: the bill, as reported by the committee, directs that the money shall be invested in the bonds of the United States bearing a rate of interest of not less than 4 per cent. per annum, which would force the Government to go into the markets of the country for the purpose of buying those bonds. Instead of that the committee desire that the money shall lie less than 4 per cent. per annum, which would force the Government to go into the markets of the country for the purpose of buying those bonds. Instead of that the committee desire that the money shall lie in the Treasury and be passed to the credit of this fund, the Government itself paying that rate of interest, 4 per cent.

Mr. EATON. Only a word, sir. There are very many men in the United States who believe that we ought not to pay a larger amount of interest upon any public obligation than 3 per cent. I cannot myself vote for this proposition. I do not think the rate of interest should exceed 3 per cent. I will not say whether I am in favor of the bill at all—I am not discussing that—but I would not put an obligation upon the people of the United States greater than 3 per cent. under any circumstances; it ought not to be. The credit of the United States is such that it can borrow to-day a thousand million dollars at 3 per cent. Therefore I would make no inscription of 4 per cent. upon our public revenue.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I desire to submit a very few remarks upon this bill, and not in any spirit of hostile criticism, because with the general intent and spirit of the bill I am fully in accord. There are certain features of the bill, however, to which I cannot give my consent. For the general principle of free education I have always contended. In a public address to the people of my State before my election to the Senate I did in the most emphatic and in the broadest terms declare that universal suffrage must be supplemented by universal education. I believe to-day that universal education is the only instrumentality that can exorcise the evils that attend upon free suffrage.

But Mr. President, there is one feature of the bill to which I object.

But, Mr. President, there is one feature of the bill to which I object. I do not believe that the education of the people should be taken away from the States. I do not believe under the Constitution that the General Government should directly or indirectly take charge of the system of educating the people. I am no hypercritical stickler for State rights; on the other hand, I believe that there has been too much fine-spun, hair-splitting theory in that regard; but there is a line of demarkation between the powers of the National Government and of the State governments. A year ago, I believe, we had it from very high authority in the State of Ohio, no less a person than the President of the United States, that the time had come when the National Government must take charge of the system of universal and free education. I do not charge that the framers of this bill intended to put this system of education under the control of the National Government, yet there are features of the bill that look in that direction and which I cannot support. I call the attention of the Senate to the sixth section of the bill:

On or before the 1st day of September, in each year, the Commissioner of Education, under direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury, as to each State, Territory, and District, whether it is entitled to receive its share of the apportionment under this act, and the amount of such share, which shall thereupon be entitled to receive the same. If the Commissioner shall withhold a certificate from either, its share of such apportionment shall be kept separate in the Treasury until the close of the next session of Congress, in order that it may, if it see fit, appeal to Congress from the determination of the Commissioner. If Congress shall not, at its next session, direct such share to be paid, it shall be added to the general educational fund.

In section 7 provision is made that whenever a State or Terri-these lands to public education. But that is not enough for the gentlemen who framed this bill. The Commissioner of Education, in addition to that, may, if he sees proper, withhold from any State or Territory its distributive share of this fund. Mr. President, I am opposed to giving any such power to a subordinate officer of this Government. When a State of this Union through its highest legislative authority solemnly declares that it accepts this act of Congress and its provisions and intends to appropriate the money donated to it according to this law, I am opposed to requiring in addition that a subordinate officer of this Government shall have the power then to withhold, if he sees proper, the distributive share of that State.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL. Suppose the State were to misapply the fund bestowed by this act and devote it to the building of a railroad, would be a supposed to the building of a railroad, would be a supposed to the building of a railroad would be a supposed to the supposed to not the Senator from Missouri allow the power to be exerted that on a simple report of the fact the further proceeds of the fund should be withheld until that was restored?

withheld until that was restored?

Mr. VEST. Under my idea of the theory of this Government the Congress of the United States would be the proper tribunal to interfere with a sovereign State in any such contingency.

Mr. BAILEY. Allow me to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that the provision of the bill is that, if the Commissioner shall withhold a certificate from a State "its share of such apportionment shall be kept separate in the Treasury until the close of the next session of Congress, in order that it may, if it see fit, appeal to Congress from the determination of the Commissioner." So that the Commissioner's conduct is to be revised by Congress itself. that the Commissioner's conduct is to be revised by Congress itself. His action is not final.

His action is not final.

Mr. VEST. I understand the terms of the bill, but I am opposed to giving any subordinate the right to withhold this money at all. The States of this Union have the power, as I understand the Constitution, to absolutely control the system of public education. I do not know whether it is the design of any considerable number of public men in this country to give the power to control a general system of education to the General Government. I know that some description that idea and I know that there are gentlemen of influence and the system of education to the system of education to the system. system of education to the General Government. I know that some do entertain that idea, and I know that there are gentlemen of influence who advocate it. For one I am opposed to it. The President-elect of the United States, General Garfield, in his letter of acceptance declares that this power resides with the States; not with the General Government, but with the States. To say that a State is not to be trusted with the education of its own children, and that a subordinate officer of the United States shall have the right, if he sees proper, to withhold for a day or for an hour the distributive share of that State to a great hourty is a proposition to which I shall never accede. The withhold for a day or for an nour the distributive snare of that state to a great bounty, is a proposition to which I shall never accede. The States are the best guardians of the education of their children. The Constitution leaves that power to the States. I will never by implication, directly or indirectly, or in any way, accede to the proposition that the States are not competent, being directly interested, to exercise that power better than any other tribunal. But that is not all of it, sir. The most objectionable feature of this bill is section 9.

EX-PRESIDENT GRANT.

Mr. EDMUNDS. With the permission of my friend from Missouri, as the ex-President of the United States is on the floor of the Senate and I have no doubt, after his long absence from the country, many Senators would be glad to pay their respects to him, I move that the Senate take a recess for ten minutes.

The motion was agreed to; and at the expiration of the recess (at three o'clock and eight minutes p. m.) the Senate reassembled. In the interim Senators generally paid their respects to ex-President

U. S. Grant.

EDUCATIONAL FUND. .

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 133) to establish an educational fund and apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to public education, and to provide for the more complete endowment and support of national colleges for the advancement of scientific and industrial education, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. Balley to strike out lines 10, 11, and 12 of section 3, and to insert "and entered upon the books of the Treasury to the credit of the fund and bearing interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum."

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Rollins in the chair.) The Senator from Missouri [Mr. Vest] is entitled to the floor on the pending question.

Mr. VEST. As I was proceeding to say, Mr. President, the most objectionable section of this bill is the ninth section, which provides:

objectionable section of this bill is the ninth section, which provides:

That to entitle any State. Territory, or the District of Columbia to the benefits of this act, and undertaking that the funds provided by the same, whenever paid over to it as above provided, shall be faithfully applied to the free education of all its children between the ages of six and through the provided of the colleges as have been, or may be hereafter, established in accordance with the aforesaid net of Congress approved July 2, 1862, and as provided for in this act. The distributive share of the District of Columbia shall, from time to time, be paid over to the commission of said District created by act of Congress approved June 20, 1874, entitled, &c.

The different States are required, in the first place, by an act of their Legislatures, to declare that they accept the provisions of this act, and undertaking that the first place, by an act of the provided by the same, whenever paid over to the commission of said State, Territory, or District, and the amounts appropriated by the Legislature, or otherwise received for the purpose of maintained in each of the several number of months of the year, the actual daily attendance, and the amounts appropriated by the Legislature, or otherwise received for the purpose of maintained in each of the several school districts or divisions of said State, Territory, or District, and the amounts appropriated by the Legislature, or otherwise received for the purpose of maintained in each of the several school districts or divisions of said State, Territory, or District, and the amounts appropriated by the Legislature, or otherwise received for the purpose of the purposes herein required, the funds, or any part thereof, received under the purposes herein required, the funds, or any part thereof, received under the

I should like to ask the friends of this measure why it is that the National Government, through its Commissioner of Education, is to inquire into the appropriations made by the Legislature of a sover-What has the General Government to do with the acts eign State? What has the General Government to do with the acts of the Legislatures of the respective States in regard to appropriations for a system of education? What business is it of the General Government whether the Legislature of the State of Missouri gives $100,000 or $100,000,000 for education? This provision does not affect the fund created by this bill. Why is this power given to an officer of the Federal Government? Why is this system of surveillance adopted or attempted to be adopted by this legislation? If the Commissioner of Education in his sovereign judgment thinks this act has not been complied with he immediately stops the appropriation of not been complied with he immediately stops the appropriation of this bounty and withholds the distributive share to be given under this act. Sir, I do not believe that any such power should be given to a subordinate officer of the Government of the United States. Let Congress exercise the power of taking away this bounty if it sees proper to do so, but let it not be given to the discretion of any subordinate officer to stop the payment of the distributive share of any State because he thinks this act has been violated.

Mr. President, I do not desire to make any far-fetched supposition an instrument of opposition to this bill, because I reiterate that with its general object I am in full accord; but I suppose that in this day and in this Government things have been done that far exceeded what the imagination ever fancied. Suppose the Commissioner of Education should take it into his judgment that a State had violated this act by having separate schools for the two races in this country. act by having separate schools for the two races in this country. Suppose that, as in my State, separate schools are established for the white and the black races. This bill provides for general public schools for children within certain ages. The Commissioner, finding that that method of separate schools has been adopted by a State, says to the State, "In my judgment you are not applying this fund according to the spirit and intent of the act of Congress, and I shall according to the spirit and intent of the act of Congress, and I shall therefore not pay you over your distributive share under the act." Where is the limit to his discretion? Where is there in this bill any term used which does anything else except to give to his unlimited and sovereign will and pleasure the power to dispose of the distributive share of each State as he pleases? As a matter of course, we have been told that no such thing has ever been done. Sir, the best preservation of constitutional liberty is to resist the giving of such power. "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," to use that much-

I am opposed to this bill not so much for what is in the bill itself as for what it seems to indicate in the future. If we indirectly admit the principle that the General Government must control the education of the children of the States, if we say that a State shall not be trusted but that a subordinate of the General Government is to say whether a trust fund is properly appropriated by a State or not, there is but one step farther, and that is by act of Congress to declare that the National Government shall control this whole system and not the States. My construction of the Constitution is alien declare that the National Government shall control this whole system and not the States. My construction of the Constitution is alien to and at war with any such idea. I may be wrong. Every sympathy I have under heaven is with the people most to be benefited by this act, as is claimed upon this floor. The Southern States, impoverished by war, need the bounty of the General Government for the purpose of educating their children. I know no personal sacrifice that I would not make for them; but my convictions are against the tenor and spirit of this legislation. I do not so construct the Constitution. I may'be mistaken, but, feeling as I do, I must vote against the bill in its present form.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Mr. President, in relation to the remark made by the Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. EATON,] that he wished to reduce the interest from 4 per cent. to 3 per cent. on these bonds, I simply desire to say that ordinarily I should concur with the Senator that there is no necessity in my judgment hereafter for this Government to pay more than 3 per cent. upon its funded debt; but I do not think that principle ought to be applied to the bonds in this case. The interest on these bonds is to be appropriated for the benefit of the people. It is the people's money; the people get it; and they get it in the best form possible, in the shape of an education. I think, therefore, it is no hardship upon the people to say that they shall pay 4 per cent. when the people receive that 4 per cent. back in the cause of education. I would not only vote for 4 per cent., but I confess I would vote for a higher rate of interest. I should like it better if the rate were higher, because I should like to see the fund increased. My chief objection to this hill is that after all the fund increased. My rate were higher, because I should like to see the fund increased. My rate were higher, because I should like to see the fund increased. My chief objection to this bill is that, after all, the fund it raises for educational purposes is too small, and I cannot vote for any proposition that would lessen it. I would vote for any reasonable proposition that would increase it. So much for that branch.

Then, in relation to the point made by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. Vest.,] I differ in toto cwlo from that honorable Senator on all the points he has raised. It seems to me that so far from this bill being subject to the criticism which he has visited upon it, exactly the contrary is true. The General Government does not interfere in the slightest degree with the right of the States to control education in their respective limits, as stated by the President-elect in his letter of acceptance, and to which the Senator has called our attention. It not only does not interfere with that right of the State, but it does seem to me it recognizes that right and appropriates this general fund simply as an aid to the States in this work which is to be carried on by the States. It does not interfere in the slightest degree with the regulations that shall be established by the States upon this subject. But upon the point of which he speaks, that the Government reserves the right to inquire whether this fund has or has not been misanulied. the right to inquire whether this fund has or has not been misapplied. I ask is not that a right that belongs to all donors, all persons who create a trust fund for any purpose? The General Government owns this money—the proceeds of the public lands and the fees of the Patent Office. It belongs to the General Government. The General create a trust fund for any purpose? The General Government owns this money—the proceeds of the public lands and the fees of the Patent Office. It belongs to the General Government. The General Government proposes to distribute this money to the States. Has not the Government that distributes the money a right to say on what terms it will distribute it? Was it ever heard of that the Government which has a right to give the fund has no right to say on what terms it will give the fund? It is not only the right of the General Government to prescribe the terms on which it will give the fund, but the General Government is under obligation, in my judgment, to see to it that the fund is not misapplied. Can it be possible that the Government should be moved to give this money to the States for educational purposes and then say that the Government shall not have the right to see to it that the money is applied for the purposes for which it is given? Do you call that interfering with the rights of the States? Sir, if the General Government were not to see to it that the fund was applied in the manner prescribed, and to accomplish the purposes intended, in my judgment the Government would be derelict. Why prescribe terms at all if the Government would be derelict. Why prescribe terms at all if the Government is to stand idly by and see those terms disregarded by the States?

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Yes, sir.

Mr. PEST. Does the Senator hold that the National Government has the right to inquire what appropriations are made by a State Legislature for public schools and that that ought to affect this fund?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. The object for which that inquiry is made in this bill is perfectly legitimate, and the Government does have a right, in my judgment, to make it. The object for which that inquiry prescribed in this bill is not to authorize the General Government to interfere with the right of the State in the management of its own schools. The General Governm taken; if Virginia and Georgia and Connecticut are not the owners of this property and the Federal Government a trustee for the States?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I do not propose to go into that discussion.

My good friend, the Senator from Connecticut, I think is refining overmuch. The public territory was ceded by those States to the General Consequent as I understand. Of course the General Government. much. The public territory was ceded by those States to the General Government, as I understand. Of course the General Government holds all power in trust for the people. Under our system of government there is not a power on earth in the Government that is not in the Government as a trust for the people. I admit that. That is the general proposition necessarily resulting from the idea that in this country all government is founded in the consent of the people and derives its authority from the consent of the government. That is all true; but nevertheless the Government owns the property when it is ceded by a State to the Government to be used properly and I say it. ceded by a State to the Government to be used properly, and I say it is being used properly when we distribute it to the States for the high purpose of education. I do not think it is any violation of the trust on the part of the Government to give the proceeds of these lands to the States for the purposes of education.

But my friend's idea is that the Government is interfering with the States because the Government, in the first place, prescribes the terms on which the States shall be entitled to share in this fund, and then on which the States shall be entitled to share in this fund, and then because the Government makes inquiry to obtain the information to enable the Government to determine whether the States have complied and are complying with the terms of the gift. I think it is legitimate; I think, with all due deference to my friend from Missouri, it is right and proper that the Government should put these safeguards around this gift. No State, I insist, ought to desire to receive this fund except on the terms prescribed, and no State having received this fund on the terms prescribed ought to be presumed willing under any circumstances to missamly it; but should a State willing under any circumstances to missamly it; but should a State willreceived this fund on the terms prescribed ought to be presumed willing under any circumstances to misapply it; but should a State willingly misapply the fund, certainly the State ought not to complain if the General Government inquires into the fact. The State ought to be willing to be correct on this point. It does not interfere with its sovereignty in the slightest degree.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me, on the point about which he is speaking, to recall to his recollection the fact that in all the old grants to the States when they came into the Union, of public lands for the uses of their roads and canals, the acts required of public lands for the uses of their roads and canals, the acts required in terms almost identical with these that they should appply them so and so, that they should make a report, and if it appeared to the Secretary of the Treasury that they had not faithfully applied them

Secretary of the Treasury that they had not faithfully applied them that the payments should stop?

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Certainly; but I do not intend to go into the discussion. I suppose the Senate is familiar with that history. I simply desire to say, with the greatest kindness to my friend from Missouri, for whom I entertain the highest feelings of friendship, that I cannot sit by and not enter my protest against the doctrine he has advanced as applicable to this bill. I think this bill is legitimate; I think it is altogether constitutional; I think it does not interfere in the slightest degree with the sovereignty or reserved right of any the slightest degree with the sovereignty or reserved right of any State. I think the State that receives this fund ought to be willing to comply with the terms of the bill, and a State that is not willing to comply with the terms of the gift ought not to receive the gift. That is my judgment about it.

I did not rise, however, for the purpose of entering into this discussion. I thank the Senator from Vermont for the suggestion he has made. It is true; it is correct; and I do not know any better appropriation that can be made of this fund than that proposed by this bill. As I said before, my chief objection to it is that it is so small, but I hope it will be the entering-wedge and the beginning of better things in the future.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President as a member of the Compiler.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Education and Labor I concurred with that committee in reporting this bill, and I will say that if I had believed that there was one word in the bill which would interfere with the reserved rights of the States I should never have agreed to its report. I do not believe that; but I do believe that where the United States of its own volition grants to the States a certain portion of the public treasure, in trust for the use of common schools, the United States have the right to know that that fund is appropriated in the mode and manner prescribed by the act of Congress; that it is a right which all trustees always have to see that a trust fund goes in the direction in which it was designed to go. So far as that is concerned, I have nothing further to say.

I do not propose to go into an elaborate discussion of this question. The able and exhaustive argument of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] yesterday to my mind is conclusive, and I do not care to repeat that argument. I have only to say that since I have been a member of the Senate the same question was once before presented on a bill submitted to us, and I on that occasion made an argument in favor of the bill, presenting elaborately my reasons therefor. Upon that argument I stand to-day. My object now only is to present some especial reasons why I support this bill.

Whether we will or not, the colored people are to-day citizens. If it be true, and it is true, that the perpetuity of free government depends upon the virtue and intelligence of the people, then common sense will tell any man that the more enlightened, the more virtuous you make those who enter into the body-politic the more certain you sense will tell any man that the more enlightened, the more virtuous you make those who enter into the body-politic the more certain you are of the perpetuation of free institutions. These colored people have become by the Constitution and the laws of our country a part and parcel of the body-politic. They were but a few years ago slaves. They are mainly in the portion of the country where I live. It is the interest of the southern people that this colored population should be educated. They are among us; they are entitled to vote; they are entitled to hold office; they are entitled to sit upon juries; they are entitled to be appointed executors, administrators, and guardians; they are entitled to any official political position that a white man is entitled to; and hence it is of the utmost importance to us and to the perpetuity of our institutions that these people should become educated. Coming out of the war as they did without property, what they now own they have had to acquire by their own exertions. They are necessarily poor. Their children have to be educated. In the State in which I live by the terms of the constitution—and similar provisions are in the constitutions of all the Southern States—they are entitled to the same common-school education that the white are entitled to the same common-school education that the white child is entitled to.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I wish to ask my friend from Texas a ques-Mr. MAXEY. I did not intend to make an elaborate speech, and would prefer to be allowed to conclude what I have to say.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Only a word. I wish to know for information what amount of money the States are going to obtain annually under this bill?

under this bill?

Mr. MAXEY. The Senator from Florida asks a question the answer to which could be very much more certainly obtained from the Commissioner of the General Land Office than myself.

Now, Mr. President, as I stated, these people came out of the war without property, their children under the constitutions of the Southern States are entitled, like the white children, to be educated. The burden of educating those children falls upon the whites. The white men of the South came out of the war deprived of their property. We were impoverished by the war, and what little of property was left there was left in the hands of the white people, and the burden of educating both white and black has devolved upon the white people in the southern section of the country. These people were made citizens by the act of this Federal Government, and it is a matter of common justice, it is a matter of common honesty and fair dealing, in my judgment, for the Federal Government to aid in their education, to aid the States which are now educating them.

So far as the question of constitutionality is concerned, I had not

So far as the question of constitutionality is concerned, I had not supposed, at this late day, that that question could be raised. The statutes of our country bristle all over with legislative precedents, running even back into the last century, running back to the annexation of the Territory of Louisiana. The power of Congress is too firmly established by precedents to be now questioned. All the States wherein the United States did own vacant public domain, or does own it now, and all the Territories have benefited by an appropriation by Congress of a portion of that vacant public domain for common-school purposes. The principle is settled there. If it be true that out of the common treasure the vacant public domain belonging to the United States could be given to a particular State or Territory because it happened to lie within the limits of that State or Territory, I ask if that principle does not authorize Congress to take the proceeds of this vacant public domain and distribute them among all the States which constitute the Union, for which we are the trustees? Sir, the constitutional argument falls—falls upon principle as well as upon precedent. as well as upon precedent.

In my own State, when we came into this Union, we had a princely public domain. The constitution of the republic of Texas was modeled after the Constitution of the United States, and the wise men who framed that constitution set apart sacredly a large portion of the who framed that constitution set apart sacredly a large portion of the vacant public domain for common-school purposes, and, as years rolled by, this fund has been added to and but a short time ago, at the last Legislature, I believe, a vast amount of additional public domain was added to the fund for common-school purposes by the State of Texas. Without taxing anybody but ourselves we have not only provided for common schools to the extent of our ability, but we have provided for a university, and that university has now, I believe, three million acres of public land set apart for its establishment. We have taken the small amount which was given by the United States for an agricultural college, and we have not only esment. We have taken the small amount which was given by the United States for an agricultural college, and we have not only established an agricultural college for the education of the whites, but we have bought the ground for a branch agricultural college where the colored boys are educated the same as the whites, and we have the colored boys are educated the same as the whites, and we have established normal schools for the purpose of educating teachers, and we have established a colored normal school for the education of colored teachers to teach the colored people.

Sir, when you come to talk about how those people are provided for and protected, you should know that they are provided for and protected by those among whom they were reared, and better than by anybody else; but we are not able to do it to the full extent we would like to do it, and therefore it is that we come forward in this bill and ask the Government to aid us in doing that which we believe is just and right, and which we ourselves to the extent of our ability are trying to do.

I shall vote for the bill cheerfully. A State-rights man to the very core, I shall vote for it, because there is not in the bill anywhere a violation of any Stateright. It was guarded by gentlemen who are as strongly in favor of the reserved rights of the States as the Senator from Missouri or anybody else. I shall vote for it, because I believe it does not conflict with but does aid the States in doing a just and a wise thing. I would go back even further; I would go back to the very convention that framed the Constitution, and you will find that under the clause giving exclusive legislation to Congress over the ten miles square it was contended in the convention that Congress ten miles square it was contended in the convention that Cohgress had power to establish a university at the seat of Government. The inaugural address of General Washington, the writings of Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, and all the great lights of this country, without a single exception, have favored the dissemination of intelligence among the people, because underlying that as the corner-stone of free institutions is the virtue and intelligence of the people, and the more we improve that the better for the country; and there could be no better appropriation than the one which this bill provides for. I heartily agree with what was said so well by the Senator from Georheartily agree with what was said so well by the Senator from Georgia. I am willing to have this rate of interest 4 per cent., and I would say even more than that, if need be, because it is money wisely and well distributed, for the grandest of all purposes, the education of the people.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, at the last session of Congress I gave notice of an amendment to this bill, which I will offer when it shall be in order. The amendment I will now read, however, for the information of the Senate. In line 31 of section 3, after the word

"colleges," I propose to insert:

And said last-mentioned act of Congress is hereby amended so as to require each State and Territory to establish in said colleges schools for the instruction of females in such branches of technical education as are suitable to their sex.

My own experience, Mr. President, as to the operation of this law of 1862 in the State of Alabama satisfies me that under the construction which is placed upon the statute by those who have charge of schools an unjust discrimination is made against women; that the benefits of this very wise and excellent system of law have been withheld in consequence of a misconstruction and misapprehension perhaps on the part of those having charge of some of the schools of the real purpose of the original endowment. I call the attention of the Senate to the fourth section of the act of 1862, which defines the powers and duties of those who have charge of these schools:

That all moneys derived from the sale of the lands aforesaid by the States to which the lands are apportioned, and from the sales of land scrip hereinbefore provided for, shall be invested in stocks of the United States, or of the States, or some other safe stocks, yielding not less than 5 per cent. upon the par value of said stocks; and that the moneys so invested shall constitute a perpetual fund, the capital of which shall remain forever undiminished, (except so far as may be provided in section 5 of this act,) and the interest of which shall be inviolably appropriated, by each State which may take and claim the benefit of this act, to the endowment, support, and maintenance of at least one college where the leading object shall be, without excluding other scientific and classical studies, and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts, in such manner as the Legislatures of the States may respectively prescribe, in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions in life.

The framer of that law evidently had not in his mind any reference

The framer of that law evidently had not in his mind any reference to the education of women, because it speaks of professional pursuits, in which the women of this country do not largely enter; it speaks of requiring that the schools shall also be conducted in reference to the teaching of military tactics, which, of course, has no application

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator allow me a word? I wish to say to him that the college in my State, and in very many others I know, admits females to instruction.

Mr. MORGAN. They do, I know. Perhaps nearly all of these agricultural colleges do. I will presently lay before the Senate some information on this subject in regard to all those States that do. This act also has reference to the teaching of such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts. It is evident from the title of the schools themselves, and from the whole purpose of this act, that its leading object was to teach men in agriculture and in mechanic arts, including the scientific course, perhaps, and also military tactics. That construction has been put upon this law by numbers of the States. Out of the thirty-eight States in the Union now that have received the benefits of this appropriation, there are fourteen who do not admit women at all. The remaining States do admit them, and some of their institutions have received pupils of that sex. But the construction of the law placed upon it by the men who have in charge these institutions needs to be remedied and corrected, and that is the main purpose of my amendment.

My amendment, however, goes further than that; it reaches to that part of the education of the common people of this country at this day and time which is most requisite for their real preparation for the ordinary and compulsory duties of life. Of course a commonschool education in the elementary branches of learning is not to be dispensed with; that is an indispensable basis of all technical education; but we are devoting ourselves it seems to me exclusively in this law either to the teaching of the mere elementary branches, to which women may be admitted, or when we pass beyond that of teaching the technical branches of education only to men. The doubt and difficulty in which the construction of this statute involves the subject, it seems to me, ought to be removed by an act of Congress, and the amendment which I propose is directed precisely to that point. I desire to make it not only permissive in these schools to receive women for education, but to make it compulsory that they shall provide a school within this college somewhere or in some way by which the women of the land may be enabled to be taught branches of industry which will be useful to them in their maintenance and in the establishment of their independence as people.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator a question for information?

Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to know where we get the authority to change the terms upon which the States accepted these grants, which were complete in themselves at the time, and which were not continuing like this present bill, there being, so far as I saw when I looked at it just now, no provision that Congress reserved the right to change the provisions under which the States were to accept the donation

Mr. MORGAN. We are making an additional donation, conferring an additional bounty on the State.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not for the benefit of the agricultural colleges.

Mr. MORGAN. Oh, yes; they are expressly named here as receiving a large part of this.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As far as that would go, we could impose terms.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Is not a portion of this fund to go to the existing agricultural colleges?

Mr. MORGAN. Expressly.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. One-third of it?

Mr. MORGAN. A very large proportion of it is to go to the agricultural colleges as they are now established, under this bill, and I suppose, of course, that in the appropriation of additional money to we can make it a condition, if we choose, that the States shall not have the benefit unless they adopt the terms.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I may not have an opportunity of expressing my views in regard to this subject, and therefore I wish to interrupt the Senator from Alabama a moment. I am in favor of the principle of the bill, and I was very much impressed awhile ago by the very able argument of the Senator's colleague on this subject, in which he sought to impress on the mind of the Senate that education was all-important with a view of enlightening that portion of the American people who were intrusted with the duties and powers of government. I agree that we should enlighten our constituents, the voters that stand behind us in this great Government. I thought there was great weight in the argument of the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. Pugh,] and if there was, would not this weaken it by taking away this fund from the education of the male portion of our population and devoting it to the education of females?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not think we shall ever have any men in this country who are worth anything unless they have good mothers, wise mothers, and educated mothers. If I wanted to improve the stock of the American people, I should address my efforts first to the improvement of their mothers. I think I should be able to secure a much better development through the education and improvement of the women of this land than could possibly be done by bestowing all the bounty we could possibly accumulate on the heads of the men of the present generation.

The subject that I have brought forward in this amendment is far too comprehensive for me to undertake to discuss it in the brief period that I have the right to take under the agreement of the Senate made yesterday. It is a subject that has attracted largely the atten-tion of educators throughout the world in the last few years. The Governments of France, of Austria, of Prussia, and of England have addressed themselves to the necessity of providing means for the technical education of the common people (as they are termed) of the country, the uneducated masses and those who have not the means of providing education for themselves, not merely with the view of improving the men and women themselves who are brought within the influence of this instruction, but also with the view of improving the influence of this instruction, but also with the view of improving the commerce of those countries, of improving their ability to command for their fabrics and their productions an increased compensa-tion in the markets of the world. Various commissions have been raised, men of the highest possible character have been associated in these commissions, and they have made extensive official investigations into all of these various matters, and I think I am not venturing at all when I state that it is the uniform opinion of the statesmen of Europe to-day that there is no branch of public improvement that is more entitled to the consideration of government than the instruc-tion of the people in technical education in reference to the industries of the land. I shall not beable to bring forward this afternoon all the evidence that I would like to adduce before the Senate in support of this proposition, if indeed any evidence were necessary; but there is a great want in the United States of attention to this

My own attention was first drawn to it on a visit that I made to Boston, where I saw an institution for the instruction of men in all the different industries of the country, and on visiting and examining that institution I was impressed with it as being the most excellent of all the educational establishments I had ever seen in this country. There is scarcely a State in the Union that devotes any specific attention to this very matter, and it is time that the Congress of the United States had at least set the example to the States, and now that it has a favorable opportunity I hope that Congress will not fail

It is very true that under ordinary circumstances the establishment and endowment of schools of technology requires a good deal of money, requires quite a variety of professors and instructors and tutors in various branches of industry which our people are following in the land, and it is equally true that the amount of money which is to be raised under this bill is comparatively a small one. Some Senators have expressed the hope and the confidence that this fund will hereafter be added to. I join very heartily in that hope and in that confidence, and that not only this fund will be increased by private contributions, but that hereafter we shall find other means arising from the general Treasury of the United States for the purpose of aiding in this very important movement, I think one of the most important movements which have ever addressed themselves

The old apprenticeship system is now passing away. I remember in the course of my life to have seen quite a number of men, some of whom have become eminent men in the land, who spent their early manhood as apprentices put out to service under masters to learn trades. Some of the most useful and respectable men who have ever been in the United States, in this Senate and in other bodies of great weight and authority in the land, received their education in special trades, special pursuits, under the old system of apprenticeship. That system had its origin many hundreds of years ago, and it was deemed so very important in England and in France and in Germany that the privilege of being hired as an apprentice to a man was paid for by the father as a real bounty, a real benefit of value given to his son. But that system has passed away; it is virtually gone. I do not now know a single individual who is apprenticed to a master to learn any trade whatsoever. The factories are open throughout the country, a great variety of them, and untutored and unskilled laborers are admitted into these factories when they are young as employés, not receiving from the master the obligation on his part to instruct them in all the learning and in all the business of the trade in which they may engage, but they are received into these institutions merely as laborers, merely as employés, and are left to pick up only so much of information as may make them more and more valuable to their employers. The lines of information are not enlarged. You may take any particular subject—for instance, the making of a pair of shoes—and that subject is divided up into various specialties: one will be cutting; another will be binding; another will be working a machine for the purpose of pegging, or a sewing-machine; another will be for embossing and polishing; another will be for boxing up the product and sending it to the market. Each trade or pursuit under our present system is divided up largely into specialties. The boy or the girl who may be admitted into one of these factories as a bright, intelligent, and promising employé is put at a particular specialty, is put to cutting or to embossing or to pegging or to sewing a shoe. That is all he is ever permitted to learn. It would not be to the interest of his employer that he should understand the entire business, because immediately he would rise to that condition where he would become a competitor

We see by this little illustration the wide difference that exists between the present system of imparting instruction of a technical character, of an industrial character, to the children of the country, character, of an industrial character, to the children of the country, and that system which existed of apprenticeship, under which the master was bound by the articles of apprenticeship to give instruction to his apprentice in all that pertained to the particular trade in which he was to be employed. In the latter case the master was the instructor and tutor of the child. In the present instance, however, as matters are now conducted, the child goes there to wear his way through the factory in the best manner he can, to live his life out with no expectation except that when he becomes more skilled the mere per diem of his pay may be increased. That is all the hope he mere per diem of his pay may be increased. That is all the hope he has in the world.

In addressing ourselves to the subject of educating the youth of this country practically and placing this great Government bounty in the reach of those for whom it is really designed, it seems to me that we ought at once to adopt that system which has been found to be necessary in the older governments of the world in order that they may essary in the older governments of the world in order that they may be able, in their commerce even, to compete with the newer and more enterprising people on this side of the ocean, and we ought therefore to establish schools of apprenticeship, for that is the entire purpose of the amendment; it is to establish schools of apprenticeship in which boys and girls may receive such instruction as will be necessary in order to accomplish them in the ten thousand varied pursuits which order to accomplish them in the ten thousand varied pursuits which the genius and enterprise and industry of the younger part of the country can be engaged in, greatly to their own benefit and yet more greatly to the benefit of the country.

Mr. MORRILL. May I ask the Senator from Alabama if he does not believe this is a question that had better be left to the several States, when all but fourteen of these colleges have already admitted women to all their privileges, and the very institution that he has mentioned was established by the agricultural-college fund?

Mr. MORGAN. I should be entirely willing to do that; but we have been nearly twenty years conducting these colleges or some of them under this law, and yet, as I have remarked, there are only half of them—there is less than half of them—that admit women at all to the colleges. They are barred from going there by regulations of to the colleges. They are barred from going there by regulations of the institution, and in not more than three or four of all these colleges are there any special schools of instruction in reference to the common industries of life. The experiment has been a failure, if that was one of its purposes.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator of course is aware that one great reason in the smaller States is that the fund has not been sufficient.

Mr. MORGAN. I think the fund ought to be sufficient for that purpose, before almost any other you could name, except to teach the elements of an English education. The fund has been quite sufficient to have in all these agricultural colleges boys decked out in military gear, with bands of music and drums, and drill officers sent there for the purpose of training them as soldiers. I do not know one, perhaps there are some, but I do not know one of these agricultural colleges agricultural colleges. tural colleges which is not a regular barrack, a camp of soldiery, where the youths of the country are made to step about and strut where the youths of the country are made to step about and struct about in uniforms, wearing swords and carrying guns—in my judgment a very useless waste of money.

Then, again, there are large numbers of professors in these colleges, quite an extraordinary number of them, far more than is necessary to teach the simple branches of education which are taught in these colleges. There is a great loss of money there. We leave it to the States, of course, but I am disposed to put some restriction upon the expenditure of this money hereafter, and I think that one class of people who are totally neglected and totally unprovided for ought to be provided for by an act of Congress which shall require the State schools to admit women; I do not mean into the college proper on the basis of co-education with boys, but I mean that they shall be admitted into schools prepared for them, and that the purposes of these schools shall be directed specifically to their education in the ordinary industries of life and in a great many technical pursuits where they can earn the means of subsistence.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Alabama inform me what would be the probable cost of the establishment of such a system as he requires? Take a State where the provision he now suggests does not exist; of course, he would desire that it should be sufficient for all the young women of the State who wished to avail themselves of it, and not merely have a few chosen persons. What would be the all the young women of the State who wished to avail themselves or it, and not merely have a few chosen persons. What would be the probable cost, for instance, in the State of Alabama?

Mr. MORGAN. If any one State should undertake a broad system of technical instruction so as to include a great variety of subjects in its catalogue of instruction, it would become very expensive; there is no doubt of that; but we have thirty-eight States and probably in thirty years more we shall have as many as forty or perhaps forty-five; each of these States has a peculiar agriculture; it has peculiar resources. For instance the State of Alabama has cotton for its leading agricultural product. I should think that a wise system of direction of this money in the State of Alabama to the subjects of technical education would be to direct it at once to the employment of women in the manufacture of cotton, I do not mean spinning it on an ordinary wheel or spinning it in a factory, and yet that would be a most excellent way to instruct a girl how to earn a living in after life, but in the art of design in the art of waying in the art of coutting most excellent way to instruct a girl how to earn a living in after life, but in the art of dyeing, in the art of weaving, in the art of cutting prints for the purpose of manufacturing the goods, or if you please you may take them into the cotton mart and put their delicate fingers there to sampling and ascertaining the value of cotton by its texture, by the length of the fiber, &c. I do not see why a woman well instructed and well educated in a matter of this kind ought not to be able to earn the three or four thousand dollars a year a man earns in my State by like pursuits. Then go out to California where gold abounds.—

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator permit me to state that I think he does not see the exact force of my inquiry? I entirely agree with him in the propriety of such institutions; but my question was what, in his judgment, would be the cost in his State of such a system of education as he desires for women to be established there, without going (unless he chooses) into the question of what that system shall be? I put the question for this reason: the Senator from Colorado attacked this bill with a good deal of force on the ground that it is totally insufficient to accomplish any practical result at present; that only $40,000 are to be divided among all the States the first year.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator will allow me to interrupt him. I made the calculation on the last report.

Mr. HOAR. Allow me to finish, because I am myself interrupting my friend from Alabama. I have been for a number of years a trustee of a technical school for young men, and have studied that subject with great care. I made a journey to Europe very largely for the purpose of studying the systems of technical instruction there. I think I know something about that matter, and it is the most costly kind of instruction which can possibly be given. Where you teach a boy agriculture by having him to learn on a farm and earn bis own living. his own living, or mechanics by working in a mill, you have got to provide the establishment in which he is educated and you have got to pay a large sum of money. Now, the technical school of which I am trustee has a fund of between five and six hundred thousand dollars, and it is hungry and starving because of the insufficiency of that fund. Now will the State of Alabama—of course the only effect of the Senator's amendment is to make it a condition of their getting anything under this fund—will the State of Alabama, probably next year, appropriate three or four million dollars to establish these technical schools for its women—enough to amount to anything as the condition of getting its share of $40,000?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not think that the State of Alabama would make any such appropriation as that, or if it did it would not have the money to pay for it. There is no difficulty on that point; but because there are some expensive schools of technology in the United States it does not follow that they must all necessarily be so. I will read from an author who has given great consideration to this subject, Mr. Stetson, who has written a book on technical education, and a very excellent book it is. He says:

With the decay of apprenticeship numerous special schools for the instruction of apprentices have been established in Europe.

He does not say it required a very vast endowment to get these schools established.

These schools are supported in part by local and in part by state contributions. The service they have rendered to industry cannot be lightly estimated.

Such schools can have no uniform organization, since they must be adapted to the industrial wants of each locality. One will be a school for wearing, another for lace-making, another for dyeing, another for watch-making, another for jew-elers, another for machinists, another for carpenters, another for ship-builders, and so through the catalogue of industries. Of course, those things which are common to different industries can be taught in the same school.

Labor performed under the direction of experienced workmen occupies a good part of the time; the remainder is given to those studies which have an immediate bearing upon the industry taught.

There is a system outlined which, in its application to the thirtyeight States of this Union, it seems to me, would bring great profit to the cause of public instruction if it should be followed. As I was remarking, the State of Alabama, for instance, could establish a technical school having relation to the manufacture in one form and annical school having relation to the manufacture in one form and another of its great leading production. Colorado, being a silver State, could furnish the material there for the manufacture of vast amounts of silverware, which women can make just as well as men—watch-cases, spoons, trinkets, jewelry—articles which involve taste and skill, and in which I think that the genius of the females of the United States would find a field of beautiful, as well as very greatly remunerative employment. The argument against the expense of it is not a sufficient argument to deter us from entering upon the system. It may be wars before it is matured into anything very value. tem. It may be years before it is matured into anything very valuable, but there is no doubt at all that in certain elementary matters of instruction these schools can be made very largely useful without a great expenditure of money.

This author goes on and gives a number of instances of the beneficial effects of instruction by popular lectures, by instructors coming to particular localities after notice given for the purpose of giving lessons to such persons as may assemble there in reference to a particular branch of industry. The author says that the French imperial commission, organized for the purpose of inquiring into this matter, has made a report in which it has demonstrated that this system of popular lectures has very largely contributed to the excellence of French productions in all that relates to matters of taste and genius, out of which they have made such a large amount of money off the other nations of the world. It is said, and I believe it to be true, that skilled French artisans can take material that is not worth more than fifty cents in its crude state and make out of it articles that will sell for from fifth to one hadred dellows morely because they are more for from fifty to one hundred dollars, merely because they are men and women of instructed taste and skill in the manufacture of artiand women of instructed taste and skill in the manufacture of articles which the wealthy people of other parts of the world demand.

Mr. President, you cannot shut out the importation of articles of that description by any tariff you put upon them. Men of wealth, men who are capable of indulging in their luxurious tastes, will bring from abroad articles which are the production of the exquisite taste and the high skill of French and other foreign manufacturers. I would like very much to see some system obtaining in the United States whereby our own daughters would have the rudimentary parts of instruction given to them at all events on which they could base achievements and accomplishments, such as those that we pay for at such a high price to foreign countries.

I think that the expense of this system is not an objection to it. It is not necessarily an expensive system. I have not time to go over is not necessarily an expensive system. I have not time to go over the whole of this field. I find that I am already trespassing on the attention of the Senate in my efforts to bring forward this very important subject; and as I expected to devote my remarks entirely to those rudimental branches of technical education which are absorbed. lutely necessary for the welfare and comfort of the people of this country, I will take up the subject of the cooking schools in this country. I remember quite well that a lady recently visited Washington City from New York who had been abroad on a tour of instrucington City from New York who had been abroad on a tour of instruc-tion to be given to persons in reference to the art of cooking. When she came here the ladies of this city, old and young, and the servants of the city, congregated at her lectures and received instruction from her to their great benefit, not only in reference to the mere art of cooking, but also in reference to all the economies that relate to the management of the kitchen and the larder. If this provision should have no other effect than merely to distribute information of that sort among the people of the United States at large, and particularly among the neglegated records of the section of country in which my friend among the people of the United States at large, and particularly among the uneducated people of the section of country in which my friend from Georgia lives and in which I live, the accomplishment of that one result would be quite sufficient to justify us in making this requirement upon the States. Take also the training of nurses. We have a school already established in Washington City by an act of Congress, over which that patriotic and venerable philanthropist, Mr. Corcoran, presides, and that school, under the direction of an eminent board of trustees; devotes itself to instruction to women in the art of nursing. A woman who in that school becomes an accomplished nurse is able to maintain herself everywhere, and not merely able to maintain herself, but to confer untold blessings upon humanity. Suppose you should add that to a course of technical instruction, and suppose in struction a few even of the more rude and elementary matters in which the people are greatly uninstructed, it seems to me there can be no difficulty in our understanding that such a movement as that would necessarily produce a great revolution and a great reform in the country in the direction of its higher civilization.

I have here, Mr. President, a collation prepared by the Commissioner of Education, which sets forth the actual condition of every one of the agricultural colleges in the United States, and also every school that has devoted the slightest attention to this subject of technical instruction. Of course I shall not detain the Senate by undertaking to read this collation of facts now, but I ask to have it introduced into my remarks in order that Senators may have the benefit of a reference to this exact and full and complete statement benefit of a reference to this exact and full and complete statement addition to that you should bring around in the course of your in-struction a few even of the more rude and elementary matters in of the actual situation of these different colleges.

The statement is as follows:

ALABAMA.

State Agricultural College.

Statement of President I. T. Tichenor:

Statement of President I. T. Tichenor:

1. Objects of institution.—Those specified in the act of 1862; accomplished as far as means would permit.

2. Endowment.—Proceeds of sales of lands given by Congress, $253,500, at 8 per cent., and $15 incidental fee charged students. Annual income about $22,500, spent every year. Lands and buildings, mostly donated, have cost over $67,000. Cost of teaching staff, $17,600 a year.

3. Faculty—Consists of a president, 6 professors, and 3 instructors, 2 of whom are in preparatory department.

4-6. Students.—In 1879, 279, all men. Number of graduates, (incomplete,) 42. Seven hundred and fifty men have received instruction since the organization in 1872. Of these 222 are engaged in agriculture, 40 in mechanical pursuits, 70 in teaching, 90 in commerce, rest unknown.

7. Course of study.—Usual scientific collegiate course.

8. Women—Not admitted, though the faculty have almost unanimously advised the trustees to admit them.

State Industrial University.

Statement of President D. H. Hill:

1. Object of institution.—To afford cheap and practical education in agriculture and the mechanic arts.
2. Endoement.—Lands given by Congress; $100,000 by Washington County; $30,000 by town of Fayetteville. Value of grounds and buildings, $300,000. An nual income from bonds, $10,400; from tuition, $2,000, and State appropriation of $5,000. Total income, about $17,500, spent each year. Salaries, $15,500 per annum.

3. Faculty.—A president, five professors, and twelve assistant professors and teachers.

4-6. Students.—In 1880, 473, two-thirds males. Fees to students, nominal; 661 scholarships; 8 or 10 graduates a year; about one-fourth females.

7. Course of study.—Classical, agricultural, scientific, and normal.

8. Women.—No special course prescribed, but the president thinks one needed; few-women succeed in higher mathematics.

9. Workshops, &c.—Has no workshop or apparatus, and only a small, poorly-equipped farm.

COLORADO.

State Agricultural College.

Statement from reports, &c.:

Statement from reports, &c.:

1. Object of institution.—To impart knowledge pertaining to agriculture and the mechanic arts.

2. Endowment.—Prospective endowment is the proceeds of land grant which has not yet come into market. Present support, biennial appropriations, the last, in 1879, being $25,000.

3. Faculty.—The faculty consists of a president, two professors, and a secretary.

4.5. Students.—Twenty-six in number, 16 males and 7 females. Tuition, free. Entrance fee, $5. Incidental fee, $1 per term.

6. Graduates.—None, as the first college year commenced last February.

7. Course of study.—A scientific course, with agricultural subjects, (e. g., irrigation, agricultural chemistry, horticulture, agricultural subjects, (e. g., irrigation, agricultural chemistry, horticulture, agriculture, sis), largely introduced. Manual labor is required on account of its educational, hygienic, and pecuniary benefit.

Training Schools for Nurses.

These institutions, supplemental to the medical profession and associated with parental duties, are to meet one of the demands for labor by affording training to those who with proper qualifications may answer the call for nurses. There are in the United States 10 such institutions, having 39 instructors and 322 pupils. They are supported mainly by endowment, contributions, labor of inmates, and general appropriations.

Training Schools of Cookery.

Training Schools of Cookery.

This class of schools has arisen from the demand for the establishment of institutions for the practical industrial training of women.

The New York Cooking School, the starting point of the movement in America, was begun in 1674, and from September, 1874, to March, 1875, about 200 persons attended the lessons, while from January to April, 1879, the total attendance at public and private lectures and lessons was 6,560.

Among prominent institutions in which an interest has been taken in domestic training may be mentioned Lowell Seminary, Wellesley College, Illinois Industrial University, Iowa Agricultural College, and The State Agricultural College at Manbattan, Kansas.

The support of the schools of cookery is mainly derived from tuition and lecture fees and receipts from the sale of cooked food.

The facts stated in the concluding paragraphs of the paper I have presented, that the number of persons who attended upon these lectures and these instructions increased from 200 so that within the tures and these instructions increased from 200 so that within the period of less than three months they had gone up to 6,560, it seems to me, do not furnish us any reason for despairing of our success if we shall make it compulsory on the States to adopt a system of this kind. I will not debate the propriety or the necessity of this movement any further. I feel that I have not time now to debate it as extensively as I should like to do. But I desire to call attention to one fact in reference to female education in this country. We have a great many well educated, thoroughly trained, and beautifully accomplished women in the United States, women, it would seem, who ought to have the means of supporting and sustaining themselves almost to an equal degree with the wisest and strongest and best intered men in the land. Here are fields of enterprise and themselves almost to an equal degree with the wisest and strongest and best tutored men in the land. Here are fields of enterprise and industry open to them which are incalculably broad.

Why, sir, if you cast your eyes around this Chamber you can see in the decorations of its walls, you can see in the varnish upon its furniture, you can see in the paintings, in the engravings, in the glassware upon the desks, in the pens, in the paper—in fact, throughout the entire Chamber—you can see everywhere evidences of handiwork performed by men in these industries in our country which could be equally well performed by women; but we not only deprive them of the opportunity of gaining this information and shut them out from it by a false public sentiment, but we withhold from them every adyantage and every opportunity of learning the elementary branches of industries like these. The whole country is full of opportunities for woman to labor, to earn an honorable subsistence, without the necessity of being compelled to follow after some drunken fellow who may be her husband and call her wife, and to take at his hands what he may be disposed to bestow upon her as a gratuity or as an act of charity.

Mr. President, we shall not have even the men of this country thoroughly well educated and imbued with sufficiently genuine manly principles until means are provided whereby the women can live. Look at the Departments in Washington City; look at the crowds of elegant ladies who come here from all parts of the United States for the purpose of getting employment in the Government Departments, and does it not excite, not your sympathies merely, but a sense of and does it not excite, not your sympathies merely, but a sense of alarm that we are neglecting to provide for them in some other way than by putting them upon the mercy and charity of politicians, or under the rule of official overseers in the different Departments of this Government? The very influx of these ladies itself proves that there is some serious infirmity in the very groundwork of our educational system in this country. You do not find skilled artisans in the ceramic art, or skilled painters, or manufacturers of furniture, or of jewelry, or of feathers, or of flowers, or of ribbons, or of bonnets, or anything of that sort, coming to Washington City and asking to be thrust into the Departments as clerks. Why are not these men here? Why do they not neglect their labors at home and come here for the purpose of throwing themselves upon the charity of members of Congress for appointments in these different offices? It is because men, and women, too, very greatly prefer, when they have the ability, to earn their honest living by their own toil, and they despise and abhor that sort of dependence which places them at the foot of any man to receive charity and indulgence at his hands. If the ladies who come to Washington City seeking employment had in their power the means Washington City seeking employment had in their power the means of livelihood through having learned some branch of trade or industry by which they could earn a living, this city would not be crowded with them as it has been now for the last twenty years. I should like to see something done somewhere and by somebody at least to start this matter, so that the good people of the land, the benevolent, those who are well-intentioned toward civilization and education, may have a little nucleus, a little chance to come around the subject and to support and sustain it.

Congress cannot do wrong by passing this amendment. It may do very wrong by refusing to pass it. It cannot harm this bill. The little pittance of money that may be used by the States in the inauguration of the system which is proposed in this amendment is not going to hurt the Government; it will not hurt the States; it will not impair the efficiency of the agricultural colleges to which this bill attaches it; but it will lay broad and deep the foundations of a system which this country must adopt for the purpose of educating system which this country must adopt for the purpose or educating its men and its women both, in order to maintain even its commercial supremacy in the world. American genius is finding its way, and fighting its way, too, throughout all the coasts of the earth, carrying abroad our magnificent productions, carrying abroad the evidences of our skill and of our industry. But we have competitors in this world, wise and able men both in government and in society, and we need not expect that if we refuse or even delay to educate the masses of the country in technical industries we shall be able to hold our own with these competitors in years to come.

Our patent system here, the genius of our mechanics, the necessities of the country itself, which forced genius to come to its assistance, have enabled us to achieve great triumphs in our commercial interhave enabled us to achieve great triumpns in our commercial inter-course with foreign countries. Our agricultural implements particu-larly, and our railroad engines, locomotives, and various other steam machinery, are forcing themselves into the world. Why is it? What has been at the foundation of this movement? The necessity in this country of having these improvements in order that we might carry on our agriculture and our internal commerce. The law of necessity has operated here to compel men to become skilled in these matters, and in yielding to that law and in carrying out its influence and its benefits our men have become so largely and so excellently skilled that they now drive out the productions from foreign markets, and we have the monopoly of the markets in very many places in the

we have the monopoly of the markets in very many places in the world. But this is not going to be so always.

What do we know about the manufacture of worsted goods in the United States. There is one little village in Switzerland where a poor Swede seventy years ago inaugurated a little manufacture of the light woolen tissues and fabrics which ladies use in knitting shawls and various little articles of adornment; he drew around him a parcel of girls to assist him in this manufacture. He went forward and taxed his genius and made some inventions for the purpose of facilitating the labor. After awhile he got his party of skilled women around him to the number of perhaps twenty; he then commenced building houses around him, and there has quite a city grown up, a population of more than fifty thousand people, and the whole industry of that town is in the manufacture of these worsted threads. Now, see what instruction that man has given to this little community, how it has enabled those people to master a great industry, and how it has enabled them to grow rich merely from the fact that information in regard to this peculiar manufacture has been disseminated among the women of that country.

So it will be here, Mr. President, if we inaugurate this system. If we just make this little plant in the States and invite the attention of the State governments to the necessity of this movement, we shall in five years from this day find that we have developed an ability to educate our people which will astonish us with its success and also with its economy. The Senator from Massachusetts, because he has a large institution there which is expensive and which undertakes to teach men in a great variety of pursuits, need not be alarmed if we introduce this system in a simple form in the different States. After awhile the $500,000, which I believe he said had been subscribed for the endowment of that excellent school in Massachusetts, will be rethe endowment of that excellent school in Massachusetts, will be repeated in various of the States of this country, and it will be a beautiful and blessed thing to know that we have thirty-eight such schools as that technical college or school in the city of Boston.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Alabama misapprehended the point of my interruption, as I conceive. I suppose the Senator does not believe and that no Senator believes that an act of Congress ordering a State to establish a technical school for women is constitutional. That is the form of his amendment; and if that were the substance of the would agree with me that it was uttarly unconstitutional. of it he would agree with me that it was utterly unconstitutional. suppose, therefore, the only validity of an amendment attached to this sill which says the States are hereby required to establish technical schools for women is that it makes a condition on its receipt of its portion of this fund for the future. Now the portion of the fund for the future is to be for several years, certainly in the future a portion of a very small fund; and I ask him if he supposes the State of Alabama could establish such a school as he describes for its women for less than two or three million dollars' expenditure at the outset, and if it cannot, if he thinks it would make that expenditure merely to secure its share of $40,000? That is the point of my inquiry, not that I object to his general views of the excellence of these institutions.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Massachusetts misapprehends the force of the amendment. This is an amendment to the act of 1862 that I propose, which puts additional words simply to those words which in that act prescribe duties to the States. The States have entire liberty as to when and how and in what manner they will establish these schools and conduct them. The language of the act is this: bill which says the States are hereby required to establish technical

To the endowment, support, and maintenance of at least one college where the leading object shall be, without excluding other scientific and classical studies, and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts, in such manner as the Legislatures of the States may respectively prescribe, in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions in life.

This amendment merely adds to that:

The said last-mentioned act of Congress is hereby amended so as to require each State and Territory to establish in said college schools for the instruction of females in such branches of technical education as are suitable to their sex;

Leaving to the Legislatures of the different States just as much Leaving to the Legislatures of the different States just as much play, as much liberty in carrying that provision into effect, as they have under the fourth section of the act of 1862. They have a discretion in regard to this matter, and I do not propose to make this a condition upon which the grant shall be forfeited, but to impose it as one of the duties upon the Legislature of the State that it shall make provision for the admission of women into schools, to be taught in technical branches of education. I would not undertake so to interrupt the force and effect of that original enactment as to attach a condition to it which had not hereotofice been extrached to it. but I condition to it which had not heretofore been attached to it; but I would give direction, as far as we can, in the bestowment of the fund, to the purpose to which it is to be applied. There is no condition of forfeiture involved in the amendment which I have offered, but of forfeiture involved in the amendment which I have obsered, but it is a mere direction to the Legislatures of the different States that they shall establish in these colleges a school for the technical education of the female sex. I can see no embarrassment or difficulty to the measure in the adoption of this amendment. It is what you to the measure in the adoption of this amendment. It is what you might call a directory proceeding. At the same time it prescribes a duty to the Legislature which it is expected, of course, on the part of Congress, the Legislature shall comply with, but there is no ground of forfeiture in the event that the Legislature should not establish such a school. It would perhaps in after years, if a State had neglected to do so and other States were prospering while this State was falling away in consequence of it, be a good ground for argument to the Congress of the United States why there should be then some further modification of this law.

gress of the United States why there should be then some further modification of this law.

Mr. President, I have thus imperfectly presented the view that I have of this question. I ask the Senate to adopt this amendment because I believe it will be the starting point of a very great movement in this country. I believe that it cannot possibly do any harm; that it does not in the slightest degree embarrass the bill which has all of my sympathy and will have my support. I commit it to the candid attention of the Senate and ask for it their support.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I disliked to interrupt the Senator from Alabama while he was in the course of his remarks on a very interesting question indeed: but the hour has long since passed when interesting question indeed; but the hour has long since passed when we were to vote upon the bill. I merely desire to say this, that I trust the friends of the bill will adhere to it in substance as reported, if they expect it to be adopted not only by the Senate but by the House. So far as the Senator from Alabama is concerned in his proposition, I wish to say merely that all the funds accumulated in more than half the States would not be sufficient to establish the technical school that he proposes for women as to ecolving and pursing and vaschool that he proposes for women as to cooking and nursing and various other pursuits; and in relation to the proposition of the Senator from Colorado, I do not believe that a majority will be in favor of appropriating the principal of this fund to the States, for the simple reason that they desire to make this a permanent fund and put it where it cannot be squandered, and where there will be no occasion for making reclamations on account of any squandering.

Mr. President, I now ask that the agreement that we came to yesterday shall be enforced.

Mr. WALLACE. It is evident that no vote can be taken on this bill this evening; there are several who wish to speak, and I trust the Senator in charge of the bill will give way for a motion for an

Mr. BURNSIDE. I think there was a distinct understanding that the vote should be taken at four o'clock to-day, and I hope if we go into executive session now there will be an understanding about a vote to-morrow at some hour.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I do not propose to say anything on this bill, but several gentlemen do. I am in favor of the main features of the bill, but I think it had better be passed over until to-morrow. Some Senators wish to speak.

Mr. WALLACE. I propose that the bill go over as the unfinished business for to-morrow.

Mr. HOAR. What has become of the unanimous agreement to vote on this bill to-day?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that there was

Mr. ALLISON. It is half-past four o'clock now.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I hope that motion will not prevail and the unanimous understanding of yesterday be passed over.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I am in favor of the bill, but gentlemen want to think about it. It seems to me it does not do any harm to let it go over as the unfinished business.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I do not care to press a vote to-night if there are other Senators who desire to address the Senate. If any Senator will rise and say he desires to address the Senate to-morrow on this bill, I shall not object to a delay till then.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I heard the word "agreement," but certainly that word has no application here. That only relates to political matters and party questions.

ical matters and party questions.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the consent of the Senator from Florida to interrupt him a moment, because what he has already said indicates that he misunderstood what I said. Last night when it was proposed to adjourn some of the friends of this bill desired to have a vote upon it. Thereupon the Senate came, as is frequent in like cases, to a unanimous agreement that if an adjournment was then had there to a unanimous agreement that if an adjournment was then had there should be a vote on the bill to-day at four o'clock. It has nothing to do with politics, nothing to do with different views; but it is a very common thing to agree, when some gentleman wishes to adjourn, that we will, instead of "sitting it out" and voting then, fix a time for voting on the following day. That was agreed to. When four o'clock came to-day the Senator from Alabama was on his feet addressing the Senate, and no gentleman desired to seem to be discourteous by calling time and stopping him in his speech, as there was a right to do. Now, the speech is over, and it is only half past four, and it seems to me that every Senator is bound, if we are to be bound by such agreements, to permit a vote at this time. I make that point.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the pending question, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. INGALLS. Is that debatable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is proceeding by unanimous

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is proceeding by unanimous

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. INGALLS. I ask for the question on the pending motion.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BLAINE. I hope that will be voted down because this ought not to go as it is now likely to go—

Mr. INGALLS. Vote it down. That is all right.

Mr. BLAINE. If the Senator from Kansas will permit me one word, I should like to say—

Mr. INGALLS. I ask for a vote on the pending question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A vote is called for. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Wal-LACE.]
The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I ask for a vote on the bill according to the unanimous understanding of yesterday.

Mr. BLAINE. I was only going to say, as I apprehended the mo-tion might be carried, that I think it is of the very greatest impor-tance that there never should be any disregard or violation of a unantance that there never should be any disregard or violation of a unanimous consent. It is the previous question of the Senate. It is the way that has been observed, and most honorably and carefully observed, to terminate debate; and where there has been an understanding of this kind it ought not to be lightly violated or placed aside. I have not the slightest desire to force a vote on the bill; I have taken no part in the debate; I am in favor of the bill, and shall vote for it whenever it shall please the Senate to come to a final vote; but a unanimous consent of that kind ought only to be waived by unanimous consent. Now, if there is any gentleman on the other side who desires to further debate the bill, I would ask unanimous consent that the enforcement of the agreement of yesterday be postponed until to-morrow, so that we shall preserve that which is the common law and has become the obligatory rule of the Senate, and not close a debate of this kind with the Senator who has the bill in charge feeling that an agreement which had been entered into on both sides had not been scrupnlously kept. I ask unanimous consent that the feeling that an agreement which had been entered into on both sides had not been scrupulously kept. I ask unanimous consent that the vote shall be taken to-morrow at four o'clock.

Mr. BURNSDE. Allow me to state that I have already declared that if any Senator on either side of the Chamber said he desired to speak, I would let the bill go over until to-morrow. No Senator gave notice of any desire to speak, and I therefore insisted on the unanimous agreement of yesterday being carried out.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. It seems to me we might vote at an earlier hour than four o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. BLAINE. I have no choice about the hour, I only wanted to present the point.

Mr. BLAINE. I have no choice about the hour, I only wanted to present the point.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I will say to Senators that I desire to say a few words on this question.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Then I ask that we take the vote at half past two o'clock to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island asks unanimous consent that the vote be taken on this bill at half past two o'clock to-morrow.

two o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I object. I should have objected yesterday if my attention had not been withdrawn from the subject by somebody speaking to me; I did not know of the understanding; and upon the same grounds that only two or three days ago I objected to a similar proposition about some other matter or measure that was before the Senate, because I believe that except in some extreme emergency it is not right to absolutely agree to cut off the debate at a given time. Senators may wish to make explanations, amendments arise that need to be explained and considered. If the friends of this bill—I am one of them—wish to stay here to-night until everybody has had his say, and we can carefully consider every branch and feature of this measure with the amendments to be proposed, very well, I will stay, and I am quite willing to stay to-morrow; but very well, I will stay, and I am quite willing to stay to-morrow; but I will not agree that a vote shall be taken at six o'clock to-morrow or at any other time on this bill or any other except in some extreme and exceptional case; and at the same time I shall expect to help to-morrow to get this bill to a final decision. The Senator from Illinois says, and truly, that after this debate so many suggestions have been made that Senators wish to consider, not in hostility to the bill, but in order to have a just and fair consideration of it, and to put it into the best possible shape. It is very near now, no doubt, the best possible shape it n.ay be in—

Mr. BURNSIDE. Will the Senator from Vermont object to a

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will object to any proposition which binds gentlemen in this body to keep their mouths closed when they feel it their duty to say something. At the same time, so far as I am concerned—

Mr. BURNSIDE. I think the Senator from Vermont has frequently made agreements of that kind himself, or consented to them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And in every instance I have been sorry for it afterward

Mr. BURNSIDE. In view of the fact that there was an agreement made for to-day, I think the Senator from Vermont will hardly put himself in the way of an agreement for to-morrow.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator from Vermont if he will consent, in consideration of the existing condition of things, to a postponement of the vote till four o'clock to-morrow?

Mr. EDMINIOS. I will be the control of the post of the control of the co

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will not consent to anything that will fix a time to close debate.

Mr. BLAINE. According to the position of the Senator from Vermont, the possibility of making unanimous consent for votes will be broken down in the Senate. He says he would consent to it only in an emergency. Of course that reserves to himself the right to judge of the emergency. He was absent when this agreement was made. That has uniformly and universally been held not to be a sufficient

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not dispute it; but I am asked now to make a new agreement.

Mr. BLAINE. No; you are not asked to make a new agreement. The ground I took was that an agreement had been made, and that if it was to be observed now it must be carried out, or it could only be waived by unanimous consent, which would itself express the will of every person present.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very good; I agree to that. Mr. BLAINE. But the honorable Senator has just said that he will

Mr. BLAINE. But the honorable Senator has just said that he will not consent to any other agreement.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well. I am ready to go on now.

Mr. BLAINE. If the Senator from Vermont takes the ground that an agreement made on this bill is not to be carried out because he was not present and did not consent to it, and that now, being present, he will not consent to any other arrangement, then I give him notice—and I think I give him notice on the part of everybody—that his judgment of an emergency that shall require unanimous consent may not be the judgment of some other man in the Senate, and that if you break down the principle of unanimous consent in one case, you break it down necessarily in all. It stands upon the good faith of every member of the Senate. If that good faith is violated in a small matter, it may be violated in a large one. If the Senator from Vermont reserves to himself the right to determine when an emergency arises, the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Illinois will have their the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Illinois will have their notions of when an emergency arises. I regard it not of any great matter whether this bill is voted on to-day or to-morrow or next Tuesday or next Wednesday, but I do regard it as of very great moment whether an agreement that was fairly and honorably made in the Senate shall be honorably carried out in the sense in which it was made. made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I wish to thank my friend from Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I wish to thank my friend from Maine for so correctly defining my position in one respect, and that is that I am the sole judge of what I will agree to, and neither he nor anybody else can help me except by reason of persuasion and solicitation, &c., as to how I shall exercise my judgment. I agree with him entirely in another thing and that is that the understandings in the Senate ought to be faithfully adhered to unless everybody will agree to make some new arrangement or to waive them altogether. I propose faithfully to adhere to this so long as any single Senator says that he insists upon going on now. When I am asked to make a new engagement to tie myself up for to-morrow I must be excused. I did not vote to go into executive session, for the very reason that here was the understanding and I expect to carry it out with quite as good faith as my friend from Maine; and I cannot be persuaded by his method of argument into finding myself bound to with quite as good faith as my friend from Maine; and I cannot be persuaded by his method of argument into finding myself bound to make another trade. I do not see the force of that at all. I will stand by this one. When I am asked to make another I must beg to be excused as I would have done if I had been present or my attention had been called to it when this was made. I am quite ready to stand by all that has been agreed to.

Mr. MCDONALD. It is very evident that the agreement of yesterday cannot now be carried out, the time having passed, and I see no impropriety in our adjourning at this time and letting the bill pass over as unfinished business.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope not. I trust the Senate will keep in session until we have voted on all the amendments and on the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, there was undoubtedly an agreement to vote this afternoon at four o'clock. Why did we not vote at four o'clock? The Senator from Vermont, the Senator from Maine, and every other Senator who was on the floor yesterday afternoon had a right under the immemorial usage of the Senate to call for the vote at that hour. Now, that agreement was abrogated by unanihad a right under the immemorial usage of the Senate to call for the vote at that hour. Now, that agreement was abrogated by unanimous consent at four o'clock. That is the simple solution of this whole difficulty. The hour of four o'clock arrived and unanimous consent was given that the vote should be postponed. Three-quarters of an hour have already elapsed. Now, what is the difficulty, in order to solve this Gordian knot and get over this question of breaking the immemorial usage, in assuming that this agreement was abrogated by unanimous consent and now unanimously agreeing to take the vote to-morrow? It seems to me that is a reasonable solution of the whole difficulty.

Mr. FERRY. I desire to remind the Senator from Kansas, what perhaps he omitted to notice, that the Senator from Alabama was on perhaps he omitted to notice, that the Senator from Alabama was on the floor when the hour of four arrived.

Mr. INGALLS. It has always been the case when that hour has been reached which has been agreed upon that the presiding officer rapped with his gavel upon the table and announced that the hour had arrived. He failed to do it in this case. I say that that agreement was abrogated by unanimous consent, and it is entirely competent now to make another agreement.

Mr. FERRY. I restate the fact that the Senator from Alabama was making a speech and had not concluded when the hour of four o'clock arrived. The Senate has always in such instances yielded to the condition of things and allowed the Senator to continue when objection was not made.

jection was not made.

Mr. INGALLS. Never.
Mr. BURNSIDE. I do not think there ever has been a vote since I have been in the Senate that was taken at the hour it was agreed to be taken.

Mr. BLAINE. That is correct.

Mr. BLAINE. Inat is correct.

Mr. INGALLS. But the hour has always been announced.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I do not think that is so, though I am not entirely certain as to that point; but the vote has never to my knowledge been taken at the hour it was agreed to be taken. The votes have always been taken after that hour.

Mr. WALLACE. I desire to say that I was not present yesterday afternoon when the agreement to take the vote at four o'clock to-day was made. I did not remember the fact. I knew that there were gentlemen on this side of the Chamber who desired to speak to the bill, and I supposed the friends of the bill were willing to give further time for its discussion, and therefore I moved an executive session. I think they ought to consent now to allow the bill to go over as unfinished business in order that gentlemen who desire to speak may

Mr. BURNSIDE. Allow me to state to the Senator that as we cannot get unanimous consent, I should be perfectly willing, as I said before, if any gentleman wishes to address the Senate on this bill, to before, if any gentleman wishes to address the Senate on this bill, to consent to postpone the bill until to-morrow.

Mr. WALLACE. I think the bill can go over by unanimous consent if no special time be fixed for taking the vote to-morrow.

Mr. BURNSIDE. If unanimous consent can be obtained for its going over until to-morrow and finishing the bill to-morrow by the end of the session, I shall be glad.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I will state to the Senator from Rhode Island who has the bill in charge, that from the gentlemen whom I have heard speak on the subject there is no factious opposition to it, and it seems to me it can be finished in an hour or an hour or two and it seems to me it can be finished in an hour or an hour or two to-morrow

Mr. BLAINE. Then agree to it.

Mr. BLAINE. Then agree to it.
Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I am willing to agree.
Mr. BURNSIDE. I ask unanimous consent that action on this bill be postponed until to-morrow, with the distinct understanding that the vote be taken during to-morrow's session.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island asks unanimous consent that the bill be postponed until to-morrow, and that the vote be taken during the session to-morrow.

Mr. MORRILL. Say at half past two o'clock.

Mr. INGALLS. It is not necessary to postpone the bill.

Mr. BURNSIDE. That the vote be taken during the session to-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That the vote be taken during the session to-morrow, not fixing the hour.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not agree to that, while at the same time I expect to stay with my friend from Rhode Island until the bill is finished to-morrow.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I will say to the Senator from Rhode Island that there is not any doubt about a vote being taken tomorrow.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I am entirely at the mercy of the Senate in this matter. We have made an agreement to which I am willing to adhere. Now I am quite willing, being in charge of the bill, to change it for another arrangement, to which other Senators object. There is nothing left to me but to insist upon a vote to-day in accordance with the agreement. I think the reason given by the Senator from Kansas does not apply. I do not think I ever heard of a more marked instance of whipping the devil around the stump. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAINE. I quite agree with the honorable Senator from Rhode Island that the Senator from Kansas did try to whip the devil around the stump, but did not succeed; the devil got ahead of him. [Laughter.] The fact that the Senate permitted the honorable Senator from Alabama to remain on his feet was not a unanimous consent to waive

Alabama to remain on his feet was not a unanimous consent to waive the agreement; it was a unanimous consent of the Senate on the ground of courtesy that that honorable Senator might conclude his remarks, and that was all it was, and it varied the agreement just to that extent. The ground presented by the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Kansas is that when the Senate agree to vote at a given hour, if the presiding officer does not bring down the gavel at that particular moment all rights are lost and you have got to watch the gavel of the presiding officer and the face of the clock to secure your vote or it is gone!

This case has arisen, I think, fortunately, because it is at a time when there is no pressure on the business of the Senate. It is just as convenient to have this bill finished to-morrow as it is to-day. It is better that this bill be finished to-morrow. If any Senator has any views to submit upon it it is better that those views be heard. It is an important bill; I agree to that; but it is a very serious matter if an agreement made upon this bill shall be trampled under foot and an agreement made upon this bill shall be trampled under foot and Senators will not permit any other agreement to take its place. For one I say it is the utter destruction of all agreements. You cannot maintain that rule in the Senate about anything, and there can be no agreement made that any Senator will not within the prescriptive rule of the Senate have as much right to trample upon as any Senator has to-day to trample upon this.

Mr. BURNSIDE. In order to try to come to some understanding, I will make this proposition: that the bill be postponed until to-morrow—

morrow

Mr. MORRILL. Not postponed.
Mr. BURNSIDE. That we adjourn and continue the bill to-morrow, and continue with the bill without putting it out of the hands of the Senate until it is finished to-morrow or next day.

Mr. HOAR. I do not understand that.

Mr. BURNSIDE. That we continue action on the bill until it is finished.

Mr. HOAR. I object

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Rhode Island state his proposition?

Mr. BURNSIDE. - With that understanding, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HOAR. I object to that understanding. Mr. BAILEY. I hope the Senator from Rhode Island will withdraw his motion. Mr. BURNSIDE.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.
Mr. BAILEY. I understand the Senator from Rhode Island to make this proposition, that this bill be the unfinished business to be taken up to-morrow, and that it shall be considered to the exclusion of all other measures before the Senate until a vote shall be reached.

Mr. BURNSIDE. That is my proposition.

Mr. BAILEY. That no other matter shall interpose until this bill

Mr. HOAR. I do not object to that.
Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Nobody objects to that.
Mr. BURNSIDE. With that understanding, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

ate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not agree to that, for one.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Oh, do not interpose any obstacle. It will be done anyway.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The reason why I do not agree to that proposition is that I think it is just as bad in principle, although in practice probably it will do no harm at all, as any of these propositions to tie up the discussion of measures in this body. It might happen and has happened a great many times that something of still larger importance needed to be attended to, and therefore I am not willing to make agreements of that kind. I am willing and shall be glad to stay now. I stand by the agreement although I was not a party to it and would have objected to it if I had known it was proposed, not on the ground of want of friendship for the bill but on quite a difon the ground of want of friendship for the bill but on quite a different ground.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I wish to say to the Senate that so far as I am concerned I do not want to delay its action. I feel very sure that nothing I can say will enlighten the Senate.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I hope the Senate will now proceed to vote on the bill, carrying out the understanding.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It is true I did expect to have an opportunity of saying a few words on this bill within the time allotted for its consideration, but it so happened that the time was occupied by other Senators. I do not complain of that at all. I am willing to yield now, and I am a friend of the bill, but I thought that I would have an opportunity before four o'clock to say a few words. That was denied me, and I yield now, and state to the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Rhode Island that I do not wish this matter post-poned on my account. poned on my account.

Mr. FERRY. It is evident that the Senate is not ready to vote on this question to-night. It is now five o'clock. One hour has transpired since the time fixed by the agreement. It is also really evident that if we adjourn now this measure cannot be removed out of the way to-morrow without a majority vote of the Senate, and that the final vote will be taken to-morrow is evident by what has been disclosed by different Senators. I therefore move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. MAXEY. I hope the Senator will change that motion to one for an executive session, as there is important executive business to be attended to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. FERRY. One or two Senators have intimated to me that my motion is a violation of the agreement. It is not so in my understanding, because this bill will be the unfinished business, but as they say so, I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee to the bill. The amendment will be read.

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President, it is manifest that at this late hour of the evening we shall not be apt to get along well with this bill to-night, and I know myself that one or two Senators left the Chamber after the hour of four had passed, thinking there would be no vote to-day. I would suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island, as a friend of the bill, that he give notice that this bill is the unfinished business for to-morrow, as it is, and that to-morrow he will ask the friends of the bill to stand by until a vote is taken, and I think there can be no difficulty about that. There will be no objection to Mr. BURNSIDE. If it will not be construed that I am violating the unanimous consent of the Senate by moving an adjournment under conditions of that kind, I move now that the Senate adjourn, with the understanding that I shall ask the Senate to consider this with the understanding that I shall ask the Senate to consider this bill as unfinished business to-morrow, and ask them to adhere to the bill to-morrow until it is disposed of. I do not ask unanimous consent; I merely give notice that I will expect the friends of the bill to stand by the bill to-morrow.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will stand by you, for one.

Mr. BURNSIDE. With that understanding, I move, if I am not violating the agreement myself, that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator ask unanimous consent of the Senate?

Mr. BURNSIDE. I do not. I move an adjournment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island moves that the Senate adjourn.

moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock and two minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 16, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. Harrison, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Ways and Means to report to the House a concurrent resolution, fixing the time for the usual holiday vacation.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That when the two Houses of Congress adjourn on Wednesday, the 22d instant, it shall be to meet on Wednesday, the 5th of January next.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I demand the previous question on the

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I demand the previous question of the resolution.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 84, noes 29.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois, and Mr. McMILLIN made the point of order that no quorum was present.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. McMILLIN, and Mr. SINGLETON of

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 101, noes 46.

Mr. FINLEY. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 125, nays 74, not voting 92; as follows:

Hiscock would vote "aye," Mr. Clymer "no."
Mr. O'CONNOR with Mr. MARTIN of North Carolina.
Mr. SMITH, of New Jersey, with Mr. Newberry.
Mr. Hubbell with Mr. Wells. If Mr. Wells were present, Mr.
Hubbell would vote "no."
Mr. Berry with Mr. Pacheco.
Mr. James with Mr. O'Brien.
Mr. Whitte with Mr. Persons

Mr. WHITE with Mr. PERSONS.

Mr. Miller with Mr. Talbott. Mr. Ballou with Mr. Carlisle. Mr. Lapham with Mr. Tucker.

Mr. VALENTINE with Mr. DAVIDSON.

Mr. Young, of Tennessee, with Mr. Houk. Mr. McMahon with Mr. NEAL. Mr. Hutchins with Mr. Starin.

Mr. Conger with Mr. House, on the vote to adjourn over.

Mr. Wells with Mr. Hatch, on this question. If Mr. Wells were present, Mr. Hatch would vote "no."

Mr. Rothwell with Mr. Shelley, on this vote. If Mr. Shelley were present, Mr. Rothwell would vote "no."

Mr. King with Mr. Hawley, on all questions for the 16th and 17th

Mr. WILBER with Mr. SMITH of Georgia, until the holiday recess.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. JOHNSTON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6620) to further amend section 3385 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE OF A BILL.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a correction in the REC-ORD, as I think in reference to a matter of fact, and also as to what I know in reference to the rules of this House. A bill was offered a few days ago by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MORTON] which I think should be referred to the Committee on the Interoceanic Ship-Canal, but which was referred to the Committee on Commerce. I ask, therefore that it he referred to the proper committee, which is in my therefore, that it be referred to the proper committee, which is in my judgment the Committee on the Interoceanic Ship-Canal. I thought judgment the Committee on the Interoceanic Ship-Canal. I thought the Speaker had already so ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, if his attention had been called to the fact at the time, would have so ordered, and is not absolutely certain but that he did order the reference. But the RECORD can only be changed by the House. The gentleman now asks that the reference of that bill be changed from the Committee on Commerce to the Committee on Interoceanic Ship-Canal.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular

Mr. UPSON. I ask, Mr. Speaker, unanimous consent to take from the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House Senate bill No.

The SPEAKER. The regular order having been demanded the Chair has no option but to recognize that demand. The regular order is the morning hour.

Mr. HUBBELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with the morning hour to-day, and I give notice if that motion prevails that I shall move to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the pension appropriation bill.

CLERKS TO COMMITTEE ON INVALID PENSIONS.

Mr. BOYD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a privileged report from the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman that he withhold the report until after the consideration of the appropriation bill referred to by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BOYD. This will take but a very short time for consideration.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman insists, the Chair will recognize

Mr. BOYD. I would prefer to have it considered at once. The Committee on Accounts recommend the adoption of a substitute for the original resolution submitted to that committee. The SPEAKER. The substitute will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Invalid Pensions be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to continue in their employ three additional clerks during the remainder of the present Congress, who shall be paid at the rate of $6 per diem during the session, out of the contingent fund of the House; and it shall be the duty of the said additional clerks to aid and assist the members of the committee in examining the evidence and preparing the reports upon bills referred to said committee, and to perform such other labor as may be required of them.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred a resolution authorizing the Committee on Invalid Pensions to continue to employ three additional clerks during the remainder of the present Congress, respectfully report that they have carefully considered the same, and find that the great amount of business before the said committee renders the assistance asked for very necessary, and they therefore recommend the passage of the resolution.

The substitute was agreed to.

Mr. BOYD moved to reconsider the vote by which the substitute was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HUBBELL. I move to dispense with the morning hour with a view to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the pension appropriation bill. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan moves to dispense with the morning hour.

The motion was agreed to.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HUBBELL. I beg leave now, Mr. Speaker, to report back from the Appropriations Committee the bill making appropriations to pay invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and I move that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. SPARKS. I reserve all points of order on that.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 6532) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882.

The SPEAKER. The report accompanying the bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The estimates upon which the bill is based are to be found on page 119 of the Book of Estimates.

The total amount recommended in this bill aggregates $50,000,000, or exactly the amount recommended by the estimates. The appropriations for the same purpose for the current fiscal year of 18s1 amount to $32,404,000, and it is estimated that a further appropriation of $17,500,000 will be needed to complete the service that a intracer appropriated of $\psi_1$, $\psi_2$, $\psi_2$.

The committee have embodied in the bill the following clause, which is recommended by the Commissioner of Pensions, to wit:

"Accrued pensions due the Indian pensioners shall, in the discretion of the Commissioner of Pensions, be paid in installments."

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. COFFROTH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the fellowing titles; when the Speaker signed the same: An act (S. No. 992) granting a pension to Mrs. Julia Gardner Tyler, widow of ex-President Tyler; and

An act (S. No. 148) granting an increase of pension to J. J. Purman.

POST-OFFICE DEFICIENCY.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Postmaster-General, transmitting an additional item of appropriation required to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the Post-Office Department for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. BALLOU till after the holidays, on account of sickness.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HUBBELL. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. McMillin in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. No. 6532) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882.

Mr. HUBBELL. I move that the first and formal reading of this bill in Committee of the Whole he dispensed with bill in Committee of the Whole be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HUBBELL. This bill appropriates $50,000,000 to meet the demands of the Pension Bureau for the next fiscal year. By the bill of last year, $32,404,000 were appropriated for like purposes during the current fiscal year. The Commissioner of Pensions, however, in his report says there will be a deficiency of $17,500,000 for the present fiscal year, which brings the expenses of the present fiscal year close up to $50,000,000. From the data before the committee, it was evident that the requirements of the bureau for the next fiscal year would be comal to if not greater than those for this fiscal year. Hence would be equal to if not greater than those for this fiscal year. Hence the sum recommended by the Commissioner was incorporated in the

This fiscal year, for Army invalids, widows, minors, and dependent relatives, survivors and widows of the war of 1812, $31,475,000 were appropriated, while in this bill $48,400,000 are asked to be appropri-

For similar Navy pensions $575,000 were appropriated for the present fiscal year, while for the coming fiscal year $1,100,000 are asked to be appropriated.

For pay and allowances for salary, &c., the present year $253,000 were appropriated, while for the next year $250,000 are asked to be appropriated.

For examining surgeons $101,000 were appropriated for this year, while for the next fiscal year this bill contains an appropriation for that purpose of $250,000.

The total appropriations in this bill reach $50,000,000, as I have stated, to meet the current expenses of the bureau for the coming

In addition to making these appropriations the committee have inserted in this bill a proviso for the payment of pensions to the Indian pensioners, as follows:

And provided further. That the amount expended for each of the above items shall be accounted for separately. And accrued pension due the Indian pensioners shall, in the discretion of the Commissioners of Pensions, be paid in installments.

There are one hundred and sixty-seven Indian pensioners from the three regiments recruited in the Indian Territory, payments to whom are now due or will soon be due, and must soon be met. In nearly all of these cases a large amount goes as a first payment, and existing law requires it to be sent in one payment, by draft or check on some assistant treasurer. The Commissioner in his report says there are no banks and no facilities for making exchange in that Indian Territory, and his belief is that if the whole payment goes to each one of these Indians at once, speculators, parties interested in getting this money, will be quite likely to get a portion of it from them. Hence his suggestion in this respect is that this money should be paid in installments of one or two hundred dollars. The committee concluded to leave it entirely to his discretion, allowing him to pay this money in installments, to meet the exigencies of each case, instead of money in installments, to meet the exigencies of each case, instead of money in installments, to meet the exigencies of each case, instead or making it all in one payment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, ordinarily this is all that would have to be said upon a bill making appropriations for the payment of pensioners of the Government. In what I am about to say I wish it distinctly understood by this House and the country that I am not opposed to the payment of pensions to worthy pensioners, to persons who are entitled to receive pensions. I not only desire this, but I desire that the support aball he made as seen a preside. payments shall be made as soon as possible. From what little study I have given this subject, I regard it as one of the greatest that can engage the attention of the American Congress. It is so appalling in its magnitude as to almost stagger one who looks at and computes the vast aggregates that must be paid out under our present system of pensions.

When the bill for arrears of pension was passed, we were told that it only required a few millions of dollars to meet the payments con-it only required a few millions of dollars to meet the payments contemplated by the act.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask my friend from Michigan whether the highest estimate made in the discussion was not $25,000,000?

Mr. HUBBELL. It was $25,000,000, I think; but that is not material. Up to November 1, 1880, we had paid out for arrearages alone $24,600,487.27. We had appropriated for that purpose $25,515,000. The average arrearage of each pensioner already on the list has been officially computed to be $560.58.

At the same date—that of the report—there were in the office of

The average arrearage of each pensioner already on the list has been officially computed to be $560.58.

At the same date—that of the report—there were in the office of live, original claims, after making all deductions, 282,597 still pending; and the average amount of arrears on first payment is $1,100. Now suppose—and I take it it will be a fair supposition—that 30 per cent. of these 282,597 claims are disallowed. Then there would still be 197,818 claims yet to be paid; and at an average of $1,100 each, what is yet to be paid would amount to $217,599,800, making the total cost of arrearages thus far, including that estimated, $242,200,287.27. This will be reduced somewhat by the fact that there are yet 1,238 claimants to come in, in whose case the average amount of the arrears is $560.58; and still further by the fact that at the date of the report, November 1, the Commissioner had at his disposal for that purpose $1,098,334.04 still available for payment of arrears. Hence, if we look, as we ought to look, at the probable aggregate of the arrears of pensions alone, we will find, by adding the amount appropriated ($25,515,000) to the amount estimated, ($217,599,800,) after deducting 30 per cent. of claimants, as before stated, that it will reach the astounding sum of $243,114,800. That is the first payment. That is to commence with. to commence with.

In addition to that, I will state that the further annual payment to each pensioner, after the first payment has been made, is $103.34. And I will state another thing: the average age of the pensioners on our pension list is only forty-one years. Hence we must meet this state of facts: the pension list to-day requires for annual payments the sum of $25,917,907.60. To that is to be added the 197,818 cases, requiring for their payment $20,442,512.12 more, making a total annual appropriation of $46,660,418.72. This sum, of course, will decrease a little after some years; but we must remember that the average age of our present pensioners is forty-one years, and that new claims are being filed at the rate of fifteen hundred per month, which, under the provisions of the arrearages act, are not entitled to arrears.

That is the present condition of our pension affairs—the problem which we are called upon to solve. I claim that it is well worthy the consideration of this House and the country whether some safeguard cannot be thrown around this system; whether something cannot be devised in the way of legislation to protect the honest pensioner in his just claim and at the same time prevent the dishonest claimant from defrauding a beneficent Government; for it is the part of prudence to remember, in full view of the appalling figures here presented, that there are tax-payers in this land as well as pensioners, and that there is a limit to the obligations which it is safe for any nation to assume.

I now desire to call the attention of the House briefly to our present system of paying pensions. During the last fiscal year the Commissioner of Pensions was enabled under it to save to the Government, sioner of Pensions was enabled under it to save to the Government, by the detection of frauds, out of payments then due, the sum of $425,-309.46; that was the net saving. That saving carries with it a further annual saving of $59,967. Under what circumstances and how was it that this saving has been made?

I hardly think that this House is aware how few safeguards, if any, and arranged the dishursement of this large sum of money. I are placed around the disbursement of this large sum of money. I wish to call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to the only provision of law on our statute-books under which any frauds in regard to pensions can be detected and payment stopped. I ask the attention of members to the peculiar wording of that provision, which is as follows:

SEC. 4744. The Commissioner of Pensions is authorized to detail, from time to time, clerks in his office to investigate suspected attempts at fraud on the Government, through and by virtue of the provisions of the pension law, and to aid in prosecuting any person so offending, with such additional compensation as is customary in cases of special service; any person so detailed shall have the power to administer oaths and take affidavits in the course of any such investigation.

In what condition does that leave the Commissioner? Before he can investigate a case he must have reason to suspect fraud in connection with it. He is authorized to investigate only "suspected attempts at fraud." Although he may have just ground for serious suspicion as to a surgical report, the authority is not conferred upon him to even send a surgeon, in whom the Government has confidence, Therefore, under the system which we have to-day we are making an annual payment of over $24,000,000, of first payments, where the Government is not authorized to make even an insufficient investi-Government is not authorized to make even an insufficient investigation unless it suspects an attempt at fraud, and where by a combination of four clerks in any division of the Pension Bureau the grossest and most gigantic frauds might be perpetrated without the knowledge of the Commissioner or his deputy. And more than that, the Government is paying out this money without any check against the Commissioner of Pensions or his deputies and assistants, and he might by collusion defraud this Government out of millions of dollars and nobody would know it. We require in the payment of money from any other Department of the Government the closest proof and the most diligent examination, and the Department has authority to send special agents to look up testimony and to do anything and everything deemed necessary to protect the interests of the Government, whether fraud is suspected or not.

But in our payment of pensions this large and appalling sum of

But in our payment of pensions this large and appalling sum of money is paid out without any power on the part of the officer placed in charge to examine any cases, save those in connection with which he may suspect some attempt at fraud, and without any such safeguards thrown around the payment as ought to be thrown around it. All that is required to be done is to make out an ex parte prima facie

Now, I do not believe that the soldiers who fought in the war to save this Governmennt and who were wounded in battle are men who would attempt to defraud the Government; not at all. But I do know that from the moment the arrearages bill became a law there has been organized frauds perpetrated on this Government which are simply stupendous. The Commissioner of Pensions informs me, and the press of the country has published it, that he is satisfied that under the present system of paying out pensions over $4,000,000 (and he does not know how much more) has been paid fraudulently out of every fifty millions disbursed.

Mr. SPARKS. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. HUBBELL. Certainly.

Mr. SPARKS. Are we to understand from the argument of the gentleman that he is opposed to the arrearages bill?

Mr. HUBBELL. Not at all; I disclaimed that at the outset. I am only calling attention to the loose manner in which this arrearage is being disbursed, and I desire to get the attention of Congress sufficiently well directed to this matter so as to ascertain whether in Now, I do not believe that the soldiers who fought in the war to being disbursed, and I desire to get the attention of Congress sufficiently well directed to this matter so as to ascertain whether in view of the fact that so much money is to be paid out it is not our duty to provide necessary checks to secure its payment to honest claimants. That is my proposition.

Just think of it. The Commissioner of Pensions distributes annually in first payments $24,000,000 on proofs submitted to him by clerks in his bureau, proofs simply ex parte and prima facie. Experience has shown that a fraudulent claim will always be supported by apparently the best proofs. When men undertake to perpetrate by apparently the best proofs. When men undertake to perpetrate fraud they will know how to do it, and the danger is that they will make all the circumstances dovetail so nicely as to clude the suspicion of the Commissioner and secure payment of the fraudulent claim.

Let me call the attention of the House to some of the frauds which have here perpetrated and recommendate the commissioner and secure payment of the frauds which have here perpetrated and recommendate to the commissioner and secure payment of the frauds which have been perpetrated and recommendate the commissioner and secure payment of the frauds which have been perpetrated and recommendate the commissioner and secure payment of the frauds which the commissioner and secure payment of the frauds which the commissioner and secure payment of the frauds which the commissioner and secure payment of the frauds which the commissioner and secure payment of the frauds which the commissioner and secure payment of the frauds which the commissioner and secure payment of the frauds which the commissioner and secure payment of the frauds which the commissioner and secure payment of the frauds which the commissioner and secure payment of the frauds which the commissioner and secure payment of the frauds which the commissioner and secure payment of the frauds which the commissioner and secure payment of the frauds which the commissioner and secure payment of the frauds which the commissioner and secure payment of the frauds which the commissioner and secure payment of the frauds which the commissioner and secure payment of the frauds which the commissioner and secure payment of the frauds which the commissioner and the commissioner a have been perpetrated under our present system. I send to the Clerk's desk, to be read, the history of what is known as the Maine case, in which a former clerk was discharged from the Department, and by fraudulent practices succeeded in obtaining nearly $20,000 as pensions for seven fictitious claimants.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

In 1864, George Prince, of Bath, Maine, then a clerk in the Pension Office, began a series of frauds through which to procure the allowance of pensions to fictitious widows of officers whose rank gave high rates—monthly payments. While employed in, and after he left the office, he secured the issuance of seven pension certificates, and by adroit arrangements at different post-offices came into the possession of the letters addressed to the supposed pensioners, and by the commission of nearly a thousand forgeries, extending over fourteen years, he obtained possession of the pension checks, and appropriated the proceeds, amounting in the aggregate to nearly $21,000, to his own use.

In the commission of these frauds he forged court records, having abstracted the genuine originals from other claims while a clerk, and used fictitious seals obtained by him for the purpose, and finally secured an appointment as justice of the peace to enable him the more readily to defraud the Government.

He was arrested, plead guilty, and sentenced to ten years' imprisonment, and a civil suit instituted in the State courts to recover to the Government the amount paid in these cases, which was compromised upon the refundment of $15,000.

Mr. HUBBELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire also to submit the state.

Mr. HUBBELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire also to submit the statement of another case. These are specimen cases of the frauds which are being perpetrated under our present system.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Fourteen claims were filed from Detroit, Michigan, alleged to have been made by the relatives of deceased colored soldiers. Eugene Fecht, of that city, prepared and filed them as attorney of record. Suspicion having been excited in one case, investigation was ordered therein, and the facts developed pointed to the probability of an extended conspiracy between Fecht and James Richardson, colored, and numerous other colored people influenced by them, to perpetrate extreme frauds; thereupon an investigation was ordered in all the claims having the characteristic of the fraud.

The results, so far as the investigations have been completed, show that all the testimony filed in the Pension Office in these claims is false, and those connected with it, about twenty persons, have been arrested, and most of them indicted, and all who have been arraigned have plead guilty, except Fecht and Richardson. A trial of the two, on one indictment, resulted in the acquittal of Fecht and conviction of Richardson. Several indictments are still pending against the former. Nearly all these claims having been lately filed are still pending, and the actual loss to the Government has been small, but had they not been discovered it would have been at least $30,000.

Mr. HUBBELLL. From these statements gentlemen may form some

Mr. HUBBELL. From these statements gentlemen may form some idea of the kind of frauds which are perpetrated under the present idea of the kind of frauds which are perpetrated under the present system.

The Pension Bureau is to-day literally snowed under with pending claims, and the chances are that fraudulent claims which have backing will be the first to be pushed through. Here, sir, the first payment is $1,100. Can it be possible that by the arrearage act we propose to pension every camp-follower, every man who without deing any service was injured during the war of the rebellion?

Mr. Chairman, it is time to talk plainly and squarely to the American people upon this subject. While I am in favor of paying pensions to deserving soldiers, and in favor of devising some system which shall give it to him speedily, yet I do not believe that all the pending claims are of that kind; nor do I believe that the slow system under which we are now operating will ever enable us to pay to the honest claimant his just dues. It is time that the American Congress should look this issue fairly in the face. There should be no sentimentality about it. We have undertaken to pay out nearly $300,000,000 to the defenders of our country, if they are honestly entitled to it; but, in God's name, Mr. Chairman, let us throw around this system all the safeguards that we can. Let us not pay out this money on a mere ex parte and prima facie case, made up perhaps by an incompetent clerk. It seems to me that we owe it not only to the honest soldier who is entitled to our bounty, but to the laboring interest and to the tax-payers to see to it that we not only do equal and speedy justice to worthy pensioners and pension claimants, but that we do all in our power as legislators to provide every necessary safeguard and give ample power to investigate or do anything else which ought to be done in order to prevent the payment of a single sourious claim. While the Treasury Department disburses its millsateguard and give ampie power to investigate or do anything eise which ought to be done in order to prevent the payment of a single spurious claim. While the Treasury Department disburses its millions without any allegation or suspicion that 10 per cent. of such disbursements is paid out illegally, it seems strange to me that disbursements cannot be made from the Pension Office without such allegations, and that we cannot determine between those who are justly entitled to the bounty of the Government and those who are

It will thus be seen that under our present system anybody can get a pension who is willing to take a false oath. A man may put in claims of persons who never existed as widows of private soldiers or of officers. The colonel, the major, or some officer of a company may have been killed; and knowing that no one will ever inquire into it, a man may get affidavits that the fraudulent claimant applying is the widow of such officer. All the proofs may be apparently in proper shape, and yet the claimant be a fictitious character. Although I have no present definite plan by which these immense disbursements may be guarded, yet it does seem to me that the utmost publicity should be given to all proceedings of this kind. The applicant for a pension might be required to establish his claim just as any other claim against the Government is established. There should be some plain, practical, business-like way of making proof in open daylight It will thus be seen that under our present system anybody can get plain, practical, business-like way of making proof in open daylight and where the real facts are known. Then if we owe the money, let us pay it promptly.

Mr. Chairman, I had desired to talk further, but my voice fails me, and I must desist for the present.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Chairman, in much that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hubbell] has said, I concur. Our pension system, as we all understand, grows out of the desire on the part of Congress to we all understand, grows out of the desire on the part of Congress to make a proper provision for those who have incurred disability in the military or naval service. Under any system which could be devised, parties might doubtless in some cases obtain pensions fraudulently; but that it is the duty of our Government, and of all governments, to pension men who have been disabled in its military and naval service, all good men, I think, will concur. That is the object and only purpose of our pension laws.

Since I have been in Congress I have on several occasions tried to throw safeguards around the Treasury to protect it from frauds in this direction. I have tried to reduce the cost of the service by this direction. I have tried to reduce the cost of the service by lopping off needless expenditures, and have sought to relieve the service of unnecessary officials. For instance, on one occasion I made an effort to get rid of the pension agents and to establish a pension bureau whose operations should be plain and simple and less cumbersome than the present system. In the Forty-fifth Congress, however, (and that is the point to which I wish now to direct the attention of this committee,) an attempt was made to remedy that which was clearly seen to be an inequality of pensioners.

Under the pension laws there were certain limitations as to the

Under the pension laws there were certain limitations as to the time within which applications should be made, and which regulated the dates from which pensions should begin, &c.; &c. There were parties who failed to apply within the limited periods, and others who, although they applied at a proper time, yet, having had insufficient papers or proofs accompanying or subsequently presented to make good their applications, failed to be successful, and yet the applicants were as meritorious in every respect as those who had applicants were as meritorious in every respect as those who had been expeditious and successful, and to whom pensions were granted.

In other words, while many obtained pensions beginning from date of discharge or disability, a large number of others equally meritorious had theirs for many years delayed, and when granted dated from issuance of pension and not from date of discharge or disability, on account of not being acted upon within the prescribed limitation, to which should also be added all applications then pending or subsequently to come before the Pension Bureau. sequently to come before the Pension Bureau.

Sixteen or more years may have passed and men failed to get their Sixteen or more years may have passed and men failed to get their pensions, while others, standing upon precisely the same ground, had been drawing theirs during this interval. For example, a man is pensioned, say sixteen years ago, and although another man belonging to the same class under the law, having suffered the same disability, yet owing to some insufficiency of papers or proofs, has during all that time been delayed, and not until the sixteen years have elapsed received his pension. Will any one say that he should not be allowed for the same time and at the same rate of pay equally as the other? And this is the principle upon which the arreary-of-pension act is And this is the principle upon which the arrears-of-pension act is

Mr. HUBBELL. I have not claimed, Mr. Chairman, that the gen-tleman in such a case ought not to have the same pension as the one to whom he refers.

Mr. SPARKS. I made the inquiry of the gentleman during the course of his speech whether he was antagonizing the arrears act, and he told me that he was not. Up to the time of that inquiry I could not tell whether he was for it or against it. He told me then that he was for it, and I took his word for it.

Mr. HUBBELL. For what?

Mr. SPARKS. That you did not antagonize the arrears-of-pension

Mr. HUBBELL. Not at all.
Mr. SPARKS. I am now, Mr. Chairman, speaking in reference to that act and defending it as a simple act of justice by the Government to its pensioners.

Mr. HUBBELL. The gentleman will allow me to put myself right.

I have not attempted in any way nor intended in any way to oppose the arrearages bill. I acknowledge its justice. All I have tried to do is to show that under our present system the Government is liable in carrying out that law to suffer great frauds. The honest pensioner is entitled to it.

Mr. SPARKS. Precisely. I now understand the gentleman's position, and respect it; and not in answer to the gentleman or opposing him, but of my own volition, I propose defending or attempting to defend that arrears act. When the gentleman interrupted me I was stating the fact that there were men who had suffered the same disability and yet some had obtained their pensions many years ago and been drawing it ever since, while others had failed to secure theirs until these years had passed, and though of the same class of disability the latter had been deprived of theirs for these years. That act was passed to remedy this injustice, so that one man entitled under the law to a pension should not draw a pension for years while another equally entitled was prevented from receiving it. It was exactly to meet that class of cases the arrears-of-pension bill was passed. It was, I think, put through the House, being reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by the distinguished gentleman the Committee on invalid Pensions by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Rice, then chairman of that committee.

Mr. PORT. I ask my colleague to yield to me in order that I may set him right, for I see that he is mistaken in his last statement. That bill did not come from the Committee on Invalid Pensions. It was offered by the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. Cummings, under a suspension of the rules, and passed. The bill which was reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions contained other provisions, and was not the bill which was passed at all.

Mr. HASKELL. If the gentleman from Illinois on my left and the gentleman from Illinois on my right will yield a moment I will

Mr. SPARKS. I submit whether or not I have stated it correctly.

Mr. HASKELL. No, you have not. That arrears bill was passed under a suspension of the rules, on my motion, and not on any re-under a suspension of the rules, on my motion, and not on any report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. FORT. Exactly what I stated.

Mr. HASKELL. The other bill was a bill introduced by the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. Cummings, which had been beaten once in the House. On my motion the rules were suspended and it was passed without any report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. FORT. Precisely. So I am right.

Mr. McMahon. Let me make a statement.

Mr. OSMER. I wish to say a word.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Chairman, I must insist on retaining the floor if I have it.

if I have it.

Mr. WARNER. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kansas a ques-

Mr. SPARKS. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio on my right for a moment for a moment.

Mr. McMAHON. The question I wish to ask the gentleman from Kansas is this: whether the bill as it finally passed was not in the Forty-fourth Congress reported by the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Rice, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions?

Mr. HASKELL. I desire to say that the bill as it passed was not the bill ever drawn by the gentleman from Ohio. It was not the bill reported by that committee. It was not a copy of any bill that Committee is the property of t

General Rice had ever seen, let alone any bill which he had drafted. The committee never agreed to the bill. It was a bill that was amended, not much over fifteen minutes before it was passed, in one important particular. The real author of the bill was the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. Cummings.

Mr. SPARKS. I wish to say to the gentleman from Kansas that in my opinion—

Mr. HUBBELL. I have not yielded the floor, but merely suspended my remarks because my voice gave out, and the gentleman from Illinois is occupying my time.

Mr. SPARKS. I submit to the Chair that I took the floor in my

Mr. SPARKS. I submit to the Chair that I took the floor in my own right, having waited until the gentleman was through.
Mr. HUBBELL. I have not taken my seat at all.
Mr. SPARKS. I do not claim to be occupying the floor as a part of the gentleman's time.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Illinois in his own right, supposing the gentleman from Michigan had righted the floor.

wielded the floor.

Mr. HUBBELL. I did not, sir. I was obliged to suspend temporarily, because my voice had become hoarse.

Mr. SPARKS. I will be through in a few moments. I do not think ve ought to quibble about time on this bill, but I thought I had the floor in my own right when I commenced.

I want to call the attention of the House to the fact and to say to the gentleman from Kansas that the bill he is so anxious to assume the gentleman from Kansas that the bill he is so anxious to assume the paternity of was, in my judgment, an extremely inequitable and unjust bill, a miserably gotten-up affair. That is my opinion about it. I think (as I recollect now) that the gentleman from Kansas, and perhaps some others, after General Rice, of Ohio, had been maturing a bill quite similar to theirs, attempted to capture the thunder of that gentleman and jump in ahead of him with their bill. But they succeeded, as I propose to show, in getting up an extremely poor affair. Now, Mr. Chairman, what was that bill? It made provision for paying arrears of pensions to those pensioners who had come in late, about after this shape; here is a pensioner of a certain class and paying arrears of pensions to those pensioners who had come in late, about after this shape: here is a pensioner of a certain class, and who is classed according to his disability; his pension begins from the date of his discharge or disability, say at the rate of $4 per month. The pension runs on, and in the mean time age is progressing with him. That increases his disability, so that in, say, four years his pension is increased to $8 per month. Age still increases the disability, and in four years more his pension is increased to $12 per month. Still the same cause is operating with the pensioner for four years longer, and his pension is increased to $16 per month.

Now, the Rice bill (which the gentleman from Kansas wants to take from him) made provision that the pensioner now being put on the roll, being of the same class, and of course now entitled to and the roll, being of the same class, and of course now entitled to and the roll, being of the same class, and of course now entitled to and granted a pension of the same amount per month as the other now receives, should go back upon that same pay to the beginning; that is to say, at the rate of $16 per month. That would make his arrears for the whole time include the additional payment which had been added from time to time in consequence of increased disability growing out of additional years. Such an inequitable rating as this, it is clear to all, would be manifestly unjust to the old pensioner. It is founded in wrong, and is a clear misconception of equality between these parties. That two men, being of the same class of pensioners, should receive from the Treasury a vastly different sum of money, the one from the other, is clearly unjust. Yet that was the effect of

Toward the end of the Forty-fifth Congress I was instructed by the Committee on Appropriations, of which I was then a member, to report the appropriation bill to pay these arrears, with an amendment therein to the Rice bill, that I will be modest enough to say I suggested and matured, by the aid of the Commissioner of Pensions, which was incorporated in the body of the appropriation bill, which made guarded provisions for fairly and equitably grading the pensions paid, going back according to respective increases from time to time, so that each and all of the pensioners of the same class should be placed upon the same basis, and each and all receive precisely the same amount of pay, and saving to the Government many millions of

Mr. Chairman, if you remember, the Secretary of the Treasury had estimated that it would take about (in round numbers) $42,000,000 to meet these payments under the Rice bill. Yet we met them with this clause in that appropriation bill with $26,800,000, saving to the Treasury some $15,000,000 and equalizing these pensioners as to their arrears. Hence, that thing which the gentleman from Kansas is so arrears. Hence, that thing which the gentleman from Kansas is so anxious to father, and which he was so anxious to jump in ahead of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, (thereby using his thunder,) was a measure founded in wrong, producing injustice and inequality, and calculated not only to produce bad feeling among the pensioners all over the country, but to deplete the Treasury unjustly and unnecessarily of many millions of dollars.

Mr. HUBBELL. I now yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HASKELL: Mr. Chairman, the honorable gentleman from Illinois has taken occasion to accentuate a declaration that in the pasage of the arrears of rengion bill, upon my motion on the 19th day of nois has taken occasion to accentuate a declaration that in the passage of the arrears-of-pension bill, upon my motion on the 19th day of June, there was an attempt to steal somebody's thunder, and he asserts, and the gentleman from Ohio also asserts, that the bill passed on that day, which is the arrears-of-pension bill, the law of the land to-day, was a fac simile of a bill introduced by the gentleman from Ohio, (Mr. Rice.)

Mr. SPARKS. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I did not state that bill was an exact fac simile or copy of the bill introduced by the gentleman from Ohio, (Mr. Rice.) I believe I did not use the offensive word "steal," either; but I said, or meant to say, that the gentleman had attempted to use the thunder of the gentleman from Ohio, and presented substantially the same bill as the gentleman from Ohio presented.

Mr. HASKELL. And, Mr. Chairman, the statement that I took a bill of Mr. Rice's, or that it was a copy of Mr. Rice's bill—Mr. SPARKS. I did not state it.

Mr. SPARKS. I did not state it.
Mr. HASKELL. Or that it was a fac simile of Mr. Rice's bill—
Mr. SPARKS. I did not so state.
Mr. HASKELL. Or substantially Mr. Rice's bill—
Mr. SPARKS. That is about what I said.
Mr. HASKELL. Or in any possible way or form had any connection whatever with his bill, or that I had intrenched upon some patent right of Mr. Rice's in the formation of that bill, I beg leave to deny in the most emphatic terms. There has been enough of misrepresentation in this country concerning this agrees of pension bill resentation in this country concerning this arrears-of-pension bill without being called upon to submit to any more of it. Now, I hold in my hand the bill of the gentleman from Ohio, (Mr. Rice,) that he sought earnestly to pass through this House and Congress, and that his committee was anxious to pass through this House and Con-

Mr. SPARKS. A very bad bill. Mr. HASKELL. And the seventh section of that bill, which is said to be an exact copy of the arrears-of-pension bill which passed upon my motion, reads as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, anthorized and required to restore to the pension-rolls the names of all invalid pensioners now living and who were stricken therefrom on account of disloyalty and pay them pensions from the 26th day of December, 1868, at the rate at which they would have been entitled to receive pay had they not been dropped from the pension-rolls.

That was the bill of the honorable gentleman from Ohio. That proposed to strike down the distinguishing differences between a man proposed to strike down the distinguishing differences between a man who had ever been loyal to his country and to his flag and to place upon the same footing and the same plane with the loyal men the men whose names had been dropped from the pension-roll for disloyalty to that flag. And the honorable gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] claims that when I secured or helped to secure the passage of the present arrears bill, that left out this obnoxious and this outrageous section, I was stealing the thunder of the honorable gentleman from Ohio. I did not care to steal that particular kind of thunder that lies embalmed in the seventh section of the Rice bill man from Ohio. I did not care to steal that particular kind of thunder that lies embalmed in the seventh section of the Rice bill.

Mr. SPARKS. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. HASKELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPARKS. I think I did not use the offensive word "steal," and would prefer the gentleman would not use it again. If I did use it, I know it is offensive and I should not have used it.

Mr. HASKELL. I think the gentleman did use the word.

Mr. SPARKS. If I did, I beg pardon. It is not a proper phrase for a member of Congress to use.

Mr. HASKELL. I do not take any offense. I desire to state further that I hold in my hand the RECORD containing the proceedings at the time this bill was passed. I quote from the report as follows:

time this bill was passed. I quote from the report as follows:

Mr. Banning. I understand that this is the bill reported from the Committee on Pensions and recommended by them.

Mr. Riddle. No, sir; it is not the bill.

The Speaker pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. Banning. I ask for the reading of that section which was not contained in the bill reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. Rice, of Ohio. This bill was not reported from the committee at all.

Mr. Rice, of Ohio, further said :

I will state that it is not the bill. I have been trying to get the bill reported unanimously from the committee acted upon, but have failed to do so.

and the bill reported unanimously from the committee that he referred to, and the one he tried to get action upon, was the bill that put the disloyal soldier side by side with the loyal one. It was to avoid just exactly that particular trap set for the Union soldiers of this country that I made the motion on that day to suspend the rules and take from the Calendar and pass the Cummings bill; because I knew that before that session adjourned, if it was in the power of that Pensions Committee, headed by the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Rice, he would force this House to a vote upon a bill that was obnoxious to every loyal man in the nation. For the purpose of avoiding that vote and getting a fair and square vote upon the idea and the issue of granting arrears to the loyal soldiers of this country I made that motion, and the bill passed.

Mr. KEIFER. Before the gentleman passes from that point I would wish him to state if he remembers the number of democrats who voted against the bill and the number of republicans who voted against it, against the bill and the number of republicans who voted against it, if there were any. My recollection is that 61 democrats voted against the bill and not a single republican.

Mr. HASKELL. Not one republican voted against the bill. There were 61 nays—all democrats.

I desire further, since this question has come up and since some-body is supposed to be surreptitiously gobbling somebody else's thunder, to read a statute of the United States which was sought to be repealed by this bill, unanimously reported by the Committee on Pensions, and which the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. Rice, tried to pass but failed. It is as follows:

SEC. 4716. No money on account of pension shall be paid to any person or to the widow, children, or heirs of any deceased person who in any manner voluntarily engaged in or aided or abetted the late rebellion against the authority of the United States.

That statute was to be repealed by the Rice bill.
[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. SPARKS rose.
Mr. HUBBELL. I yield the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] a few minutes more.
Mr. SPARKS. I thought the time of the gentleman had expired.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was under the impression that the gentleman from Michigan had yielded the floor without reserving the balance of his time, and therefore he permitted the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] to go on for the time he desired. The Chair finds he was mistaken, and now makes reparation by recognizing the gentleman in charge of the bill.
Mr. HUBBELL. I yield three minutes more to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. HASKELL. I have read the section of the United States statute that prohibits the payment of pension to any soldier or any person who aided or abetted the cause of the rebellion; and I have said the Rice bill repealed that section. The Rice bill provides as follows:

That sections 4709, 4716, and 4717 are hereby repealed.

I think that disposes of the question as to who has attempted to steal thunder either before the people in the late campaign or upon the floor of this House. Mr. WARNER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman from Michigan

Mr. HUBBELL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WAR-NER,] who desires to ask a question.

Mr. WARNER. We have had a good deal of thunder, whether surreptitious or stolen, in the course of this discussion.

I desire to ask the gentleman who has charge of the bill some questions respecting it. I do not know if he explained in his remarks how much of the sum he appropriated is for arrears and how much is for the annual payments. If he did, I did not hear it, and I will be glad to know.

much is for the annual payments. If he did, I did not hear it, and I will be glad to know.

Mr. HUBBELL. This is for the annual payments.

Mr. WARNER. Is the whole of it for the regular annual payments to pensioners now on the roll? Do I understand the gentleman from Michigan to state that?

Mr. HUBBELL. The items are: Army invalids, $28,000,000; widows, children, and dependent relatives, $17,100,000; survivors and widows of the war of 1812, $3,300,000. Navy pensions: Invalids, $500,000; widows, children, and dependent relatives, $600,000. Then there follow fees to examining surgeons and expenses of pension agents. &c.

I will inform the gentleman from Ohio that the amount of arrears already paid—and there is a surplus yet—has been a separate appropriation. We appropriated by the act of March 3, 1879, for arrears and expenses of disbursement of arrears, $25,015,000. Then by the act of May 31, 1880, we appropriated $500,000. Of the amount appropriated for arrears there is still a surplus of a little over $1,000,000; and there are twelve hundred and thirty-eight cases of seldiers still on the rolls to come in.

Mr. WARNER. Then do I understand from the gentleman that Congress will be called upon this session to pass another bill appropriating for arrearages of pensions for the year for which this appropriation is made?

Mr. HISCOCK. I think we never appropriated for arrearages by itself.

Mr. HUBBELL. Oh, yes, we did. Mr. BLOUNT. We passed a special bill. Mr. ROBINSON. A special appropriation that was passed in a separate bill.

Mr. WARNER. I will repeat my question. Do I understand that this House will be called upon again this session to make another appropriation for arrearages, as distinct from the appropriation for annual payments?

Mr. HUBBELL. No.

Mr. WARNER. This fifty millions, then, covers the entire estimate for pensions and arrears for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882. Is that it?

Mr. HUBBELL. There is no appropriation for arrears.
Mr. HISCOCK. The first appropriation was made for arrears, and I understand that now no appropriation for arrears is included in the annual appropriation bill.

Mr. WARNER. Very good; that may be so for claims that have been allowed. But the Pension Office is allowing new claims every week. Now, does this bill cover the arrears that are expected to arise in the adjustment of new claims?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes; that is, the first payments.

Mr. WARNER. That is what I mean; the first payments under the arrearage bill?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, sir. Mr. COFFROTH. In other words, there are no arrearages any

Mr. WARNER. Very well; this covers the claims arising under the arrearages pension bill. I endeavored at the last session of Congress, against much of what then seemed to me to be unreasonable opposition, to call the attention of the House to the magnitude and gravity of this question; and I am very glad to see now some evidence of more attention being given to it. But the place to modify the law, or to introduce any new provision of law, is not in connection with this appropriation bill. I think this should be passed distinctively as an appropriation bill; and while I think some modification of the law is demanded. If agree in that respect with the gentleman of the law is demanded, (I agree in that respect with the gentleman who has charge of this bill,) I think such modification cannot be con-nected with this appropriation bill, and I do not know that it is proposed to so connect it.

Mr. HUBBELL. I do not propose to do so. I wish to state further that this fifty millions is not all that we will have to appropriate this

Mr. WARNER. That is just what I was trying to get at.
Mr. HUBBELL. It will be all that we will have to appropriate this Congress for the coming fiscal year. But there is a deficiency of about $18,000,000.

Mr. WARNER. For the year ending June 30, 1881?

Mr. HUBBELL. Yes. Mr. WARNER. For what is that?

Mr. HUBBELL. For Army pensions $17,500,000, and for Navy pensions $700,000, making a total of payments for the present fiscal year of $50,000,000. Hence it was that I said the Committee on Appropriations could not at this time attempt to cut down the estimates for the next fiscal year inasmuch as new claims were being allowed for the next fiscal year masmuch as new claims were being anowed all the time.

Mr. WARNER. Nothing is clearer to my mind than that there needs to be a thorough revision of our pension laws and a change made in our machinery for allowing and paying pensions; but I do not think this appropriation bill is the place where it can be done.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. I desire to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. HUBBELL.]

Mr. HUBBELL. I will hear the gentleman.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. According to the estimates before Congress, what proportion of the $48,000,000 appropriated for pensions is for the payment of pensions to the survivors of the war of 1812 and for the payment of pensions to the survivors of the war of 1812 and the widows of the soldiers of that war?

Mr. HUBBELL. For that purpose there is appropriated $3,300,000. Mr. KEIFER. I want to ask the gentleman a question, if he is repared to answer it. On page 2 of this bill, commencing at line 29, I find this proviso:

Provided, That a fee of $1, and no more, shall be paid to the examining surgeon for each examination of a pensioner, as provided by law, &c.

Is that matter now regulated by law? And is the fee here allowed, of $1, the same as now allowed by law?

Mr. HUBBELL. Formerly and until within a few years the fee was $2.

Mr. KEIFER. By law?

Mr. HUBBELL. By appropriation; the fee was fixed in the appropriation bill, as I understand it, in the act.

Mr. KEIFER. In what act?

Mr. HUBBELL. In the act granting pensions; but since it has been reduced to $1 it had been fixed each year in the appropriation

Mr. KEIFER. What was the reason for cutting it down from two dollars to one?

Mr. HUBBELL. Well, I was not in the Committee on Appropriations when it was cut down. The subject has been discussed somewhat, and the Commissioner of Pensions was asked whether this was a sufficient allowance. His reply was that the service was equally as effective with the fee of $1 as it was when we paid $2.

Mr. KEIFER. The gentleman will allow me to say that I think that is very bad logic. I think, after the very appropriate remarks the gentleman has submitted in relation to the necessity of guarding against fraud and imposition upon the Pension Bureau, it would be well enough to pay these persons something commensurate with the value of the services performed.

well enough to pay these persons something commensurate with the value of the services performed.

Mr. HUBBELL. That matter can come in when we consider the bill by paragraphs. If the gentleman wishes, he can move an amendment, and can then get in his thunder.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be now closed, and the bill be read by paragraphs for amendment.

Mr. SPARKS. I presumed when I took the floor before that it was in my corn right.

in my own right.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hubbell] has not yet expired, if he wishes to make further use of it. Mr. Hubbell. I do not.

Mr. SPARKS. Then I understand the gentleman is now through.

Mr. SPARKS. Inen't inderstand the gentleman is now through.
Mr. HUBBELL. Yes, sir.
Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Chairman, in my remarks awhile ago, in regard to the arrears-of-pension bill, I stated rather broadly that the bill was introduced or put through the House by General Rice, then a member from Ohio. I was interrupted at that point by both my colleague [Mr. FORT] and the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. HASKELL,] they showing some disagreement as to the bill that was passed, my colleague insisting that it came from some member from Iowa, while the gentleman from Kansas

Mr. FORT. I beg to correct the gentleman. I was attempting to state that, as I understood, it was the bill originally drawn by the gentleman from Iowa that was put on its passage by the gentleman from Kansas

Mr. SPARKS. Then let us accept that as the correct statement; and that bill was voted for by my colleague, by the gentleman from Kansas, by General Rice, and myself. I assume now, to end it, that there is no doubt about all that. In the statement that it was the bill of General Rice, it seems there is a mistake. But was it not substantially the bill of that gentleman?

In the Forty-fourth Congress the Committee on Invalid Pensions, of which General Rice was a member, if I remember aright, reported through him a bill, which passed this House, (then largely democratic,) substantially if not precisely the same as the bill which the gentleman from Kansas speaks of.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Who originated that bill?

Mr. SPARKS. I do not remember; nor is it important in this con-

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It was originated by General

Mr. SPARKS. Now, in the Forty-fifth Congress, that committee, of which General Rice was then chairman, reported (and if I am correctly informed unanimously) the bill which the gentleman from Kansas now so severely criticises. I am informed that it was unanimously reported, the democrats and republicans of the committee joining in the report. The fact I do not myself pretend to know.

Mr. JOYCE. Does the gentleman from Illinois say that that Mr. SPARKS. The Rice bill. Mr. JOYCE. Was agreed to by the committee unanimously?

Mr. SPARKS. I so understand it.

Mr. JOYCE. It was not.
Mr. SPARKS. Then that is a mistake, is it?
Mr. JOYCE. Yes, sir, I opposed the bill.
Mr. SPARKS. Then there was one member of the committee who

Mr. SPARKS. Then there was one member of the committee who opposed it, was there?

Mr. JOYCE. I was a member of the committee.

Mr. SPARKS. One member, then, of the committee opposed it; yet that committee, embracing as it did several republicans while the majority were democrats, with one dissenting voice only reported the bill which has been so severely criticised by the gentleman from Kansas. The gentleman is severe in his denunciation because, as he tells us, the bill contained a clause "proposing to give pensions to disloyal men." Does the gentleman want that to go to the country as an insinuation that the committee reported a bill to pension those who were known as rebels or confederates? He knows that the clause in were known as rebels or confederates? He knows that the clause in question was no such thing, but related simply to the old men who, having borne our flag gallantly on many of the battle-fields in the war with Great Britain of 1812, had been stricken from the rolls. And that the committee, headed by General Rice, with a number of republican members on it and all agreeing to it, (save one,) reported in that bill the provision to which he takes such serious exceptions, namely, that those old men, having done all they could to preserve the honor of the those old men, having done all they could to preserve the nonor of the country in a war with a foreign power and long past, where there was no disagreement between the members or sections of the Union, should be restored to the pension-roll. That is in fact the special point of objection made by the gentleman from Kansas. He in his extreme loyalty then demanded that those old veterans should be forever dishonored and go begging through life under the curse rather than the blessing of the Government they had fought to save because, forsooth, in an internecine strife they had gone with their sections into it. Now, such glory as that I am willing the gentleman from Kansas shall have and enjoy during his natural life and that it may be buried with him.

and enjoy during his natural life and that it may be buried with him. The gentleman speaks of that bill and the action of General Rice in reporting it as a "trap set to catch loyal men."

Now, sir, General Rice, who was a member of this House for four years, hobbled around here upon an artificial limb, having left one leg upon the battle-field while battling for the Union. We fail to see any battle-scars or hobbling impediments upon the loyal gentleman from Kansas; he has lost neither arm nor leg. I am not a colleague nor an authorized defender of General Rice; he was simply my acquaint-ance and friend; but, sir, I will put his loyalty and his patriotism (throwing in his wooden leg) against the loyalty and patriotism of the gentleman from Kansas.

Sir, have we not had enough of this clap-trap? Is it not about time for gentlemen on the other side to end it? Do they suppose the American people are going to sanction the monstrous idea that a man who risked his life battling for the Union, and left a part of himself upon the battle-field as a sacrifice to his convictions, ever could undertake "to set a trap to catch the loyal gentleman from Kansas?" I trow not. No, sir; the people understand this thing; they appreciate its meaning fully and detest it cordially.

The section referred to proposed in simple justice to restore to the pension-roll those old men whose heads then whitening for the grave had temporarily been stricken from it, and to restore to them the pensions which they had honorably earned in maintaining the honor and glory of our country upon the battle-field in a war long prior to, and having no earthly connection with, the late rebellion.

But, as I have already stated in my remarks, the other bill (whoever may have credit for it) was a mistake, for it failed to do justice having no earthly connection with, the late rebellion.

But, as I have already stated in my remarks, the other bill (whoever may have credit for it) was a mistake, for it failed to do justice to the soldier. It made provision for emptying the Treasury, but it was in fact unequal, unfair, and unjust in its practical purport. And when it came to the Committee on Appropriations to make the appropriations to carry it into effect I had the honor, and am proud of it, to suggest and carry through in the appropriation bill, by "special legislation," if you please, the provision by way of amendment to that arrears act which equalizes these pensions, making them fair, just, and equitable to the pensioners, and satisfactory to them and, I trust, to the country.

Mr. McMAHON. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. SPARKS. With pleasure.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. Chairman, as the bill to which I referred did not become a law, and therefore is not incorporated in any publication, before I sit down I will have it read—the bill to which I referred in the inquiry which I made of my friend from Kansas, [Mr. Hasin the inquiry which I made of my friend from Kansas, [Mr. Has-Kell.] The only question I put to the gentleman from Kansas was this: whether the bill which he passed under a suspension of the rules was not a copy of the bill which had been passed by General

Rice in the Forty-fourth Congress under suspension of the rules?

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. Do you mean passed?

Mr. McMAHON. Yes, I mean passed; and it would have become a law, my friend, if the republican Senate had considered it with the same alacrity that the democratic House did. It was passed March 3, 1877.

Mr. HASKELL. I replied, or I might have replied—and I think I did—that I could not have told what was done in the Forty-fourth Congress. I had reference to the bill reported by this man Rice in the Forty-fifth Congres

Mr. McMAHON. That will all do for a gentleman who is simply speaking about current history, but for one who claims a patent for an invention he must know what is in the Patent Office beside. [Laughter.]
Mr. HASKELL. I did not claim that patent. You are the ones

Mr. HASKELL. I did not claim that patent. You are the ones who claim the patent.

Mr. McMAHON. I stated awhile ago that in the Forty-fourth Congress General Rice, being then a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported a bill from that committee to this House which was put upon the Calendar and was passed by this democratic House and sent to the republican Senate, and there not considered. And it never did get consideration nor did get commendation from our republican friends till the agitation of this arrears question by the democratic side of the House had created a public sentiment in its favor. The gentlemen are always laggards, behind in the good cause till they find it gets to be popular.

Now, I hold in my hand, and I will have read, a copy of the original bill.

H. R. 2803.—[Report No. 293.]

H. R. 2803.—[Report No. 293.]

A bill to provide that all pensions on account of death, wounds received, or disease contracted in the service of the United States since March 4, 1861, which have been granted, or which shall bereafter be granted, on application filed previous to January 1, 1880, shall commence from the date of death or discharge, and for the payment of the arrears of pension.

MARCH 22, 1876.—Read twice, committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, made a special order for April 5, 1876, to be continued from day to day until disposed of, and ordered to be printed.

Then, about the last six days of the session, according to my recollection, (and I must fall back on my recollection, because I have not had time to consult the documents,) General Rice got the floor without a dissenting voice, as I understand, and passed this bill under a wo-thirds vote.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Who originated that bill?

Mr. McMAHON. That I cannot tell the gentleman. But this I can say, having been a member of the Forty-fourth Congress, that the argument which weighed most with this House was that of the distinguished and patriotic gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Jenks. He advocated it as a measure which ought to be passed, and made a legal argument in its favor.

Mr. SAPP. Does the bill state who introduced it?
Mr. McMAHON. The bill states that Mr. Rice, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, by unanimous consent, reported the bill as a substitute for the bills H. R. 316, 394, 463, and 1162.
Mr. SAPP. That is in substance the bill introduced by my former colleagne from Iowa, Mr. Cummings.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. And a republican.
Mr. McMAHON. I do not wish to rob anybody.
Mr. HUBBELL. This seems to be leading to trouble.
Mr. McMAHON. I wish the record to get straight a little bit.

This bill, being reported to the Calendar, was passed. I do not wish to rob any man of the credit which may properly attach to him, and I did not expect to say anything about it except for the way in which my friend from Kansas excluded General Rice from any participation in or control over the passage of this bill. I think now he will withdraw the broad remark he made awhile ago, that there was nothing in his bill or the law which passed, nothing at all, to which the name of Rice would ever attach. I want, as a member of the Forty-fourth of Rice would ever attach. I want, as a member of the Forty-loural Congress, to say this—

Mr. HASKELL. I hope the gentleman will do me the credit to quote me correctly. I stated that if he could find a copy of the bill which is now the statute providing for the payment of the arrears to which the name of Rice appears as anthor I would offer a suitable reward. I did not state that there was no line or portion of the law that might not have been found in some part of Mr. Rice's bill. It would perhaps have been impossible todraught an arrearages-of-pension bill which did not contain some portion of his bill. My statement was that it was not intended or known to be a copy of it or similar to it in any respect.

Mr. McMAHON. I have no objection to the gentleman making any qualification or statement that he chooses in order to set himself any qualification or statement that he chooses in order to set himself right upon the record. My impression is, and it is an impression that exists after the lapse of several years and without examination, that the committee reported and passed in the Forty-fourth Congress almost identically the bill which the gentleman from Iowa subsequently endeavored to pass under a suspension of the rules. I do not know that there is any better mode of setting the question at rest than by having the bill read, in order that the record may be set right in this matter. I therefore ask to have the Rice bill read, and thus it can be compared with the law as it stands, and whatever is right and proper can be understood by the parties.

Forty-fourth Congress, first session.—H. R. No. 2803. [Printer's No., 2968.] IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, March 22, 1876.

Read twice, committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, made a special order for April 5, 1876, to be continued from day to day until disposed of, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Rice, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, by unanimous consent, reported the following bill as a substitute for the bills H. R. Nos. 316, 394, 463, and 1162.

Mr. Rice, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, by unanimous consent, reported the following bill as a substitute for the bills H. R. Nos. 316, 394, 463, and 1162. A bill to provide that all pensions on account of death, wounds received, or disease contracted in the service of the United States since March 4, 1861, which have been granted, or which shall hereafter be granted, on application filed previous to January 1, 1880, shall commence from the date of death or discharge, and for the payment of the arrears of pensions.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all pensions which have been, or may hereafter be, granted in consequence of death occurring from a cause which originated in the service of the United States since the 4th day of March, 1861, or in consequence of wounds or injuries received or disease contracted since said date, shall commence from the date of the death or discharge from the United States service of the person on whose account the claim has been, or shall hereafter be, granted, or from the termination of the right of the party having prior title to such pension: Provided, That applications for pensions growing out of the war of 1861 have been or shall hereafter be filed with the Commissioner of Pensions on or before the 1st day of January, 1880. In all other cases, unless the application shall be filed within five years from the accruing of the right, the pension spall commence from the date of the filing of the application: Provided further, That the limitation herein prescribed shall not apply to claims by or on behalf of insane persons or minor children of deceased soldiers.

Sec. 2. That immediately upon the passage of this act the Commissioner of Pensions to pay, or cause to be paid, to such pensioner shall have died, to the person or persons entitled to the same, all such arrears of pension under this act, and it shall be the further duty of the Commissioner of Pensions to pay, or cause to be paid, to

Mr. McMAHON. I think that bill was accompanied by a report. I wish to add to what I have said that as a member of the Forty-fourth Congress my recollection of this fact is that if anything was understood in that Congress it was that General Rice of all men in the House of Representatives was entitled to the credit of urging and pushing forward and passing the arrears-of-pension bill. And I want to say to the distinguished gentleman from Kansas that when he puts forward a claim for a patent upon that bill that a prior occupation of the ground was had at least two years in advance of his time.

Mr. HUBBELL. I now move that the committee rise for the purpose of closing general debate upon this bill.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest, if nobody else wants to speak upon the subject, that the debate can be limited by consent [cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] and debate begun under the five-minute

The CHAIRMAN. It is suggested by the gentleman from Ohio that general debate be closed upon this bill and that it be read by sections for debate under the five-minute rule. If there be no objection it

There was no objection; and it was ordered accordingly.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fees of examining surgeons, as provided by the several acts of Congress, $250,000: Provided, That a fee of $1, and no more, shall be paid to the examining surgeon for each examination of a pensioner, as provided by law, except when the examination is made by a board of surgeons, in which case the fees now allowed by law shall be paid.

Mr. KEIFER. I move to strike out, in line 29, the word "one," and insert in lieu thereof the word "two;" so that it will read, if adopted, a fee of $2," &c.

Mr. HUBBELL. I make a point of order upon that amendment. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to make the point of order against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. HUBBELL. I make the point of order for the reason that this amendment changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures, and also that it is new legislation. Ever since the original law was amended the fee has been $1.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, if I understood the honorable gentheman aright in his answer a few moments ago, when I called his attention to this matter, he now makes a statement which is entirely the opposite of that. He then stated to us, and I thought he was right, that the law gave to each examining surgeon in these cases $2; but that under this new-fangled method—that is the effect of what he said—of legislating upon appropriation bills, for a few years past, this has been ingrafted on the law and the fee thereby cut down

Is it not true that under existing law, without a provision in the appropriation bill and without a limiting clause in the bill, the allowance would be $2? From year to year for a few years past we have been changing existing law on our appropriation bills, and in this case we have cut down the sum allowed examining surgeons to $1. Now, if I understand the law aright, the amendment that I offer is not only in exact accordance with the existing law, but simply proposes to restore the law to what it was before this temporary change was made, and the point of order therefore ought to have been made was made, and the point of order therefore ought to have been made was made, and the point of order therefore ought to have been made that this, which in reality changes the law, is legislation on an appropriation bill. This provision in the bill, coming from this august Committee on Appropriations, is simply an undertaking to change existing law itself. My proposition is to restore the clause so that it will be entirely consistent with existing law. If the gentlemen on the Committee on Appropriations deem it possible that they can violate a rule by injecting into their bill or by undertaking to put into their bill a provision that changes existing law, I ought to be allowed by my metion at least to restore the law.

my metion at least to restore the law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair presumes, and it will not be controverted, that the appropriation made heretofore for the purpose of providing fees for surgeons in such cases has been at the rate of $1 for each examination.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the Chair allow me to suggest that applied to the law regulating the distribution of the appropriations under that particular bill and for that fiscal year only, but it did not undertake the charge existing laws permanently.

The CHAIRMAN. Be that as it may, the Chair is of opinion that the existing law provides that the fee shall be $1. It will not be denied that for this year at least the law has been $1. Then, if you hold that you do not repeal the present law, you will have the absurdity of two laws existing at the same time directly the reverse of each other, which is an impossibility. The Chair is of opinion that this is the existing law, and therefore that the point of order is well

Mr. KEIFER. Do I understand the Chair to say that if the law was modified for but one year, not by repealing the act, but modified simply for that year, that it would change it forever? I believe it is conceded that recent appropriation bills of like character to this have only undertaken to amend that law pro tanto in this respect, and for the fiscal year appropriated for only. But in the absence of any other legislation on the subject the old law would operate again. The existing law for the coming fiscal year, for which we are now appropriating, would be $2.

Mr. HISCOCK. I believe it is entirely right the House should have had a chance to express an opinion on this question. Therefore, I would suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that he modify his motion and move to strike out the proviso.

Mr. KEIFER. That I intend to do.

Mr. HISCOCK. And then certainly he will not be subject to the

The CHAIRMAN. The fee of $1 is existing law. It is existing law for a time at least, and being existing law, the gentleman's amendment seeking to change it and to increase the expenditure is not in the line of retrenchment Therefore the Chair is of opinion that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. KEIFER. I will not appeal from the decision of the Chair, although I am inclined to think that my amendment does not change existing law for the year for which this bill proposes to make appropriation. But the point of order having been sustained, I move to strike out the proviso beginning on line 29, as follows:

Provided, That a fee of $1, and no more, shall be paid to the examining surgeon for each examination of a pensioner, as provided by law, except when the examination is made by a board of surgeons, in which case the fees now allowed by law

The object of my motion will be quite apparent to the committee. It is to get rid of the legislation proposed in this appropriation bill on the subject of regulating the fee to be paid to an examining surgeon for the examination of pensioners. I understand, and I believe it to be conceded all around, that in the absence of such a limitation as is found in this bill the fee of an examining surgeon, under existing law, would be $2. The last clause in the proviso that is proposed to be stricken out is simply in the nature of an exception in favor of paying the sum of $2 when there is an examination made of a pensioner by a board of surgeons. The proviso says that in such a case the fees now allowed by law shall be paid. So that if the committee and the House should decide to strike out all that I have called attention to and that is included within my motion, the law would operate and the sum of $2 would be paid, under the law as it now stands, to examining surgeons. as it now stands, to examining surgeons.

Mr. HUBBELL. As I understand, there is no general law as to

Mr. KEIFER. Gentlemen all around me say there is. And there is certainly a presumption there is a general law when we find the

Mr. KEIFER. Gentlemen all around me say there is. And there is certainly a presumption there is a general law when we find the Appropriations Committee undertaking to do something in limitation of that general law. It is a very late day, it is true, to undertake to talk about legislation upon appropriation bills; but I may be permitted to say again that it is exceedingly unsatisfactory, not only to members of the House, but to the country. We have to get along with these appropriation bills rapidly. We are expected to appropriate the necessary money to carry on the different departments of the Government and to pay for the important services that are to be paid for by appropriations; and we very often find that in the appropriation bills we have struck out many provisions of law that are very wise for the country.

Mr. SAPP obtained the floor, and yielded his time to Mr. Keifer.

Mr. Keifer. I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Iowa.

Now, a word as to the merits of this. In the first place, it is but simple justice to pay a skilled surgeon or physician what his services are worth. I need not add anything more than that. All over this country, when you employ a good surgeon or physician to do so important a thing as to examine the man who claims to be suffering from wounds or diseases contracted in the service of the United States, it will be agreed that $1 is too small a sum. For my part, I think the general judgment of the country would say that $2 was too low a fee for such a service. The corporations that are called upon to employ physicians to make examinations in reference to life insurance I think in every case pay at least $3 for a single examination, and in many cases? B. But that is immarkerial. It is but inst that a ance I think in every case pay at least $3 for a single examination, and in many cases $5. But that is immaterial. It is but just that a physician who is fit to be selected for this duty should be paid what it is worth.

Without any reflection upon the physicians who accept this duty, I believe it is better for the Government to pay what the service is worth; it is in the line of economy to do it; and it will at least be some incentive to the physician to do his work well, and will protect the Government also against any mistakes or errors of his, and in some degree, however slight, will avert that great danger to which the distinguished gentleman from Michigan says we are constantly exposed in the matter of appropriations. I do not quite agree with that gentleman in the methods he would adopt to ferret out what he calls suspected cases of fraud. If we employ a good Commissioner of Pensions, if we employ good clerks, if we employ the best physicians of the land, and pay them, we are very likely to getrid of much of what the gentleman denominates and classifies generally as frauds upon the Government.

upon the Government.

Now, I think it would be a wise thing to take the judgment of a Congress that has passed upon this question deliberately, not in an appropriation bill, but in a law, and that re-enacted that law in the Revised Statutes of the United States, and pay at least something that approximates the real value of this important service to the

Mr. HUBBELL. I want to say one word about this matter. I have personally no desire to beat the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio. I care but little about it. I wish, however, to make this remark in reply to the gentleman when he says the employing of these physicians and paying them what he terms a fair fee for their service will prevent fraud. Does he not know that in the majority of cases where frauds are perpetrated on the Treasury there is no surgical examination required?

Mr. KEIFER. I do not know anything of the kind.

Mr. HUBBELL. If the gentleman will study up this subject he will find the frauds occurred in cases where widows were applying for pensions or where children were applying for pensions on account of deceased husbands or fathers; and of course in those cases there is no surgical examination.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. Does it not occur with regard to determining the degree of disability?

Mr. KEIFER. It always occurs there.

Mr. BLOUNT. We appropriate here the estimate for this service, $250,000. Why should we double it? There was no suggestion from the Commissioner of Pensions to the committee that we should. The opinion of the Commissioner, as stated by the gentleman in charge of this bill, is that there will be no benefit to the service by increasing the fee; and that is the opinion after an experience of several years with the present fee. It is not a matter of fee alone. It should be considered it is an advertising of the physician also.

Having no information from the officer who is expected to make suggestions to the House on this subject, and who is understood to be in favor of allowing it to remain as it is, I cannot see why we should make this change, and I hope the Committee of the Whole will not do it.

Mr. ANDERSON. I desire to say that this matter of advertising the surgeon has two sides to it; and while the idea may have some weight with the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. Blount,] yet he should remember that the claimant who applies to the surgeon for examination and is reported against will invariably attack the surgeon. He will find that the fact is that this office is one of the most vexatious that a surgeon can hold. At least it is so in the community where I live.

The Department requires that if possible an examining surgeon shall have been an Army surgeon. Now, a man who was an Army surgeon is likely at the end of fifteen years to have become a prominent practitioner. And it is proposed to ask from him, for $1, an amount of work and time which a life-insurance company will pay him from three to five dollars for. The result is that the very small-ress of this fee is endangering the applicant of the work performed.

him from three to five dollars for. The result is that the very smallness of this fee is endangering the quality of the work performed. I have heard a great deal about this matter from these examining surgeons, and I have no hesitation in saying, in the first place, that for the Government of the United States to pay the magnificent, grand, and gorgeous fee of $1 for this kind of work is altogether too small a thing for this Congress to attempt to perpetuate; and, in the second place, that in just this way you are opening one of the gates for such fraud upon the Government as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Hubbell] has indicated. It is a gate in the fence.

Now, let me say, with all due respect for the Committee on Appropriations, whose members I love personally, yet who collectively I would like to see a little broader in their views, the idea of continuing this fee at $1 is utterly preposterous, and I hope very much that it will be put up to three, four, or five dollars—at least to the amount provided in the Revised Statutes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not desire to speak upon the merits of the

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not desire to speak upon the merits of the pending proposition, but I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER] that he should consider what is the law now, for there is great doubt about his accomplishing with his amendment what he wishes.

Section 4777 of the Revised Statutes provides for a two-dollar fee for examination in pension cases. If the motion of the gentleman to strike out the proviso in the pending bill shall prevail, it may be he will find that he falls back on the law of last year, which contains precisely the same proviso that is contained in this bill; I refer to the last pension appropriation bill:

Provided, That a fee of $1, and no more, shall be paid to the examining surgeon for each examination of a pensioner, as provided by law, except when the examination is made by a board of surgeons, &c.

Now, I suggest to the gentleman whether that is not a general provision, going to a modification of section 4777 of the Revised Statutes, and whether, if this proviso is stricken out of this bill, it will not be held that we go back to the last pension appropriation bill which has the same proviso in it, not special in terms, not confined to that appropriation bill whether the same provision is the confined to that appropriation bill when the same provision is the same provision. priation bill, not confined to the expenditure of that identical appropriation at all, but is made to apply to examinations "provided by law." If so, then the gentleman will accomplish nothing by his amendment. I do not refer to the merits of his proposition at all, amendment. I do not refer to the merits of his proposition at all, Mr. KEIFER. I do not know but possibly there is something in the point made by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. Robinson,] though I am inclined to think there is not. I am obliged to him, however, for making the suggestion. I think the clause he has read from the last pension appropriation bill has reference to the payments for examinations of pensioners under that act.

Now let me submit a slight evidence at least in favor of that position. It is that our Committee on Appropriations in preparing this bill gave interpretation to their bill of last year and came to the conclusion that in order to prevent the operation of section 4777 of the Revised Statutes, which allows the payment of $2 for each examination, it was necessary to repeat this clause in this appropriation bill. If I am not mistaken, then under the law of last year, by a provision put into an appropriation bill—I will not say stolen into it—with the understanding that it applied only to the then coming fiscal year, gentlemen have accomplished a repeal of a general law. I do not think they intended to do that, and I do not think they did do it. I think if my motion to strike out this provise shall prevail we will go back to the general law found in section 4777 of the Revised Statutes.

Before I close I desire to say one word in response to the argument, if I may so call it, which came from the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] has tends the time to fully I, 1882. It makes no change in the gentlems the time to fully I, 1882. It makes no change in the set med sthe time to fully I, 1882. It makes no change is the time to the point of order that this amendment changes existing law, the Chair berefore of chair the time to the point of order that this amendment changes existing law, the chair berefore of opinions. Therefore I think it in not subject to the point of order that this amendment changes existing law, while it does not retrench expenditures. If the time be extending the BLOUNT] in favor of economy. As I understood it, amid the confusion around me, the gentleman was under the impression that distinguished physicians of the country ought to perform this work for less than it was worth because it might be an advertisement for them.

Now, I wonder if we here work on any such principle? I wonder if the gentleman himself takes his seat in Congress, draws his pay of $5,000 a year, and his mileage for coming here and returning, on the theory that his services are worth a vast deal more than that amount, theory that his services are worth a vast deal more than that amount, but that the rest is paid him by a mere advertisement to the people of the country and to the world?

The humble physician in a remote village, wherever he may be, is to be annoyed by pensioners and called upon to perform a great and valuable service to the country merely as an advertisement! Sir, the people in my portion of the country do not accept such an advertisement. I am told by gentlemen around me that in the principal towns on the frontiers of Kansas, Nebraska, and other States physicians cannot possibly be found who will, for the miserable sum of $1, make this examination; and the poor pensioner is obliged in many instances to travel scores of miles to find some man who is willing to perform this service for the pitiable sum of $1.

Instances to travel scores or miles to find some man who is willing to perform this service for the pitiable sum of $1.

Now, if we are to protect the Government as we should protect it, we should employ the best men for the purpose and pay them for their services; we should secure the best skill of the country and pay for it as individuals are willing to pay for it and as large corporations

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. KEIFER.]

Mr. SPARKS. Has not a point of order been raised on that amend-

The CHAIRMAN. No point of order has been made upon it.

Mr. KEIFER. None can be made. Mr. SPARKS. Of course none can be made now.

Mr. SPARKS. Of course none can be made now.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 62, noes 62.

Mr. KEIFER. I call for tellers.

No quorum having voted, tellers were ordered; and Mr. KEIFER and Mr. Hubbell were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 80, noes 74. So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLOUNT. I shall ask a separate vote on this amendment in the House.

the House.

Mr. KEIFER. You are entitled to that without giving notice.
Mr. BLOUNT. I know we are.
Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) We will fix the responsibility by vote in the House.

Mr. COFFROTH. I move to amend by adding as a new section what I send to the desk

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. All pensions which have been or which may hereafter be granted in consequence of death occurring from a cause which originated in the service since the 4th day of March, 1861, or in consequence of wounds or injuries received or disease contracted since that date, shall commence from the death or discharge of the person on whose account the claim has been or is hereafter granted, if the disability occurred prior to discharge; and if such disability occurred after the discharge, then from the date of actual disability, or from the termination of the right of party having prior title to such pension: Provided, The application for such pension has been or is hereafter filed with the Commissioner of Pensions prior to the 1st day of July, 1882, otherwise the pension shall commence from the date of filing the application; but the limitation herein prescribed shall not apply to claims by or in behalf of insane persons and children under sixteen years of age.

Mr. BLOUNT. I make the point of order that the amendment

Mr. BLOUNT. I make the point of order that the amendment

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COFFROTH] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. COFFROTH. Yes, sir. Mr. Chairman, the provision I have submitted is identical in its terms with the act approved in 1879 and submitted is identical in its terms with the act approved in 1879 and known as the arrears-of-pension act; there is no change except in the date. By the act of 1879, pensioners filing applications after July 1, 1880, are not entitled to arrears. This amendment simply extends the time to July 1, 1882. It makes no change in the pension laws in any respect except extending the time for filing these applications. Therefore I think it is not subject to the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] has made the point of order that this amendment changes existing law, while it does not retrench expenditures, and is therefore obnoxious to the rule. The existing law, the Chair begs leave to state, limits the time within which those applying for pensions shall be entitled to arrears. If the time be extended within which arrears will follow the granting of pensions, there would be necessarily an increase of expenditures. The Chair is therefore of opinion that the amendment not only does not retrench expenditures, but changes existing law as answer the numerous inquiries from such claimants that there was no money for that purpose. Now, if this matter has not been provided for, I trust the committee will make the needed provision for this year and provide in the deficiency bill what is due in a matter so important to a class having the very highest claim on justice.

Mr. HUBBELL. In reply to that question I beg to inform the gentleman that no estimate of any disbursement for such purpose ever came before the committee. No one representing the Pension Office ever recommended any such appropriation, and without such recommendation of course the committee, in preparing a bill making appropriations for pensions for the next fiscal year, would not undertake to embrace that subject. It never came in an appropriation bill, as I understand.

as I understand.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. Will your deficiency appropriation

Mr. HUBBELL. It does not belong in this bill. It can come in in some other way. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

Mr. HISCOCK. Before that is done I desire to put an inquiry to the gentleman in charge of the bill. In view of the action of the majority of the Committee of the Whole striking out the proviso limititing the fee of examining surgeon to $1, is it not necessary that there should be some amendment increasing the appropriation of $250,000 for such fees? Without some such amendment will there not be a deficiency created?

Mr. HUBBELL. If this provise should be struck out and the old law is regarded as being in force, $500,000 instead of $250,000 would be required for this purpose. If it be held that the fee is $1, then the appropriation in the bill is ample. I do not propose now to offer any amendment increasing the appropriation. If it should be held that the legal fee is $2, provision can be made as a deficiency.

Mr. WARNER. Before the committee rises I wish to suggest an amendment to the gentleman in charge of the bill. I understand from him that this bill does include arrears for 1882. I submit, therefore, that in line 9, after the word "relatives," the words "including arrears" should be inserted. I think there will be no objection to this amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT and others. That is right.
Mr. HUBBELL. I assent to that amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] will be regarded as adopted.

There was no objection.

Mr. HUBBELL moved that the committee rise and report the bill and amendment to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. McMillin reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 6532) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. HUBBELL demanded the previous question on the bill and amendments.

amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered to be now put.

The first amendment was read, as follows:

In line 9, after "relatives," insert "including arrears."

The amendment was agreed to.

The second amendment was read as follows:

In line 29 strike out the following proviso:

"Provided, That a fee of $1, and no more, shall be paid to the examining surgeon for each examination of a pensioner, as provided by law, except when the examination is made by a board of surgeons, in which case the fees now allowed by law shall be paid."

Mr. KEIFER demanded the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were ordered.
The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmativeyeas 99, nays 91, not voting 101; as follows:

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. WARD, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolu-tion (H. R. No. 338) directing one copy of Congressional Record to be sent to each of our legations abroad; when the Speaker signed

WILLIAM H. TURLEY.

Mr. DIBRELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6621) for the relief of William H. Turley, in the case of the illegal seizure of the steamer T. D. Hine; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

BYRON C. PIERCE.

Mr. BREWER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6622) granting a pension to Byron C. Pierce, late a private in Company F, Twenty-fourth Michigan Infantry; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. MARTIN, of West Virginia. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to have printed in the RECORD for reference to the Committee on Pacific Railroad a resolution of inquiry in relation to the Northern Pacific Railroad.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly. The resolution is as follows:

Whereas it is alleged that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, to which a very large grant of the public domain was given—such grant being conditioned that said company should completely build, equip, construct, and furnish its line of road on or before the 4th day of July, 1880—and that said company has utterly failed to build and construct more than one-fifth of its line, said excess of unearned land grant being now subject to forfeiture, has, in violation of its charter and in prejudice of the interest of the people of the United States, mortgaged to certain parties all of its land grant, both earned and unearned; and

Whereas it is further currently alleged that the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, a corporation which also received a land grant from the Government conditioned upon the construction and equipment of its line of road, the time for such construction having expired and lapsed, and said Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company having utterly failed to earn any portion of said land grant by construction; and

Whereas, notwithstanding said failure, said company, as it is alleged, has sold or pretended to sell said unearned land grant in prejudice of the rights of the people of the United States: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on the Pacific Railroads be instructed forthwith to inquire into said alleged mortgage and sale of their unearned land grants by the Northern Pacific and the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Companies, with full power to send for persons and papers, and to report to this House in full in regard to said matters, and what legislation is necessary to preserve the interests of the people of the United States.

The House reassembled at three o'clock and fifty-three minutes, p.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, announced that the Senate insisted on its amendment, disagreed to by the House, to the bill (H. R. No. 2658) to regulate the award of and compensation for advertising in the District of Columbia, had agreed to the conference asked by the House, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. Whyte, Mr. Ransom, and Mr. Anthony. The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 1493) to regulate the use and prevent the waste of Potomac water in the District of Columbia.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted, as follows: To Mr. FRYE, for ten days, on account of serious illness in his fam-

To Mr. Hayes, until after the holidays.

AMENDMENT OF REFUNDING BILL.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment to the bill of the House No. 4592, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD and be considered as pending.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The amendment is as follows:

Strike out all after enacting clause and insert as follows:

"That of the coin now in the Treasury the sum of $100,000,000 is hereby appropriated for the payment of the interest-bearing debt of the United States due in the years 1880 and 1831: And it is further provided, That the sum of $100,000,000 of revenues not otherwise appropriated be, and the same is hereby, appropriated for the purposes aforesaid: It is further provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause to be coined the maximum amount of silver bullion into standard silver dollars in the manner now authorized by law, and shall pay out such dollars in the redemption of the public debt hereinbefore mentioned monthly, and the particular bonds to be redeemed from time to time in pursuance to this act shall be determined by lot under such rules as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe.

"SEC. 2. That all laws and parts of laws, so far as the same may authorize the issuing of bonds for the purpose of refunding or redeeming the interest-bearing debt of the United States, be, and they are hereby, repealed."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. COFFROTH. I move that the House do now adjourn. The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at three o'clock and fifty-eight minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorial, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

By Mr. ANDERSON: The petition of employés in military prison at Leavenworth, Kansas, for the payment of wages due them—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Post-Roads

By Mr. HISCOCK: The petitions of Abijah Shaver and 36 others, of Williamstown, and of George M. Shears and 49 others, of Wilson, New York, that soldiers of the late war discharged for disease be granted the same bounty as those discharged on ac count of wounds—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of Nathaniel Carver and Warner L. Nelson, of Holly, New York, of similar import—to the same committee.

By Mr. O'CONNOR: A bill making an appropriation for the improvement of the Ashley River—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, a bill making an appropriation for the deepening, widening, and improving of Wappoo Cut, emptying into Charleston Harbor—to the same committee. By Mr. HISCOCK: The petitions of Abijah Shaver and 36 others, of the same committee.

By Mr. SIMONTON: The petition of Ray & Smith and other citizens of Alabama and Tennessee, to be refunded certain taxes paid by them upon bagging and rope upon which the tax had already been paid-to the Committee on Claims.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, December 17, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D. The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a communication of the Chief of Engineers, containing report of survey, under the provisions of the river and harbor act of June 14, 1880, for improving the bayou south of Milwaukee Harbor for additional purposes of a harbor of refuge; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, with copies of reports from Major John M. Wilson, Corps of Engineers, relating to surveys and examinations, under the river and harbor act of June 14, 1880, of Sandusky River, near Fremont, Ohio; of Chagrin River, Ohio; of Toledo Harbor, Ohio; of Maumee River, Ohio, from Perrysburgh to the city of Toledo; and of Saint Mary's River, from the town of Saint Mary's to its mouth, Ohio; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce. mittee on Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter of the Chief of Engineers containing a report of examinations and surveys made, under the river and harbor act of June 14, 1880, of the bars at the entrance of Annapolis Harbor, Maryland; of Chester River, between Kirby's and Spry's Landings, and of water passage between Deal's Island and Little Deal's Island, Maryland; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. VOORHEES, from the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 5384) granting permission to the Chamber of Commerce of New York to erect a statue on the subtreasury building in the city of New York, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1889) making appropriation for the purchase of ground and erection thereon in the city of Washington of a building to be used as a hall of records, reported it without amendment.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am directed by a majority of the Committee on Appropriations to report back favorably the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives in regard to an adjournment for the holidays. As it is necessary that many members should know what the two Houses will do in regard to this question, I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the following House concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That when the two Houses of Congress adjourn on Wednesday, the 22d instant, it shall be to meet on Wednesday, the 5th day of January next.

Mr. McDONALD. Is it proposed to amend the House resolution? The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is no amendment proposed, as the

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is no amendment proposed, as the Chair understands. The committee report the resolution as it came from the House of Representatives.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. It is the House resolution?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It is the House resolution, proposing to adjourn from Wednesday, the 22d instant, to Wednesday, the 5th of January.

Mr. BECK. This is the report of a majority of the committee. I could not vote for it in committee and do not propose to vote for it now, for the following reasons: there are on the House Calendar, I understand, over a thousand bills, some of public importance, some of private importance, some good, some bad perhaps, I do not know how many. All are entitled to a hearing, and there is a very large number on the Calendar of the Senate. There will be but forty-odd working days after the 5th of January. We have the census bill to dispose of, the refunding bill, and all the appropriation bills, for while the House has acted upon one or two, such as the fortifications, the pensions, and other pro forma bills, the great bills that have to the pensions, and other pro forma bills, the great bills that have to be considered and involving much time and labor are yet untouched. Very little has been done up to this time. To adjourn from Wednesday next till January 5, and waste two weeks more, seems to me to be crowding into the last days of the session more business than can be crowding into the last days of the session more business than can be well done.

(I have had occasion on the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate to complain time and again of the House holding back their bills, even beyond the time provided by their own rules, and forcing us here in the last hours of the session to consider as best we could the most important questions. The Senator from Minnesota who sits before me [Mr. WINDOM] will recollect that a little over two years ago, while he and I were members of that committee, we were compelled to sit night after night until the sun was shining in the mornago, while he and I were members of that committee, we were compelled to sit night after night until the sun was shining in the morning in order to hurry through what was called legislation that was indispensable. I do not want any excuse to have that sort of work repeated. I know what bad legislation is necessarily had when that condition of things exists; and I know, furthermore, that legislation that ought not to be upon appropriation bills is forced upon them, and the excuse is made that there is no time or chance to consider the questions except upon appropriation bills; it is maintained that they cannot be taken up and considered as independent measures for want of time, and therefore have to be pressed upon appropriation bills or of time, and therefore have to be pressed upon appropriation bills or fail altogether.

Now, doing nothing for this month, or very little, and adjourning for two weeks without any sort of necessity for it at this short session, with all these important measures, seems to me to again force that condition of things upon us. Take, for example, the pension bill that has just passed the House. I have looked over the speeches made by gentlemen yesterday elsewhere, and I have read the report of the Commissioner. It is conceded now that the arrears of pensions will involve us in the payment of say two hundred and odd million dollars, and our annual pension-roll will likely be $50,000,000 annually from this time on, and that there are frands connected with the payment of these pensions running up to five or six million dollars a year. ment of these pensions running up to five or six million dollars a year.

ment of these pensions running up to five or six million dollars a year.

Mr. EATON. Annually, five or six million dollars. A plan has to be devised to prevent that, and it ought to be done by independent and careful legislation. If we adjourn as proposed, go away and do not attempt to do it until the heel of the session, then all this work has to be forced upon the pension appropriation bill, as a part of it, to guard the appropriations we have made. So with many other things I represent the property of it, to guard the appropriations we have made. So with many other things. I remember last year when he had the sundry civil appropriation bill up an effort was made to make us settle up, construe, and carry out contracts for four iron-clads, involving three or four million dollars. It was resisted successfully on the ground that it should come in an independent measure and be passed upon, and not be placed upon an appropriation bill. I suppose if we adjourn now the pressure and want of time will induce these committees to make it an adjunct again on some appropriation bill. So with many other things; subsidy bills of all sorts under pretended postal arrangements will have to be forced upon appropriation bills.

It is for this and other public reasons that I believe it is the duty of this Senate to refuse to adjourn or take a recess for two weeks. Of course we shall take a holiday on Christmas Day and on New Year's Day, but we should sit and act upon the refunding bill, upon the census bill, upon the other important matters that are before us, except on these special days, and give the House an opportunity to have the appropriation bills before us in reasonable and proper time, so that they can be fairly considered in this body, and not render it necessary to attach as riders to appropriation bills legislation which can as well be considered and passed upon independently. I might say much more, but will not delay the proposed vote. These are some of the reasons why I oppose this resolution and shall vote against it.

Mr. McDONALD. I fully agree with the Senator from Kentucky in regard to this question of adjournment. I hoped that the Committee on Appropriations would have amended the House resolution and sent it to us amended, indicating their views on this subject. I shall certainly not vote for the resolution in its present form. I am for the shortest adjournment for the holidays that is consistent with for the shortest adjournment for the helidays that is consistent with propriety. I have not any doubt but that we shall find more work than we shall be able to do at this session if we give to it all the legislative days that we can properly devote to it. If the resolution is to be voted on in its present form, I shall ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say that if this were a long session I should vote very cheerfully for the resolution reported from the Committee on Appropriations. It is very evident, and must be very evident to every member of the Senate, from the amount of business that must necessarily be done, that if we take a recess of two weeks legislation will have to be hurried, or else something will be omitted that perhaps may necessitate the meeting of Congress after the 4th of March. Now, I desire to avoid any necessity for an extra session. While it would be exceedingly pleasant for me to be at home during the proposed recess, I still feel that it is incumbent upon me to oppose any measure of that kind, in order that we may transact the public business without rendering probable any necessity for an extra session of Congress. I therefore shall vote against the proposed two weeks' adjournment. I think three or four days, at any rate, would be as long a recess as we ought to take.

weeks' adjournment. I think three or four days, at any rate, would be as long a recess as we ought to take.

Mr. WITHERS. Mr. President, if I thought it possible that the public business would be materially expedited by voting down the resolution from the House which has just been reported, I should favor that action; but an experience of a few years here has taught me that in all probability there would be no more public business transacted and no greater impression made upon our Calendaries. me that in all probability there would be no more public business transacted and no greater impression made upon our Calendar if we should refuse to adjourn entirely than if we accept the proposition which has been sent us from the House. The question of adjournment or non-adjournment was fairly tested there, and the vote indicates unmistakably the sentiment of that body. As to a shorter adjournment, I believe we should find that our business would not be materially advanced if such a proposition were adopted, from the fact that we should find ourselves without a quorum, as the past history of this body abundantly verifies, until about the time fixed by the House for reassembling. reassembling.

As to the suggestions of my friend from Kentucky, [Mr. Beck,] especially in reference to the pension bill and its importance, I will state to him and to the Senate that there is already upon the Calendar of the Senate, awaiting the action of this body, a bill which is designed to correct the very evils to which the Senator from Kentucky called the attention of the Senate. I certainly could see nothing which would indicate my judgment more unmistakably than this, that there is no bill upon the Calendar which in my opinion is commensurate in its importance to that bill, and that I am instructed by the Pensions Committee to call it up for the consideration of the Senate and insist that action shall be had upon it at as early a day as practicable; and I hope my friend from Kentucky will aid me in securing action upon this most important of subjects, involving as it does probably the second largest appropriation made by Congress for any public service. I think we can get up this bill and pass it, and we can pass all other bills of importance within the limits of the present session of Congress. The difficulty is that there are so many gentlemen here interested in local bills and bills of a comparatively unimportant character that they bring them up at the expense of gentlemen here interested in local bills and bills of a comparatively unimportant character that they bring them up at the expense of more important public measures. Whether we sit here two weeks longer or not, my impression is that the Calendar will be a great deal larger at the close of the session than it is at present, my experience being that the longer a session is the larger the Calendar is, because we introduce bills and put them upon the Calendar much more rapidly than we vote upon them and get them off.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the House resolution reported from the Committee on Appropriations, on which the years and navy have been ordered.

which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary called the roll.

Mr. HARRIS, (after having voted in the negative.) I desire to inquire if the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK] is recorded as having voted?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He is not.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I desire to withdraw my vote. I voted in the negative, but I remember that I promised the Senator from Nebraska that if he were absent I would pair with him upon this question. I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced-yeas 27, nays 31; as follows:

Mr. INGALLS subsequently said: At the request of several Senators I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate refused to concur in the House resolution relative to adjournment for the holidays.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT PENSACOLA.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I am directed by the Committee on Public Mr. JONES, of Florida. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report with amendments the bill (S. No. 1886) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to erect a public building in the city of Pensacola, Florida, in place of the one recently destroyed by fire. Agreat calamity has fallen upon that city, and every public building has been destroyed. There is no place there that the Government can secure suitable for its business, and in view of the emergency of the case I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The first amendment of the committee was, in line 10, after the word "vault," to strike out the words "extending to" and insert the word "in;" so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase, at private sale or by condemnation, in pursuance of the statute of the State of Florida, all the land that he may deem necessary adjacent to the site lately occupied by the United States custom-house, post-office, and the United States court-rooms in the city of Pensacola, Florida, and to cause to be erected thereon a suitable brick or stone building, with a fire-proof vault in each story, for the use and acc ommodation of the United States district and circuit courts, custom-house, post-office, and other Government offices in that city, at a cost not exceeding $250,000, including the purchase of land.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 16, before "feet," to strike out "forty" and insert "sixty;" so as to read:

And the building hereby authorized shall be so erected as to afford an open space of not less than sixty feet between it and any other building; and the sum of $250,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose herein mentioned.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds whether it will not be necessary to have the jurisdiction and the right of taxation ceded by the Legislature of the State of Florida before this ground can be taken?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I suppose this building will stand precisely upon the same footing as the old one. The old site is there, and I think there is a State law regulating that. We discussed the and I think there is a State law regulating that. We discussed the matter very fully at the last session.

Mr. MORRILL. So far as it occupies the same ground, of course nothing need be done by the Legislature; but the bill proposes to buy a small additional strip of ground.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I think the present site will be sufficient. The other ground will only be necessary to keep off other buildings that might endanger the structure.

Mr. MORRILL. I only call the attention of the Senator to the point.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SAUNDERS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1927) for the relief of Colonel Alfred B. Meacham; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WALLACE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1929) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KERNAN asked and by unanimous consent obtained leave to

Mr. KERNAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (8. No. 1930) to fix the salary of the circuit judge of the second circuit and the salary of certain district judges, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRIZE OF HONOR TO PROFESSOR BAIRD.

Mr. EDMUNDS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1928) to provide for remitting the duties on the object of art awarded by the Berlin International Fishery Commission to Professor Spencer F. Baird; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the bill be referred, as usual in such cases, to the Committee on Finance; but I wish to say (I think it is perhaps to the public interest that I should say) what the circumstances were, for usually I am rather opposed to the remitting of duties

At this great international exhibition, although Professor Baird was not personally present, by the unanimous vote of the juries Professor Baird was personally awarded the highest prize of honor, consisting of an object of art, made of silver, I believe, which had been given by the Emperor of Germany and King of Prussia to the exhibition beforehand, as several other objects were given, to be awarded according to their discretion by the juries to the most deserving persons. Professor Baird, so well known in this country, as I say, received the unanimous vote of the great juries of the exhibition as being best entitled of all the people of the civilized world to this great honor. A great many other prizes and premiums were awarded; but in respect of three or four of these objects they were called prizes of honor. This particular prize has been sent to this country, so well deserved as I think it is, and under the circumstances it appears to deserved as I think it is, and under the circumstances it appears to me that it would be right that the United States should allow the professor to receive it without being applied for to pay a tax upon it, inasmuch as I think his service to the United States entitles him to that consideration.

In this connection, Mr. President, I beg to have read a letter to me from Mr. Goode, who had charge of our interests at the exhibition, if it is agreeable to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The letter will be read. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

United States Commission of Fish and Fisheries, Internationale Fischerei-Ausstellung in Berlin, Washington, D. C., December 14, 1880.

UNITED STATES COMMISSION OF FISH AND FISHERIES, INTERNATIONALE FISCHEREI-AUSSTELLUNG IN BERLIN,
Washington, D. C., December 14, 1880.

SIR: I beg leave to submit the following memoranda in regard to the distribution of the prizes at the close of the International Fishery Exhibition in Berlin, and especially with reference to the award of the first honor prize to Professor Spencer F. Baird, United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries.

The ceremony of awarding the prizes took place in the-great hall of the exhibition building on the 20th of June, 1880. His Excellency Dr. Lucius, minister of agriculture, in an opening address, stated to the Crown Prince of Germany, who was present as the protector of the exhibition, the object of the gathering. The list of prizes was then read by the director of the exhibition, ministerial Director Marcard, from the printed catalogue, a copy of which is herewith inclosed (Verzeichniss der gelegentlich der Internationalen Fischerei-Ausstellung zu Berlin, 1880.
Zuerkannten Auszeichnungen.) After the reading he turned to the protector of the exhibition and received from him an approval of the awards upon the schedule.
A list of the prizes received by American exhibitors is appended to this letter. An examination will show that the highest award, an address of thanks signed by His Imperial Highness the Crown Prince, was awarded to the Government of the 'United States; that distinguished awards, consisting of gold medals, with special diplomas of honor, were assigned to the United States Commission of Fish and Fisheries and the United States Coast Survey, for their collective exhibits, while the Fish Commission also received gold medals in class I and class 6, for special exlibits, and the United States Hydrographic Office and the United States Engineer Bureau received honorable mention for collective exhibits of charts. In the various classes, special exhibitors in the United States section carried away a full quota of gold, silver, and bronze medals. The number may be tab

G. BROWN GOODE, Deputy Commissioner.

Hon. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Here follows the list which is a part of that letter which I shall not ask to have read in full, but with the permission of the Senate it may be printed as an appendix to the letter.

The list is as follows:

Berlin International Fishery Exhibition-The prizes awarded.

I. ADDRESSES OF THANKS.

The united juries decided not to award a prize of honor or medal to the government of any nation for its collective exhibition, but, instead of this, an address of thanks, signed by His Imperial Highness the Crown Prince, was substituted. Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Committee on Finance will find it consistent with their duty to report the bill favorably. I move its reference to that committee.

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I hardly think that can be done unless the bill now pending as the unfinished business can be disposed of.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I withdraw the motion.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is withdrawn.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 6532) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. R. No. 338) directing one copy of Congressional Record to be sent to each of our legations abroad; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

DANFORD MOTT.

Mr. MORRILL submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the report of the Court of Claims, No. 474, first session, Thirty-sixth Congress, for the relief of Danford Mott, and Senate bill No. 480, reported by the Committee on Claims, as appears by Senate Calendar of January 17, 1861, be, and the same are hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, with authority to consider and readjust the same according to law and justice; and if any allowance shall be made, to allow interest thereon from the date of the judgment rendered heretofore by said court.

Mr. MORRILL. I believe the facts show that this is a peculiarly hard case; that the Court of Claims rendered judgment and that the Committee on Claims of the House and the committee of the Senate both reported bills in favor of paying the claim. It amounts to a little over $2,000. I desire to have the resolution lie upon the table in order that the Committee on Claims of the Senate may examine it.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I suggest to the Senator from Vermont that to refer a case to the Court of Claims requires a bill or resolution of both Houses.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator from Illinois will find by looking at the statute that a simple resolution of either body sends a claim to the Court of Claims.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. It ought not to be done in that way.
Mr. COCKRELL. In connection with what the Senator from Vermont has said about a resolution of the Senate or of the House taking a case to the Court of Claims, I desire to remark that I understand that it can be referred by resolution either of the Senate or of the House to the Court of Claims when presented to Congress, and the Court of Claims has jurisdiction; but where the Court of Claims has no jurisdiction then a resolution of the Senate or a resolution of the House cannot invest that court with jurisdiction.

Mr. BLAINE. That is what I understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table.

SUPREME COURT JUDGES.

Mr. BLAINE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be directed to inquire into the expediency of increasing the number of judges of the Supreme Court to thirteen.

YELLOW FEVER REPORT.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate, That 500 copies of the report on yellow fever on the United States ship of war Plymouth, in 1878-79, prepared under the direction of the Surgeon-General of the Navy, be printed and bound for the use of the Senate.

COMMITTEE ON REMOVAL OF NORTHERN CHEYENNES.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved. That the Select Committee to examine into the circumstance connected with the removal of the Northern Cheyennes be continued during this session of Congress, with authority to further investigate all matters heretofore referred to them and not disposed of, and also be authorized to employ a clerk, to be paid from the "miscellaneous items" of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution unless some Senator has objection to it, and I desire to make an explanation in regard to it.

When conferences were held for the purposes of ascertaining what select committees should be retained and what not, I inadvertently gave information that there was no longer any necessity for this committee. The chairman of the committee also concurred in that statement. But I find that the purposes for which the committee was raised are not at all completed. The Senate at its last session passed a joint resolution defining certain action on the part of the Secretary a joint resolution defining certain action on the part of the Secretary of the Interior in reference to selecting a location for the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Indians, and also certain information in respect of the settlement of a portion of the band of Little Chief that was in the neighborhood of Fort Keogh. The House did not concur in the resolution. It passed over for want of time for its consideration, and it is now pending in the House. For that purpose, if for no other, the restoration or reappointment of this committee would be necessary. The honorable Senator from Iowa [Mr. Kirkwood] is the chairman of the committee, and the membership is composed of Mr. Plumb, Mr. Dawes, Mr. Bailey, and myself. I trust the Senate will reinstate the committee.

Other matters were referred to it also which have been drawn in Other matters were referred to it also which have been drawn in controversy between the Secretary of the Interior and the governor of Massachusetts, and it seems to me that it will be necessary to have a reference of some recent action of the Interior Department in relation to the Ponca band of Indians made to that committee. It has been asserted that a contract has been made with the chiefs of the Ponca Indians whereby they have agreed to relinquish entirely all their title to the lands in the Territory of Dakota and accept in lieu thereof lands in the Indian Territory. That may not be a proper statement of the proposition; I think it is, however; but that subject will necessarily come before some committee. I have seen the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and he has informed me that his committee is very much overcrowded with work. I would further say that the select committee, in my opinion, would have the advantage of very extensive and complete knowledge of the particular facts relating to this investigation for their information, and any other committee would have necessarily to travel over a large part of the ground which we have already been over. It would therefore be a matter of wisdom and economy as well, I think, as one of public necessity to reinstate this committee. I ask that the Senate adopt the resolution.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. While I do not object, I should like to hear the resolution read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be again reported.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution the second time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution, which under the rule would go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate? The Chair hears none, and under the rule the resolution is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 6532) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

CHARLES H. NICHOLS.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 523) for the relief of Charles H. Nichols, late superintendent of the Government Hospital for the Insane.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to pass to the credit of Charles H. Nichols, late superintendent of the Government Hospital for the Insane, the sum of $3,037.09, being the amount disallowed in his accounts, and being the difference in salary between $2,500 and $4,000 per annum from June 22, 1874, to June 30, 1876; the disallowance having been made to conform to the requirements of the Revised Statutes, section 4839, adopted June 22, 1874; and it fixes the salary of the superintendent adopted June 22, 16/4; and it likes the salary of the superintendent at $4,000 per annum, as originally provided in act of March 2, 1867.

Mr. VOORHEES. This bill is reported unanimously from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. It is made necessary by reason of a mistake of the revisers. They reduced the salary of the superintendent of the Government Hospital for the Insane without intendintendent of the Government Hospital for the Insane without intending to do so. They restored an old law, which had been repealed, thereby repealing the new law, which had fixed the salary. I explained the matter at the last session of Congress, and I trust no further time may be necessary upon it now. It has had full consideration in the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, the chairman of which [Mr. WALLACE] is present and can make any explanation required; but I have given the simple facts. The old salary first allowed was repealed by an act of a certain date, and the salary fixed at a certain other rate, at which rate he drew his salary for a certain. allowed was repealed by an act of a certain date, and the salary fixed at a certain other rate, at which rate he drew his salary for a certain period of time, and while he was drawing it at that rate the revision of the laws took place, and the commissioners in revising them took up the old statute instead of the new, and made it a law by which he should receive salary. He continued to draw some little time after that according to the legal salary, so that he has somewhat overdrawn his account according to the letter of the law. It is for the purpose of enabling the accounting officers to settle his accounts according to the law as it really existed and was meant to be that this cording to the law as it really existed and was meant to be that this bill is brought forward here. I am sure the Senate will be willing to apply a corrective.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, when this matter was first called up I made some objection to a bill of this character, allowing an officer a credit coming from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. I thought it very strange that that committee should take jurisdiction of such a case. It was discussed at some length at that time, and was passed over. I have since examined into the question fully. I have written to the Department and ascertained that the superintendent, Dr. Nichols, retained out of the moneys that came into his hands the amount that this bill proposes to credit him with, he claimhands the amount that this bill proposes to credit him with, he claiming that the law authorized him to retain that much as his salary. I have traced the different acts fixing the salary of this officer in different years, and there seems not to have been any general legislation fixing the salary, as is generally the fact in other cases, naming the amount. I have no doubt but what the report of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws is correct. I found that the provision in force was left out of one of the statutes in the revision, but nevertheless that leaves the smaller supports and he law suppose the theless that leaves the smaller sum the salary fixed by law unless the old law is restored. The present superintendent had notice that this salary was a certain amount, the amount now fixed, and he has no right to claim that his salary shall be increased. I move, therefore, to leave the bill one simply for the relief of Dr. Nichols, striking out lines 15, 16, 17, and 18, in these words:

And the salary of the said superintendent is hereby fixed at $4,000 per annum, as originally provided in act of March 2, 1867.

That becomes a general law, and it ought not to be placed in this bill. I move that these words be stricken out, leaving the bill simply to credit what Dr. Nichols has actually received.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. COCKRELL.]

Mr. VOORHEES. I am very glad of the support of the Senator from Missouri, so far as it goes; but I wish the Senate now to distinctly understand what the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri contains. Up to a certain time, March 2, 1867, the salary of the superintendent of the Government Hospital for the Insane was $2,500. In March, 1867, it was increased, for reasons satisfactory to Congress, to $4,000. It is that law increasing the salary which was dropped in the revision, taking us back to the old law. The bill corrects that mistake as to Dr. Nichols, and proposes also to make the salary for the superintendent what it was made by Congress in March, 1867. Now the question is whether that is right. That is the question presented by the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri.

In 1867 Congress thought $4,000 for the superintendent of the Government Hospital for the Insane was not too much. I have had as large experience connected with that institution as any Senator on It was once my fortune to assist in an investigation of that institution lasting more than three months, during which time a day's work was put in every day, and I say with all the weight my words can carry in the Senate that the duties of the superintendent of that institution are worth that much money or they are worth nothing. There are a thousand sick people under his care, afflicted with the worst form of sickness, that require the most delicate and skillful care. He has the management of a large farm of four or five hundred acres and of stock, furnishing supplies required by the patients under his care. Dr. Godding, the present superintendent, who tients under his care. Dr. Godding, the present superintendent, who has succeeded Dr. Nichols, it is my good fortune to know, and to know well. I have examined him as a witness and expert, on the subject of insanity, on the stand. I can testify to his capacity, his learning, his fidelity, and his industry; and inasmuch as Congress fixed this salary thirteen years ago at $4,000, and inasmuch as the duties of the office have greatly increased now, I think Congress ought to keep the salary at what was then provided by law. Therefore I hope the Senate will not concur in the amendment of the Senator from Missouri. I think it would be an eat of injustice to this insembert. think it would be an act of injustice to this incumbent. It is true, as the Senator from Missouri says, that the present incumbent took the office with notice that this revision had cut the salary down. He also knew, however, that it was done by mistake; that it was not done by intelligent or deliberate legislation, and he had reason to believe that the mistake would be corrected, because Dr. Nichols, his faint south to head reason to be the contraction of t his friend, sought to have it corrected ever since, not merely for his own benefit, but for the benefit of whoever might succeed him in that institution

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not concur in the amendment of the Senator from Missouri. I knew a good deal about this institution when I was in the other House, and when it was in charge of Dr. Nichols. I have not known so much of it since, although I know the present superintendent to be all the Senator from Indiana has said of him—a gentleman of rare attainments and ability in the profession and position to which he is called, and who would command at any time in any private institution of this character such commentation as this bill provides, and perhaps more. Dr. Nichols was called from that position to a much higher salary in a private institution, and if we should cut down the salary the effect would be that we should lose the valuable services of the present superintend-I am confident, although I have no personal knowledge of the fact, that he would certainly be called to a private institution where he would be paid according to the value of his services, and this institution, paying but $2,500 a year, would perhaps fall into incompetent hands. Think of the responsible position that Dr. Godding occupies in charge of a thousand patients bereft of their reason and requiring his constant present attention, the constant present of the property of the prope requiring his constant personal attention—the constant personal at-tention of a man of attainments and practical experience in a kind of life and service to which very few men can be called-and when one is found who has the ability and experience and the tact necessary to have the safe conduct of such an institution as that, he is a rare man and should receive a proper compensation. Although I have no personal knowledge of this matter now, I did know all about the manner in which, by the merest accident, the $4,000 established thirteen years ago was dropped to $2,500, which was established when the institution itself was founded twenty-five years ago, every brick of which and all that massive structure has been built up under these two superintendents and under their personal knowledge, and there never has been an institution in this District, or, I believe, anywhere else, where so much money has passed through the hands of two men with such absolutely honest results and with so much to show for the money expended. This institution has commanded the admiration of private institutions, and they have been sending here time and again to get away the superintendent. Certainly that will be the result in this case if the salary is stricken down to $2,500.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. EDMUNDS in the chair.) The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. COCKRELL.]

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TREASURY BOOKS AND ACCOUNTS.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer the following resolution and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the usual number of the report (S. No. 539) from the Select Committee to investigate the financial reports, books, and accounts of the Treasury Department, submitted on the 28th April, 1880, be printed for the use of the Senate.

I have had frequent applications for the report and cannot furnish copies. The number already printed has been exhausted.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Calendar will now be proceeded with under the order of the Senate until half past one o'clock.

Mr. INGALLS. Before the Senate passes from the consideration of the resolution just agreed to, I desire to know from the Senator offering the resolution whether it includes the views of the minority report that were submitted in connection with the report of that com-

Mr. MCRGAN. Certainly, that is the object.
Mr. McMILLAN. I do not think the views of the minority are embraced in this resolution.

Mr. INGALLS. The language of the resolution is, "that the usual number of the report (S. No. 539) from the select committee to investigate the financial reports, &c., be printed for the use of the Senate." It is my impression that that language would not include the views submitted by the minority, and I ask unanimous consent that the action of the Senate may be reconsidered for the purpose of enabling me to amend the resolution by inserting the words necessary to in-Mr. GARLAND. Were not the minority views printed with the

The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that the Senate reconsider the vote adopting the resolution offered by the Senator from Alabama. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered and the question recurs on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. INGALLS. I now move to amend the resolution by inserting after the word "report" the words "including the views of the minority of the committee."

Mr. MORGAN. I accept that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is accepted.

The resolution as modified, was agreed to.

VAGRANCY IN THE DISTRICT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the order of the Senate the Secretary will report the first bill on the Calendar at the point where the Senate left off yesterday.

The bill (S. No. 1477) for the punishment of tramps in the District of Columbia was announced as first in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amountment to strike out all after the energing element in

Mr. KERNAN. Without knowing more of this bill than I gather from hearing it read, I call attention to lines 5 and 6 of the first section of the amendment:

That all idle, vicious, or disorderly persons in the District of Columbia without any fixed, regular, or lawful means of support, or who habitually go from door to door, or place to place, or occupy public places for the purpose of begging or receiving alms.

For one I hardly wish to arrest persons who are not vicious or dis-For one I hardly wish to arrest persons who are not victous of disorderly, but being poor, solicit alms. Frequently many poor persons live by going to houses getting cold meats and soliciting things of that kind. I move to strike out from and after the word "support," in line 5, to and including the word "alms," in line 7, striking out "or who habitually go from door to door, or place to place, or occupy public places for the purpose of begging or receiving alms." I am unwilling to put these with disorderly, idle, and victous persons.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York moves to amend the amendment of the committee by striking out the following words:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina asks that a letter be read. If there be no objection the Secretary will read it.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Attorney for the District of Columbia, Washington, March 12, 1880.

Gentlemen: Herewith find your communication of the 8th instant, directing the preparation of a vagrancy law, and a bill prepared in pursuance thereof.

Mr. Riddle referred the matter to me, and the accompanying bill, which meets his approval, is the result of an examination of the statutes of the various States upon the subject of vagrancy and tramps, and of my own experience in the police court, where the various offenses described in the bill are almost daily complained of and the inadequacy of the present law forcibly demonstrated.

For a long time the city has been infested with a number of sharpers and three-card-monte men, who, under the guise of guides to the public buildings, prey upon the unsuspecting visitors, and by trickery and various devices cheat them out of their money. This has been a frequent subject of complaint, but as there is no law to punish the offenders, this business cannot be suppressed. There is also another class of criminals who prowl about at night, sleeping and building fires in unoccupied houses, breaking into stores and other places, for whom there is no adequate punishment.

Under the present vagrancy law, the defendant, upon conviction, is required to give bond for his good behavior in the sum of $20, or in default be committed to the work-house. This bond is practically a nullity, as the court has no power to enforce it. I think that the enactment of a law like the bill submitted would result in ridding the city to a large extent of this vagabond class.

Very respectfully,

JAMES E. PADGETT,

Special Assistant Attorney, District of Columbia.

JAMES E. PADGETT,

Special Assistant Attorney, District of Columbia.

Of the District of Columbia.

Mr. VANCE. It is recommended. Mr. VANCE. It is proper to observe that in considering the substitute the committee desired to avoid the difficulty suggested by the Senator from New York, but were exceedingly anxious to suppress the evils mentioned in the letter. This city is known to be the resort of a great many disreputable people, of a great many people without occupations, as well as of a great many unfortunate people. I ask the Senator from New York if his objection is not obviated by this section, to which I call his attention:

SEC. 8. That this act shall not apply to any female or blind person who, upon examination, shall be found by the court to be a worthy object of charity.

If that provision does not meet the objection of the Senator from New York, then the question recurs whether it is desirable to sup-press miscellaneous vagrancy on the part of the people who are not vicious and disorderly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning hour has expired, and it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday, which is Senate bill No. 133.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 1760) amending section 1852 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 6539) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to change the name of the yacht Stephen D. Barnes, of Philadelphia;

A bill (H. R. No. 6599) to change the time for holding circuit and district courts of the United States for the western district of Virginia, held at Danville, Virginia.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S.No. 1776) granting a pension to Margaret S. Heintzelman; and

A bill (S. No. 1814) to authorize the construction of a fixed bridge over the Saint Mary's River, and for other purposes.

EDUCATIONAL FUND.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (8. No. 133) to establish an educational fund and apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to public education, and to provide for the more complete endowment and support of uational colleges for the advancement of scientific and industrial education, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. Bailey, to strike out lines 10, 11, and 12 of section 3, and insert in lieu thereof:

And entered upon the books of the Treasury to the credit of the fund, and bearing interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum;

So as to make the clause read:

That the next proceeds of said sales and receipts for patents shall be set apart as an educational fund, and entered upon the books of the Treasury to the credit of the fund, and bearing interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I have no objection to the amendment.
Mr. McDONALD. I am decidedly in favor of that amendment, because I think it more nearly brings this in harmony with the rule which has been adopted in such matters than to leave the bill in its present form. Most of the States have provided an endowment stock, of which the money received under this bill will undoubtedly form of which the money received under this bill will undoubtedly form a part and thus become a part of the permanent funds of the State. Nearly all the States that have such a provision as that have regulations for the use of that fund by which it shall earn interest or income. That fund will receive the amount of 4 per cent. on the money provided for in this bill. For instance, in my own State three and a half million dollars of our common-school funds is in State bonds, which pay 5 per cent., and are non-negotiable bonds, and the remainder of our common-school fund under the laws of our State is earning every year over 5 per cent. It is the interest of the fund that we divide and distribute for the expenses of our schools.

Now, if this money, in place of being retained at interest by the General Government, is turned over to the States and becomes a part of their State systems and is blended with their State funds, it will of their State systems and is blended with their State funds, it will be in entire harmony with the system that is in operation in most of the States. It would be inconvenient in my own State to dispose of a fund of this kind in the manner in which this bill in its present shape proposes. Therefore I hope this amendment will be adopted. It gives to the States who have not made this permanent provision the presence of a fund and enables them to apply it at once to educational purposes, and so it will meet, I have no doubt, the wants of a greater number of those for whom it is designed than if the section is retained in its present form and simply the interest from year to year is doled out to the different States under the provisions of the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I think there will be no objection to the adoption of the amendment proposed, as it obviously diminishes the expense of printing bonds, and it is safer for all the States to have it as proposed by the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I am opposed to that provision of the amendment which prescribes 4 per cent. interest. It is more than this Government ought to pay upon any of its obligations or liabilities of any kind. I have no doubt that the Government can borrow any reasonable amount of money at 3 per cent., and it ought not to contract an obligation to pay more interest upon this fund than it could borrow the money for in the market. We are having a number it could borrow the money for in the market. We are having a number of special funds placed in trust in the Treasury, upon some of which we are now paying 5 per cent. interest. I do not favor that policy. In February, 1879, when we had the refunding certificate bill before the Senate, I opposed it because the interest was 4 per cent., and stated that it should be reduced to 3 per cent., and that bonds bearing that rate of interest could be negotiated by the Government. Subsequent events have proved that the statement then made was correct, and I do not think that we ought to make any obligation of the Government bear over 3 per cent. interest.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri appears to me to misapprehend the object and purpose of this bill. This is not a question of paying interest on an obligation of the United States. Here is a certain sum of money set apart from the sales of the public lands as a gratuity, the income or interest of which is to States. Here is a certain sum of money set apart from the sales of the public lands as a gratuity, the income or interest of which is to be applied to the purposes of education, to the several States. It is not a case of the Government borrowing money. It is merely a question of what the Government is willing to pay annually for the purposes of education. I would agree fully with the Senator from Missouri that in case we were borrowing money the interest of which was to be paid to a person holding the obligation, 3 per cent. would probably be high enough; but this is an entirely different purpose.

We are endeavoring to ascertain what we are willing to pay for the purposes of education in those States where illiteracy exists. I would be glad to see it raised to 10 per cent. I would be very glad, indeed, to have the Government allow 10 per cent. per annum on this insignificant fund for that purpose. It was stated yesterday, I think, that the amount that would be realized year by year would be about one million dollars. At 4 per cent. there is $40,000 to be paid by the United States Government.

United States Government.

Mr. HOAR. It will be a million and a half.

Mr. INGALLS. Well, a million and a half; the argument is not changed; it is an insignificant amount; and when we are considering this as a question of gratuity, what we will give for a beneficent purpose, it seems to me that the Senator from Missouri is not occupying a proper attitude in haggling about the rate of interest that shall be paid. I wish it were 10 per cent.; instead of reducing it I would paid. I wish it were 10 per cent.; Instead of reducing 10 I would vote to enhance it.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I do not agree with the Senator from Kansas or with the Senator from Missouri. I think the latter would put the bill in a shape which would not accomplish the object and purpose of the amendment which I have offered and which is under consideration. The Government is dealing not with creditors but with its own citizens, and this money is to be paid not to a single person but to be paid out for the benefit of all the children of the United States. I trust the Senator from Missouri will withdraw his objection.

The bill as reported by the committee directed that this fund should be invested in 4 per cent. bonds of the United States. Those bonds are now in the hands of people here and abroad, and the Secretary of the Treasury is compelled to go into the market to buy them. To obviate the necessity for doing that and paying a premium on the bonds, it was suggested that it would be better to have this sum inscribed on the books of the Treasury to the credit of this fund. It is money which belongs to the people of the United States, and the Government pays 4 per cent. on it. Mr. McDONALD. I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee if it would not be better to solve this whole question by adopting the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] and letting this fund go over to the States, and permitting them to pay it out as this fund go over to the States, and permitting them to pay it out as they choose. They may get more than 4 per cent.

Mr. BAILEY. But they might less the whole.

Mr. McDONALD. Let it be paid over to the States, to be blended with the common-school funds and systems of the different States; systems that have been built up for years and years.

Mr. BAILEY. This money will go in part to the State of Indiana, and it will be administered and need need need need need need with

Mr. BAILEY. This money will go in part to the State of Indiana, and it will be administered and used under and in accordance with the laws of the State of Indiana; that is to say, the interest will go to the benefit of the common schools of that State from year to year. Here this fund will be forever safe; and the experience that we have gained in respect to the administration of the lands that were donated by the Government by the act of 1862, it seems to me, should teach us the necessity of retaining this money in the Treasury of the United States. Under that act distributing land scrip between the States for the benefit of agricultural colleges great abuses occurred. Many of the States lost altogether the fund. Some of them were alleged to have devoted it to other purposes. Some have loaned it out at high rates of interest, and have met that fate which is common to those who undertake to secure large returns for the loan of money. I think it altogether better to let the fund remain in the Treasury. Let it be here under the custody and under the control of Congress, under the control of the Government from whose bounty it proceeds, and let the interest, and only the interest, be paid from year to year to

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, it occurs to me far better to let the proceeds go directly to the States to be used now, instead of in future generations. Let the present generation profit by this donation, for it needs it as much as any other generation will. Further, we are now paying off our national debt very rapidly. This generation is paying it for future generations, and I cannot see why if we are to have the General Government aid the States in education of the states are to have the General Government and the States in education.

cational purposes we should build up a fund for future generations and the present generation get very little or no benefit for it. We are certainly now as much in need of it as we ever shall be, and probare certainly now as much in need of it as we ever shall be, and probably a great deal more so, for we know that a certain class of our people have not had opportunities and their wants now are perhaps greater than they will be at any future time. It occurs to me that it will be far better to adopt the amendment of the Senator from Colorado. I believe that looks to that object. Am I right?

Mr. TELLER. That is the purpose of it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then I hope that the amendment of the Senator from Colorado will be adopted, and let the fund go to the States for a specific use: let it be paid to the States now, and of the Senator from Colorado will be adopted, and let the finnt go to the States for a specific use; let it be paid to the States now, and not held, as has been suggested, for generations yet to come. If you put the money as a fund in the Treasury there will be constant efforts at legislation about it. Schools and colleges will be constantly growing up; some special charitable object will want a part of it, and will seek to get it from year to year. We are paying the public debt annually at this time at the rate of about $100,000,000 a year. That is for the benefit of generations to come. Now, why tax ourselves additionally when this money can be applied to the present wants of the people? I hope that course will be taken by the Senate. Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President, I am clearly of the opinion that the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado ought to be adopted. I understand that that proposes to turn over this entire fund yearly to the States and the Territories, and thus make the respective shares of this money a part of the school fund of the respective States. Now, Mr. President, it certainly cannot be claimed that the Government of the United States can feel a deeper, a greater interest in the education of the people of the respective States than the States themselves; and I think that this Government can rely with great security, upon the guarantees and safeguards which surround States themselves; and I think that this Government can rely with great security upon the guarantees and safeguards which surround the respective school funds of the several States. There is hardly a State in the Union at the present day that has not got an independent school fund surrounded by every possible guarantee that the education and the interests of the people shall be protected. Now, for the Government of the United States to set itself up as the superior guardian of the interests of the people of the States in respect of this great subject, and to say, "We cannot trust you with the management of this little sum of money which is annually to be paid into your treasury for the education of your people," is a position that I think ought not to be taken by this Government toward the governments of the several States. What objection, therefore, can there be to the proposition of the Senator from Colorado? Suppose this money is turned over every year according to the proportion fixed by the to the proposition of the Senator from Colorado? Suppose this money is turned over every year according to the proportion fixed by the bill and the States permitted to invest it in their own securities—the State of Georgia in her bonds, the State of Florida in her bonds or in other funds—where is the harm? At all events let it become part and parcel of the State educational fund, and not have one educational fund under the control of the General Government relating to the education of the children of the State and a distinct fund within

to the education of the children of the State and a distinct fund within the control of the State for the same purpose.

I have no hesitation in saying that I approve heartily of the principle of this bill, and in no event shall I oppose it; but I would be glad to see the amendment of the Senator from Colorado adopted.

There is another part of the bill on which I designed to say a few words. It is that which relates to the taking of a portion of this fund annually for agricultural colleges. I have no objection to agricultural colleges, although I think the best way to learn the business of farming is in the open field. Nevertheless, a great deal of time and knowledge is necessary to make a practical farmer or a practical mechanic; but, after all, I think it is more important that the great body of the people should have a common-school education than that any special information should be imparted to any particular class. I do not think we shall have money enough under this bill to divide it up into small portions, setting one part aside for the education of up into small portions, setting one part aside for the education of women, another portion for the education of men, another portion for instruction in agriculture, another for instruction in mechanics, and another portion for instruction in the rudiments of an ordinary

I think, sir, if there is anything that ought to strike the legislative mind with regard to this subject it is this, that the whole fund ought to be taken and put into the common-school channel, and let the college fund stand where it is. This bill provides that one-third of the income of this fund shall be taken annually for the purpose of maintaining our agricultural colleges until their incomes amount to $30,000 a year. Practically this would do the people of my State no good whatever, for the limited fund which we have there arising from the agricultural-college scrip is so small that I hardly expect to live long enough, even though I might live to the period which ordinary calculation assigns to human existence, to see that fund reach $30,000 a year. Therefore I would be glad to see that provision changed so that the whole of this money arising from the net proceeds of patents and public lands should go at once into the common-school funds of the States, to be appropriated in accordance with the State laws for the purpose of enlightening and building up the intelligence of the and public lands should go at once into the common-school funds of the States, to be appropriated in accordance with the State laws for the purpose of enlightening and building up the intelligence of the people there upon whose shoulders rests the great fabric of this great Government. It may be that hereafter in the exercise of a liberal spirit we may find some other source to draw upon to carry out the views of my friend from Alabama [Mr. Mongan] to build up a college system; but if you mean to bring practical advantages home to the great body of the people, let this money go into the commonschool fund and have the people educated with it.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I regret to see an effort made to reduce this great measure to the dimensions of merely an annual appropriation. I take it that it is a measure which is to mark a point on the great block of time, showing that we have established a permanent fund on the part of the General Government for all future time. In many of the States where they have a large school fund it commenced from small beginnings and has risen up to a respectable and very efficient amount. Although this begins in a small way I trust it will be a permanent way to make a lasting fund, and one that cannot be diminished by any indiscretion or by any accident on the part of any State.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Vermont, who seems to have charge of the bill, especially in view of

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. Fresident, I desire to ask the Senator from Vermont, who seems to have charge of the bill, especially in view of what he has just said, whether it is the purpose of the promoters of this bill to set apart this fund in the Treasury? The language of the provision clearly indicates, to my mind, that it is the purpose of the bill to set apart this fund in the Treasury. Now I do not think that ought to be done. It seems to me that this fund as it accumulates ought to be used by the Government of the United States to liquidate its existing indebtedness or in some other way so that we shall not be practically holding a large fund in the Treasury uninvested.

Mr. MORRILL. Undoubtedly the Senator is mistaken in supposing that the Treasury will have to hold this identical sum. All it will be required to do is to pay the annual interest on it at the rate of 4 per cent

Mr. ALLISON. Then I would suggest to the Senator from Vermont that instead of saying it shall be set apart as an educational fund, the bill should say that the proceeds of the sales of the public lands shall be paid into the Treasury, and that 4 per cent. of the ascertained amount each year shall be devoted to this purpose.

And while I am on my feet I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont upon what principle it is that the surplus of the patent fund is thus to be set aside and made sacred? I see there is a reservation of power here to still legislate as we may choose to legislate with reference to the public lands; but when we come to the clause relating to the surplus of the patent fund there is no such reservation made. Now suppose it should occur hereafter that we want to tion made. Now suppose it should occur hereafter that we want to reduce the rate that we require now the poor inventors or rich inventors of our country to pay for the purpose of securing a patent, it would be at once said "we cannot do that in good faith to this permanent and sacred fund which we have provided for in this bill." I do not see any real reason why we should set apart the surplus of the patent fund at all. The proceeds of the Patent Office are now paid into the Treasury, and Congress ought to retain control of those proceeds first for an efficient and effective administration of the affairs of the Patent Office itself, and secondly, if we choose to reduce the fees that inventors are compelled to pay.

This is nothing more nor less, as I understand, than a mere assignment of a certain fund from the Treasury of the United States, because not only our patent fund but the proceeds of the sales of public lands have been used for the ordinary purposes of our Government, and they are a part of the assets of this Government. The patent lands have been used for the ordinary purposes of our Government, and they are a part of the assets of this Government. The patent fees are a tax on inventors, just as much a tax as the tobacco tax is, and we might with equal propriety, it seems to me, set apart a certain portion of the fund received from the tax on tobacco for educational purposes as the amounts paid in by inventors. Ido not object to it; I only wish, with the Senator from Kansas, that we could enlarge this fund in some proper way. I am willing, therefore, to pay 4 per cent. nominally, because it is not a payment of interest; we are simply setting apart a portion of the fund which we derive from various sources to educational purposes. It matters not whether we call it 4 or 10 or 20 per cent.; it is a mere designation of a certain amount annually, as I understand it, to be devoted to this purpose.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I represent, I suppose, a constituency as much interested in having justice to patentees done by legislation as any constituency in the world, and I think there is a special appropriateness in setting apart this patent fund to the purpose of educating the people. In the first place, as I said yesterday in regard to the sales of the public lands, it seems inappropriate that the proceeds of the public lands, regarded as in the light of public property, should be used up for the purposes of a single generation. There is a great sacred property of the United States acquired for us by past generations and the inheritance in fee-simple of all generations. Now, these patent fees are the result of what? They are the payment by the inventive intellect of the country to the Treasury as the performance of the reasonable foundation which is required of inventors for the security of their property in their inventions. The invention does not come from ignorant communities; it does not come from communities where there are no schools. On the other hand, it does not come from men of science or men of letters or the men of large and various ing to save the labor of his fingers and his toil at the workman's bench or with tools, possessing a brain instructed enough to enable him to understand and to apply science and to understand the processes and the principles of mechanism in complicated machines—it is from that class of men, receiving an education in the common school or in the technical school, that the inventions of the country come.

To appropriate this fund to the endowment of these technical schools (not merely agricultural colleges, but technical schools) and to the endowment of the common schools, without which education is impossible, seems an appropriate disposition of this fund, instead of using it for the general purposes of Government year by year. That is the first answer which I make to the point made by the honorable Senator from Iowa, [Mr. Allison.]

His second suggestion is that this may be construed to prevent the diminution of the fees which are to be paid by patentees from time to time if justice and reason shall seem to require that hereafter. I do not understand that there is anything in this bill, and I do not believe there should be anything in this bill, which shall in the least prevent the United States hereafter from diminishing the price at which it will sell its public lands, or from distributing its public lands altogether gratnitously hereafter, or from diminishing the patents. lands altogether gratuitously hereafter, or from diminishing the pat-ent fees which are to be paid by inventors; and the bill is carefully guarded to prevent any such conclusion. I have no doubt that those patent fees are to be diminished, that Congress will think it reasonable to make a change in the system in that respect, and require, perhaps, a renewal fee once in five or ten years, but to diminish the original fee paid by the inventor for his patent. But I do not believe that that diminution is to result ever in a diminution of the total receipts from that quarter into the Treasury. On the contrary, I believe that under the stimulant of the free common-school education which this bill is intended to promote, and under the stimulant of a diminution of the fee required of the inventor, the inventive genius of this country is largely to be increased, and the proceeds of that inventive genius in the Treasury, the immediate advantage to the Treasury, largely to be increased. Large as have been the achievements of the inventive genius of America, larger than the achievements of the inventive genius of all other countries in the world and ments of the inventive genius of all other countries in the world and ments of the inventive genius of all other countries in the world and of all the ages of time put together, we are in the infancy of invention. The great and chief glory of America is to be its contribution through the inventive brain of its people to those arts which make up the comfort and safety and civilization of humanity. And there certainly is nothing in this bill—if there were those who are now its chief friends and advocates would be its most determined opponents—which can in the least impose any burden on the inventive genius of

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Massachusetts misapprehends, I think, the force of my inquiry. I stated that a very careful reservation seems to be made with reference to the disposition of the public lands leaving the power of Congress to deal with them hereafter; but when it comes to the question of patent fees there seems to be no such reservation. If this bill has the sacredness which its promoters claim for it, a question may be raised in the future whether or not we can honorably and fairly reduce the fees to be paid by inventors and thereby possibly reduce the aggregate amount that shall go into the fund for this purpose.

Mr. HOAR. The other provision in regard to the public land was in my judgment totally unnecessary; but the way that came about was this: that was inserted to save any possible question in any mind which otherwise would be likely to be friendly to the bill, in regard to its affecting in the least the policy which the interest of settlers would require this Government to adopt. When this bill originally passed the House of Representatives some years ago it did not contain this provision for disposing of patent fees at all, and that was added at a subsequent time. If I had my way I would add to this bill, and answer the objection made by my friend from Colorado in that way, a provision that every dollar hereafter to be received by the United States from the debts due them for railroads, which incidentally are connected with grants of the public land, should be devoted to this purpose. I should be glad to see Congress do that; but I have no idea that the Senate would be ready to take apparently so radical and large a step. Certainly it is very easy to use such caution in regard to the patent fees as shall obviate any objection on that point; and though it seems to me to be unnecessary, if it seems to so carewhich otherwise would be likely to be friendly to the bill, in regard and though it seems to me to be unnecessary, if it seems to so careful and accurate a lawyer as my friend from Iowa to be necessary, that would be enough to induce me to vote for such a provision for that reason. Therefore if he desires to have a provision that nothing in this act contained shall be held to bind Congress in regard to the policy it may pursue with relation to patents for invention, I shall give it my vote, for one.

Mr. ALLISON. The only reason I made the inquiry was this: I found this reservation in reference to the public lands but did not find it in reference to the patent fees, and I only inquired why the distinction was made.

The Senator knows how a bill of this kind is a growth from one point to another. That provision was inserted when the bill did not contain the disposition of patent fees at all.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, whatever surplus money there is in the Patent Office in my judgment is money that is unjustly and improperly taken from the people, and the disposition that I would improperly taken from the people, and the disposition that I would make of it would be to return it pro rata to the inventors of the country. This Government is not instituted or carried on for the purpose of making money or declaring dividends. It is a government of the people; and when the expenses have been paid that is all that can be asked, and any imposition of fees in any Department that leaves a surplus is so much money unjustly taken from the people. I have no sympathy with the idea continually advanced that certain departments of the Government ought to be self-supporting, and that fees and imposts and duties ought to be added from time fees and taxes and imposts and duties ought to be added from time to time so as not only to make the expenses but to leave a surplus in the Treasury to be applied for some other purpose. But if there is to be a surplus in the Treasury from the Patent Office, which I do not think ought to exist—on the contrary, I think the fees ought to be reduced until there is nothing more than a fair meeting of the expenses—then I can see no better object to apply it to than the educa-beneses—then I can see no better on the country.

But I rose more expressly to say that I shall very cordially support the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. Teller,] and I shall do that for two reasons. In the first place, I am opposed to the idea, which the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] seems to desire, of making this a permanent department in this Govern-ment. I want it to be in the nature of an annual appropriation over which we shall have complete control, and that whenever from any reason, whether from the diminution of illiteracy or from the reduction of the revenue, it shall be necessary to stop this appropriation, we can do so without any injustice, either express or implied.

In the second place I favor the amendment because I want to do something for these people. I do not want to hold out to them an empty and delusive promise that shall be kept to their ear and broken to their hope. We have a fund annually of a million and a half of dollars; that at 4 per cent. will yield $60,000. Mr. President, half of dollars; that at 4 per cent. will yield $60,000. Mr. President, that would not buy slate-pencils and primers for the children of this country. It is empty and idle to talk about curing the disease of illiteracy in this country with $60,000 a year. Here is a great, ominicus problem threatening us to-day. Every ignorant, unlettered voter in this country is unconsciously and involuntarily a conspirator against liberty, and is a standing menace against its safety. What we want to do is to apply the remedy to the disease to-day. If we have got a million dollars that we can appropriate to that purpose let us do it now. We do not owe posterity anything; posterity will take care of itself; and I hope that the future generations of this country will not stand in need of this medicine that we now propose to apply. Future generations, I hope, will see this curse removed. to apply. Future generations, I hope, will see this curse removed. Here is a condition abnormal existing in consequence of certain social conditions, certain political conditions, that we hope will be healed and cured in time; and what we ought to do in this bill, as in any bill proposing to educate the people, is to heal the illiteracy that exists to-day in consequence of the war and the social conditions of the South.

But, sir, the amount that is proposed by this bill to be set apart as a permanent fund, in my judgment, is entirely insignificant even as an annual appropriation. We have an unquestioned right, as a duty of self-preservation to save our institutions from imminent peril, to educate these people up so that they will appreciate their duties and their rights and maintain them, and to make liberal and generous appropriations, and the petty sum of $60,000 a year to be derived from the income of the public lands and the Patent Office fees is entirely inadequate to cure the evils that we all admit to exist.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, sentiments of great importance have fallen from the lips of the Senator from Kansas, but I ask the Senate to stand by the bill as reported by the committee. ate to stand by the bill as reported by the committee. The income of the first year under the operation of this bill, if it shall become a law, certainly may not exceed sixty or seventy thousand dollars, but each recurring year will add another million and a half, perhaps two millions, certainly some sum of money to the principal upon which this interest is to be paid, and in the course of time, within his lifetime, perhaps, instead of $60,000 a year there may be a million or two or three millions a year to be distributed among the States for this

Mr. TELLER. How soon?

Mr. BAILEY. Perhaps within his life-time; and more especially will that be true if Congress shall hereafter see fit to adopt the suggestion made a moment or two ago by the Senator from Massachusetts, and dedicate to this fund all the moneys which shall hereafter be setts, and dedicate to this fund all the moneys which shall hereafter be received from the railroad companies, amounting now, I believe, to $90,000,000, or near $90,000,000, according to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury. And the Senator made another suggestion yesterday, that this will be a nucleus around which may gather the charity of the country, and from every part of our broad land, North and East and South and West, great-hearted men and sagacious men, looking to the future of our country and desiring that the children may be educated and that the schemes and dangers which have been pictured by the Senator from Kansas may be removed, will give out of their substance and from their great wealth large sums of money to this fund, to be distributed from year to year. Therefore, although the necessity of my section of the country, to-day, is very great; although we are endeavoring in our poverty, and perhaps not so successfully as we might, to build up a system of schools that will educate all the children of the country of all colors and of all races; although we would feel relieved at this time by this distribution, yet in the end it will be better for us and for all the people of the country, in my opinion, that this fund shall remain sacred and untouched that the principal of it shall be held in the Treasury of the United States now and forever for the benefit of all the people and all the children of the country.

These lands belong, as was justly said by the Senator from Massamay be educated and that the schemes and dangers which have been

These lands belong, as was justly said by the Senator from Massachusetts, to the people of the United States in fee-simple in trust. This great domain is an inheritance of the past. It should be sent down to our posterity as an inheritance, and let those who are to succeed us enjoy the benefits of this fund as well as the men of to-day. trust the Senate will not adopt, when it shall come to act upon it, the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado, but will stand by the principle of the bill, namely, that this shall be a perpetual fund for the benefit of the people for all time.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I wish to make one simple suggestion in addition to what has been said so much better than I can say it by the Senator from Tennessee. This fund is not to-day the only instrumentality of aiding the common-school systems of the States. The Peabody fund, which amounts to about $3,000,000, is being appropriated now in the same general direction, and the American propriated now in the same general direction, and the American Missionary Society, though having, I suppose, some regard to the charities of the religious bodies which make it up, is largely engaged toward the same end, so that the $60,000 which is to be paid out the first year is not the only addition to the common-school funds of the States which now is available for that purpose.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I am opposed to the pending amendment for the reason that I think it will reduce the amount of morary to be provided for education to a weekly superparently. I we money to be provided for education to a small sum annually. I prefer the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado. The Senator from Tennessee suggests that one of the objects of this bill is to provide a fund which shall continually increase—

Mr. BAILEY. The bill as reported from the committee directs that the money shall be invested in United States bonds drawing interest. The object of my amendment is to avoid the necessity of going into the market and buying the securities of the United States. It is simply to perfect the bill, and I trust the Senator when he comes to vote on it will vote to perfect the bill, and then will come up the question submitted by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. MORGAN. I propose to perfect the bill and have every disposition to do so, but the purpose of setting apartand securing this fund perpetually for the benefit of education will not be better accomplished by the investment of it in United States bonds or by putting it in the Treasury than by handing it over to the respective States for the benefit of their school funds. Great good, I think, has already been accomplished by the system we have been pursuing of having such a fund in the different States for investment. The States have, of course, a very particular interest in the security of this fund; the public attention of the whole mass of the community is turned to this subject every time the Legislature meets in any of the States, and no State, I think, will ever prove unfaithful in the administration

Now, if Senators will turn to the table which I presented yester-day, furnished by the Commissioner of Education, they will find that three States in the administration of this fund have realized a very much larger share annually to be devoted to the purposes of education than this 4 per cent. will amount to. The State of Alabama has secured a fund and pays annually 8 per cent. upon the entire amount of the investment. The State of Arkansas pays an equal if not a greater amount. This is the statement as to Arkansas:

Endowment.—Lands given by Congress; $100,000 by Washington County; $30,000 by town of Fayetteville. Value of grounds and buildings, $300,000. Annual income from bonds, $10,400; from tuition, $2,000, and State appropriation of $5,000; total income, about $17,500.

Of course that is not merely from the Government fund, but it is very much an increase over the 4 per cent. proposed to be paid by this bill on this amount of money. So you may follow it through every State and Territory that has received land scrip under the act of 1862, and you will find that the average is above 5 per cent. of moneys actually realized by the States from the investment of the fund.

I see no occasion at all for withdrawing the control of the remaining fund we propose to put in the hands of the States from the different State governments, but I see a great advantage, I think, which has already been realized in the experience of the country in the administration of this system of laws, in intrusting to each of the States the investment of this money in such manner as it may see preper. There is no danger about the security, and I am quite sure we should realize from 2 to 3 per cent. more money by adopting this course than we should either by putting it in the bonds of the United States or by putting it in the Treasury of the United States to be paid out. I consider that we are assuming here voluntarily a trust in behalf of the uneducated classes of the United States, and when we impose upon ourselves a trust of this character and set the money apart for the purpose of complying with the objects of the trust, we apart for the purpose of complying with the objects of the trust, we ought as wise trustees to allow the money to be so invested as that it will make the largest sum possible for the interest of the beneficiary. Senators have remarked that we are not creating a debt with this fund; we are not even creating a debt against the Government of the United States, but we are setting apart a portion of its revenue to be realized from the sale of public lands in trust for its purposes of common education.

One remark further, Mr. President. It was suggested by the Senator from Florida that it is not worth while to parcel out this fund, a portion of it to agricultural colleges, a portion of it to commonschool education, a portion of it to the education of women, &c., but that all had better go to one common-school fund and be applied to that all had better go to one common-school fund and be applied to the education of the masses in those branches of learning which make them qualified as voters or qualified to understand the duties of citizenship. I grant you that that is the primary object of education, to qualify the citizen for the duties of citizenship; but there is another very important matter connected with citizenship, and that is the ability of self-support and the ability of making some contribution to the advancement and prosperity of the country, so that it is necessary to give special education to special classes and for special purposes. That has been the experience of mankind, and we cannot afford now to ignore the lessons of experience when we are making this movement in favor of the education of the country.

I will say however, that it is no part or purpose of the amend-

I will say, however, that it is no part or purpose of the amendment that I propose to offer to set apart any special part of this fund for the education of women. The object I have in view is simply to so amend the original statute of 1862 as to authorize—I have changed the language of my amendment for the accommodation of Senators so as to authorize the States to endow, if they please, or to establish and conduct schools for the special education of women with reference to the industries which surround us and with which they are intimately and necessarily connected. With that explanation I have mo further remarks to make.

Mr. McDONALD. Mr. President, as connected with the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado I desire to call attention to the constitution of the State of Indiana in regard to our public schools. It is made the duty of the Legislature "to provide by law schools. It is made the duty of the Legislature "to provide by law for a general, uniform system of common schools, wherein tuition shall be without charge and equally to all." And as to the principal of the common-school fund, our constitution provides that "the principal of the common-school fund shall remain a perpetual fund, which may be increased, but shall never be diminished, and the income thereof shall be inviolably appropriated to the support of common schools, and to no other purpose whatever." It is then made the duty of the State to invest the principal of the fund, or that portion of it under the immediate control of the State so as to make portion of it under the immediate control of the State, so as to make it an increasing and interest-bearing fund, and that portion of it which under the laws of our State had been distributed to the several counties, or might be distributed to the several counties of the State, the counties were made responsible for; so that there can be no loss, the State being responsible for the principal of the fund, and then, so far as it was committed to the counties or municipal corporations to manage it, they were made directly responsible. As has been suggested by the Senator from Alabama, the fruits of the fund, the earnings of the fund, have all the time exceeded very considerably the interest provided for in this bill. I think it will be found so in almost all the States; but if there should be any of the States that would be compelled from necessity to use a greater amount than the interest of its fund and should draw on the principal for the immediate supply of its educational necessities, it should be at liberty to do so.

As respects the Patent Office fund, it seems to me that the remarks of the Senator from Kansas are well worthy of consideration. I see by the last report of the Commissioner of Patents that the income of that office for the year 1879, over expenditures, amounted to the sum of $174,292.50. We have taxed the inventive genius of the country that enormous sum in one year more than it has cost to consider their applications and to provide under the law, in accordance with the Constitution, for securing to them for a limited time a special property in that which they had invented. That seems to me to be entirely unjust, and I would not be willing to disturb the proceeds now in the Treasury in excess of the cost of considering and patenting inventions to any particular purpose, and I trust that Congress will take some measures, as far as may be in its power, to do justice to those who have been thus overtaxed. I do not favor, therefore, that portion of this bill.

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. President, in as far as this amendment is intended to perfect the text of the original bill, I have no objection to it, but on the contrary I rather am inclined to support it. I believe it is better to inscribe the amount upon the books of the Treasury as an irreducible debt rather than to have the money invested in the bonds of the United States, and fix an amount of interest which shall in the case of refunding require a change of the investment. I sympathize most heartily with the purpose which the gentlemen who have introduced this bill evidently have at heart; and, notwithstanding, I have found it quite difficult to get my consent to vote for the bill in any shape, and my difficulties have arisen from an almost invincible any shape, and my difficulties have arisen from an almost invincible repugnance—objection perhaps would be a better word—to increasing the scope of the operations of the Government even within the limit of its acknowledged powers, much less to straining in any degree those powers beyond what I think they fairly cover by their language. But in view of the great good that I think may be done (and which possibly may not be accomplished otherwise than by the aid of the Federal Government) to the systems of education in the States, I have concluded to solve my doubts in favor of this measure. Having come to the conclusion that I ought to give up some of my prepossessions, and possibly some of my indement in the matter. I Having come to the conclusion that I ought to give up some of my prepossessions, and possibly some of my judgment in the matter, I desire that the good which has induced me to make that surrender shall be effected. Therefore I shall support the amendment of the Senator from Colorado. I will not "carry coals to Newcastle" by enlarging upon the considerations presented so forcibly by the Senator from Kansas. I desire to furnish education to the people of the country to-day, not as a means simply of giving them the gratification which may come from their being well educated, but as a measure of safety to the Government and our institutions. I believe that we are now in a crisis that requires solution. I think that crisis can only be solved by educating this impense mass of people to whom we are now in a crisis that requires solution. I think that crisis can only be solved by educating this immense mass of people to whom suffrage has been given. I believe the difficulty impends upon us today, not the next decade, however great the necessities of that decade may be. Therefore I am in favor of a measure which shall to-day provide the States which are otherwise so impoverished that they cannot accomplish this good a fund which will enable them within the next current year to establish a system of education, or commence to do it, which shall go far to relieve these States from the incubus of ignorant voters which has been put upon them without their concurrence and the rest of the country from the danger which impends by reason and the rest of the country from the danger which impends by reason of that immense mass of ignorant voters. Your forty thousand or your sixty thousand dollars a year this year and next year and the next year after that will have no good effects; but if you give them a million dollars next year and a million dollars the year after and a million dollars the year after that until the period shall have elapsed within which you provide that this fund shall be distributed according to illiteracy, you will have done an immense work for bringing those States where there is so much illiteracy to an equality with the other States which have had a good system of common-school education from the beginning.

This is the consideration which has been weighing upon me and which has induced me to come to the support of this bill. As the Senator from Kansas well said, this ignorant mass of voters is a standing menace to the perpetuity of our institutions and to the good government of the country while those institutions last. I feel this to the very bottom of my heart, and I am prepared to take the step which shall, so far as is in the power of Congress, remove that difficulty and save us from the peril that is threatened. That cannot be done, as I said before, by a small contribution; it should be large. The whole question of constitutional power, so far as the Government is concerned, is given up when you apportion this sixty thousand or thirty thousand dollars, or whatever it may be, among these States. That being given up, my objection to the bill having been removed, if I may say so, to that extent, I am prepared to go to the full extent and for the next ten years to give to these people an amount of money which shall be effective for establishing a system of education in those States in behalf of the people who have lately been enfranchised among them.

It is because this fund is to be distributed according to illiteracy, because the attempt is to be made now to remove that illiteracy, that I am brought to support the bill. Hereafter, when ten years shall have elapsed, when our States shall stand somewhat upon a par in have elapsed, when our States shall stand somewhat upon a par in regard to the attainments their citizens have made in the ordinary branches of education, then I shall be perfectly willing to lay the foundation of a great fund which shall in all time make our people as thoroughly educated in all that is necessary to good citizenship as those of any government in the world. But until that time is reached, until this difficulty is removed, until we shall give to children who are now six, and eight, and ten years old the advantages of such an education as will remove them from the class that we call illiterate I am approach alteresthes to distributing only the income of illiterate, I am opposed altogether to distributing only the income of

Therefore, sir, I shall support the amendment of the Senator from Colorado; and I should be very willing to vote for an amendment to strike out so much of the bill as provides that any portion of the fund shall go for the present to the agricultural colleges; and I should do that, not in the least degree from hostility to them, but because I want to make this fund as large as possible now, and to accomplish immediately, in the near future, the next year, and the year after, and the year after that, all the good that can come from this or any similar measure.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. In that connection will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? I ask the Senator if he can conceive any possible objection to a provision leaving it at the option of the States concerned to use a portion of this fund for agricultural-college purposes or not? I am with the Senator in his line of argument; but if it is made imperative upon all the States it will compel them to take that course.

Mr. PENDLETON. I am in favor of making it imperative upon the States to expend all of this fund immediately, and I should prefer that it should not be expended in the direction of building up the agricultural colleges but of building up the simple school system. So, while I do not intend to make that an objection to the bill which will prevent my supporting it, I should be glad to have the provision in reference to agricultural colleges stricken out.

I desire to call the attention of the gentlemen who have charge of the bill particularly to the fourth section. In the first line of the fourth section it is declared that "the amount apportioned to the school districts of any State or Territory or of the District of Columbia and certified as herein provided, shall be paid," &c. I desire to ask those gentlemen whether or not it is the intention of the bill school districts of any State or Territory or of the District of Columbia and certified as herein provided, shall be paid," &c. I desire to ask those gentlemen whether or not it is the intention of the bill that the officers of the Federal Government shall apportion to the school districts of the different States the amounts which under a previous section would be apportioned to the State itself and deal directly with the school districts through its officers?

Mr. MORRILL. It will be done entirely by the States.

Mr. PENDLETON. The gentleman has answered the question as I hoped he would, that the fund apportioned under the third section is to be given to the States themselves according to the illiteracy of the population, and the fund is to be paid over to the officer of the State for the purpose of distribution among the school districts according as the State shall direct. That being the case, I will only call attention to the language of the fourth section, in the first, second, and third lines, and afterward in the ninth and tenth lines, and suggest that an amendment will be necessary, because the meaning of that section, as I understand it, is that the apportionment shall be made by the Federal Government among the school districts, and the payments shall be made to an officer of the State, who shall deliver over to the school districts the amount which is apportioned to them by the Federal officer. But as the gentleman assents to the view which I intended to assert, there will be no difficulty in amending the section, if it shall be found necessary, so as to conform to his idea and my own. the section, if it shall be found necessary, so as to conform to his idea and my own.

Mr. President, I intend also to support the amendment to be offered by the Senator from Missouri, [Mr. Vest,] to strike out the sixth section of the bill, because I agree with every word that he has said, that when you require the Legislature of a State, as a condition-precedent dent to receiving any portion of this money, to pass a law declaring that the money shall be distributed according to the provisions of this act, it is not only unnecessary but it is entirely derogatory to the dignity of the State to permit a mere clerk here in the city of Washington to sit in judgment on that State and determine whether or not it has fulfilled the obligations of its own law and the pledge of not it has fulfilled the obligations of its own law and the pledge of honor which it gives in order to receive any portion of this fund. In order to carry out that idea, I desire to say that on line 19 of section 9 I shall at the proper time move an amendment which shall require the judgment of Congress upon the default of a State in distributing the fund according to the provisions of this law and the State law before the State shall be deprived of its proportion of the fund according to the provisions of the provision of the state shall be deprived of its proportion o state law before the State shall be deprived of its proportion of the fund created by this bill. I am not willing that any less authority than Congress shall sit in judgment upon the performance of the obligation and duty by the State to administer the fund that it receives in accordance with its own law and the law of Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Let it be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out lines 10, 11, and 12 f section 3, in the following words:

And shall be invested in the bonds of the United States bearing a rate of interest not less than 4 per cent. per annum, both principal and interest payable in coin;

And to insert in lieu thereof:

And entered upon the books of the Treasury to the credit of the fund, and bearing interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I desire to make an inquiry of the hair. If this amendment should be adopted, would it then be competent for the Senate to strike out the whole proviso as proposed by the Senator from Colorado?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that an amendment is pending to strike out the whole clause, and this is an amendment by way of perfecting the text before the question is taken on striking it out.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then of course it will be in order to strike it out hereafter.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly, it will be in order to strike the whole thing out.

Mr. TELLER. The amendment of the Senator from Tennessee is to perfect the text.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. Bailey.]

The amendment was agreed to—ayes 29, noes not counted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. Teller,] to

Mr. TELLER. My amendment needs some slight modification in order to carry out the idea of the bill. I move to strike out all after the word "year," in line 8 of section 3, down to and including the word "provided," in line 15, and in line 16 to strike out "said apportionment of said net proceeds and the interest on said fund to and among" and to insert "proceeds of said sales and receipts for patents shall be paid to;" so as to make the proviso read:

And provided further, That for the first ten years the proceeds of said sales and receipts for patents shall be paid to the several States, Territories, and District of Columbia, &c.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I suggest to the Senator from Colorado to let the question be first taken on striking out the matter down to the word "provided," in line 15, and afterward he can move his amendment to the subsequent clause.

Mr. TELLER. I will accept the suggestion of the Senator; and in order that there may be no misunderstanding, I will first move to strike out from the word "year," in line 8, down to the word "and," in the fifteenth line. Then the other amendment may come afterward.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Colorado will be reported.
The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out, in section 3, all after the word "year," in line 8, down to and including the word "provided," in line 15.
Mr. MORRILL. That I understand includes the amendment of the

Mr. MORRILL. That I understand includes the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee just adopted by the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. That includes the amendment just adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. TELLER.]

Mr. TELLER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, a single word. I desire to ask the friends of the bill to stand by it as it was reported, if they expect any considerable benefit from it hereafter, and not to fritter it away on the idea of absorbing all the income for a short time. If this is to the idea of absorbing all the income for a short time. If this is to amount to anything and make a figure in future history, the bill should retain its features as reported by the Committee on Education and Labor; and, in my judgment, it would be a penny-wise and pound-foolish policy to adopt the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado. It would settle the question as to any further funds being incorporated with this educational fund. I hope, therefore, the Senate will adhere to the bill as it was reported.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President, if the people of the whole country were in the condition of those in the State which the Senator so ably represents there would be great force in what he says, but it must be admitted that one of the greatest benefits calculated to flow from this measure will be in lifting up and enlightening a very large class of people in the South who have never tasted the blessings of a common-school education. In nearly all the States of New England they have had a perfected system for years, the advantages of which have been extended to all classes of their people. Not so in the South. The common-school system has just come into life, and it has met with encouragement and support not beyond its merits, but at the same time it has hardly been a success. There is a large class of people there, especially the black people, who are in need of education. A few years ago they emerged from slavery with the scales of bondage upon their eyes.

Mr. MORRILL. May I ask the Senator from Florida if he would really desire to diminish the proportions of this bill to an annual assistance to the several States in relation to their annual appropriations, or whether he would not prefer to see it something of a larger character?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. No; I would not diminish it, but I would increase it, if I could. If I had my way, meeting the liberal spirit which has been indicated from the other side of the Chamber on this measure, I would appropriate the proceeds of every foot of the public lands in the five land States of the South to the education of the uncultured masses who live within their limits. That would be a measure that would come up to the justice of the case. I have no complaint to make of this bill, because the principle of it I approve; but I say you have in existence there a class of people who are without education, that it is important to educate them now, and when you get them educated, even partially, they will be people to appreciate its blessings and lend a helping hand to the children that come after them and who will not stand in need of the same bounties of the Government that the present generation requires. There has the Government that the present generation requires. There has always got to be a starting point in everything.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Florida allow me to ask him a question f

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Florida allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. Is the Senator informed as to the opinion of the superintendent of public schools in his State in regard to the comparative efficiency, in accomplishing the object, of the two schemes?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I am not.

Mr. HOAR. I do not of course put the opinion of any man against that of the Senator from Florida (it would be indecorous and farthest from my point) but I am speaking now of simply effecting this object best. Does it not seem to the honorable Senator that the united opinion of the superintendents of public education, expressed in the Southern States, who have made this scheme their study, ought in a matter of mere comparative efficiency to weigh very much with the Senate, and I ask whether it will not with him?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I pay respect to the enlightened opinions of everybody, and still I make it a rule never to surrender my own. I have great regard for the opinion of the gentleman who has been alluded to by the Senator from Massachusetts, but with all due deference to him I still think that more substantial benefit to the interests of the great body of the people requiring education will result from the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Colorado than by permitting the bill to remain in its present condition.

by permitting the bill to remain in its present condition.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I wish to ask if an amendment is now in order?

I have been out of the Chamber, and do not know exactly the situation of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment pending.
Mr. SAUNDERS. I can offer the amendment I propose now or at some other time. I will offer it now, if there is no objection.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can state it, but there

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can state it, but there is an amendment pending.

Mr. SAUNDERS. If there is a question before the Senate, I will wait until it is settled.

Mr. INGALLS. The yeas and nays have been ordered, I understand. Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, there are fifty million people in this country, we are told. There are about fifteen million children to be educated. The average of school wages is not far from $40 per month to each teacher. If the amendment of the Senator from Colorado should be adopted, there would be perhaps $1,000,000 annually to be distributed among the States. As near as I can calculate, allowing fifty scholars to each school, which is a liberal allowance, that would prolong a school in each district in the country about two days annuprolong a school in each district in the country about two days annually. Perhaps the average length of the school year is not far from ninety to one hundred days, at present, throughout the country. It is not far from that, I think, in the South; it may be somewhat more in the North.

It is perfectly apparent, it seems to me, that the amendment of the Senator from Colorado is not to result in any appreciable increase of the length of term of the common schools in this country in each year. There is no essential difference, so far as the prolongation of the schools is concerned, between the bill amended as suggested by the Senator from Colorado and the bill as it stands at present. Whatever real advantages are to come from this bill must come from other considerations, and I think they will be very great. The Peabody fund is now between two and three million dollars. Only the interest of that fund is distributed, and yet it is the concurrent testimony of the educators of the country everywhere, who are qualified really from anything like an expert knowledge to judge upon this subject, that the distribution of the Peabody fund, all through those sections of the country where it is distributed, has accomplished more for the benefit of the cause of education than almost any other zency whatever.

The good to result from the enactment of this bill is not to come from the money that will be distributed in the different sections of the country, but it is to come from the other essential fact that public attention is necessarily drawn to the subject of education by the imperative requirement that there shall be reports from every school imperative requirement that there shall be reports from every school district showing the status of every child throughout the country, and leading to discussion among those who are interested in the subject-matter of the education of the people, so that ideas will be evolved, so that measures will be devised, so that the people at the South, the people at the North, the people of all sections of the country will come to be interested in themselves, and learn their own wants, and then they will seek to relieve them.

My friend, the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. Hoan,] suggests to me the idea that if the entire Peabody fund had been distributed the first year it would have been a dron in the bucket, it would have the first year it would have been a drop in the bucket, it would have disappeared as an influence upon the condition and prospects of the country, while now it is one of the great educational agencies at work in the United States, not because of the money that is involved in it, but because it necessarily draws attention to the subject-matter of education.

The distribution of this fund through national agencies—for it is a The distribution of this fund through national agencies—for it is a national fund, and it ought to go through them if at all to the States to be appropriated by them for the improvement of the common schools in all the States, and in the Territories likewise—will be, I think, of very great consequence to this country; and it is only by reason of the fact that this class of agencies will be set at work that I feel any great interest in this bill. I surely am not at all bewildered by the extravagant sum that is to be distributed, and I think but very little will come of it except in the way in which I have indicated. There has been some suggestion from time to time as though Senators were conquering an invincible conviction in their own minds in

There has been some suggestion from time to time as though Senators were conquering an invincible conviction in their own minds in making this national appropriation in the way that is proposed, as though it might be perhaps unconstitutional, as though it might perhaps be a dangerous thing that the nation should take some interest in itself as a nation. I, for my own part, cannot conceive that there is any violation of State rights in the strictest possible construction of that theory in the nation appropriating its own funds to the education of the children who, while they are to be citizens of the States, are equally to be citizens of the nation itself. We are called more by the national Constitution to guarantee to every State in the upon by the national Constitution to guarantee to every State in the upon by the national Constitution to guarantee to every State in the Union a republican form of government; and how are we to guarantee to a State a republican form of government unless we possess one ourselves? It seems to be conceded all over the Chamber that a republican form of government cannot exist excepting as it is based upon the intelligence and virtue of its citizens. If a republican form of government cannot exist in a State except by the virtue of its citizens, how is it to exist in the nation? Can a nation without a republicant of the contraction of the contracti zens, how is it to exist in the nation? Can a nation without a republican form of government guarantee a republican form of government to the States? It seems to me that it becomes a practical absurdity to say that the nation cannot educate wherever it finds him the child of any State who is to become the citizen of the nation. I go so far as this, and I think it is no violation of the theory of State rights at all. I believe it is simply in accordance with the principles of the Constitution and the implied powers contained in the Constitution itself, that if the State fails to educate the child who is to be the citizen of the nation as well as of the State the nation may inthe citizen of the nation as well as of the State, the nation may interfere and by compulsion if necessary provide within the geographical limits of the State the means of education; otherwise it cannot preserve to itself a republican form of government. If it cannot be that to itself, to the National Government, how is it to guarantee that that to itself, to the National Government, how is it to guarantee that form to the State, I want to know?

But to leave that matter, which is not raised by the bill, every one concedes, I think, that this bill is so drawn as to violate the feelings of no man, however strictly he may hold to the theory of State rights. If the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado should be adopted the essential features of the bill, it seems to me, would disappear from it; the good to be expected from it would be gone. Therefore I for one am for adhering as strictly as possible at least to all the leading features of the bill as reported.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I do not agree with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] in much that he has said, for I think the Government of the United States has nothing whatever to do with the education of the children of the country and has no power to dictate to the State itself on questions of education. But some with the education of the children of the country and has no power to dictate to the State itself on questions of education. But some portion of what the Senator has said has suggested to my mind a little arithmetical calculation. Estimating there are fifteen million children in the country of the school age—and there are more than that, for one-third of the population of the United States, certainly in the Southern States, in my own State quite one-third of the population, is within the school age—and assuming that this fund will yield $1,500,000 in the first year, then but ten cents, a single dime, would be given by the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado for each child in the country, a sum that would be utterly valueless, that would add nothing to the efficiency of the school system of any one of the States; it would be money thrown away; it would do no good.

I agree that the value of this measure is not so much in the donation that is now given by the bill as it is in what may come hereafter. The suggestion made by the Senator from Massachusetts, to which I referred a while ago, is very pregnant. He is evidently looking to the time when this Government will donate to this fund perhaps the money due from the railroads with which the Government haps the money due from the railroads with which the Government has been associated, a large sum of money. Other sums will be given, as he has suggested, by individuals, by the charity of citizens. From other quarters money will come, and, as suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire, the attention of the country will be directed to the school systems of the country. Reports will come under the directions of this bill from each of the States to the Commissioner of Education, and Congress can by examining the reports of the Commissioner acquaint itself, and the reports being sent through the country the people throughout the whole length and breadth of our land will acquaint themselves with the condition of education.

I hope, therefore, Mr. President, that we shall not be guilty of the folly, for I would regard it as a folly, of voting away the capital of this fund to be distributed among the States, for it would be of no value to any one of them. I repeat, if any gentleman will make the calculation he will see that it would give but one dime for each child who is of school age in the United States, and it would be worse than folly to fritter the money away in that manner.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Senator if that be so how much will the State get if the interest only is given?

Mr. BAILEY. About one-half a cent for each child in the first year, two cents the next; but I will refer the Senator to that problem which he and I worked out when we were school-boys, of a contract made between a gentleman and his neighbor in the sale of a horse. made between a gentleman and his heightor in the sale of a horse. He was to pay one cent for the first nail in the horse's shoe, two cents for the next, doubling each time; and I believe it required the sale of a vast estate to pay the debt. But this will be an accumulating fund; it will grow from year to year; and the time will come, I trust in my day, when instead of fifty thousand or seventy thousand dollars a year there will be millions distributed by the Government of the United States among the States for the education of their

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, it seems to me that the sole question in this controversy is whether the United States Government or the State governments shall be the trustee for the school fund. The principle of this bill merely carries out the famous land bill of Mr. clay to distribute the proceeds of the sales of public lands among the several States. Most of the States took their distributive share and consecrated it to the purposes of common-school education. My State did so, and that is the basis of our system to-day.

I understand the amendment of the Senator from Colorado simply to be to turn over to each State as the money is paid into the Treasury its distributive share of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands and let them add that to the fund they already have. No State is going to squander this away; no State is going to pay out the capital itself. All the States will invest the money in good securities and put it in the common-school fund for the great purpose of general education. Sir, I dislike the idea of having the United States Government hold a portion of the fund and the States a portion of the fund that is to go to the support of the common schools. Make it uniform. Put some money at once into the hands of the States. They will add that to the fund which they already have, and it will simplify the entire transaction. I therefore shall support the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the bill, as it came from the committee, is a bare sentiment. It contains nothing practical and nothing useful. The honorable Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. Hoar,] who is a member of the committee, I believe, says that it is not expected that it will be any financial benefit directly, but it will be an incentive; that when the people of Georgia, of Alabama, and of Mississippi look up here and see that the United States is accumulating a large sum of money to be available in the far distance, it will incite them immediately to commence levying taxes and collecting them from their people for educational purposes.

Mr. President, we ought to deal with the practical things of life,

Mr. President, we ought to deal with the practical things of life, and never more so than when we come to a question of so much importance as the education of the people. Suppose the United States accumulates ten, fifteen, or twenty million dollars; and I say to the Senators here who expect to get a great fund of money from this land that that is not so. In a little while the proceeds of the sales of public lands will fall off to such an extent that there will be very little to be paid under this measure. The expenses will continue, but the receipts will be lessened, and this is the net result that goes to these States.

Mr. President, I do not believe that it is necessary that the Government of the United States should accumulate a large fund of money for this object. I believe that it is the duty of every State to educate its children, and I believe that it is within the province of the General Government not to go into the States and control their schools, but to contribute money if the Government see fit. I do not deny that the Government may contribute in the way proposed by the bill. It is a question with me of practicability. The question is, which will have the greatest effect upon the people now, to give them this ten cents or five cents, or whatever it may be, to-day, or to pile it up and tell them that if they behave well in the distant future they may have it?

May have it?

As I said yesterday, what you should desire to meet is the present want. "Since this bill has been under discussion," said an intelligent gentleman to me who has been all over the South and who knows, "the hungering for education among the negroes of that section of the country is perfectly marvelous." Shall we put them off ten years? Shall we wait until the fund accumulates? Shall we let them hunger for education and go without it until they have grown up and passed out of the years recognized by the bill as those which entitle them to share in the beneficence of the Government? I say that it is the child of say years old end unward to day who wents. that it is the child of six years old and upward to-day who wants education. I say that if you educate the boys and girls to-day and give them education the children who come after them will be much give them education the children who come after them will be much more apt to get an education than these children now. If you educate the older children in a family the younger ones will get an education. If you educate the fathers and the mothers the children will always be educated. In the country from which most of us came there is no man so poor who has an education who does not get it for his children; and he will get it if he is put on the heights of the Rocky Mountains. He will get it no matter where he may be. If there are no schools he will teach them himself; his wife will teach them. The object should be to meet the present want of children. them. The object should be to meet the present want of children whose parents are unable to teach them and give these children an education, and not wait to say when they have grown up and beyond its reach and beyond its wants that then we will turn in and educate the whole community.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] says that the fund The Senator from New Hampshire [517, 51,318] says that the linu is so small that if you devote the whole of it it will do no good, and yet he proposes to devote the mere interest upon it, and he says that will accomplish the great purposes of the bill. If so, it is simply because the States, looking at this fund, are stimulated to raise a fund of their own by the fact that the National Government has a fund. The Senator says the reports will stimulate them. He says that the people will not want the reports to come here and have it appear that they are lower in the scale of intelligence and that their educational facilities are not as good as those of other States. Mr. President, they have been coming here year after year with those reports. The report of the Commissioner of Education has shown conclusively that the facilities for education in some sections of the country are not to be compared with those in others. The statistics that have been on file have shown that 45 per cent. of the people of one entire section neither read nor write, while only 6 per cent. in the other sections of the country are in that unfortunate position. And yet they have not been moved or stimulated by that report, and they will not be moved and stimulated in the future by such a report as is now proposed. It is a question whether the sum is big enough to give these people any practical immediate benefit, and if it is not then the bill is vicious in the whole and ought not to be here at all.

I say that a million dollars or a million and a half, as it was stated here this morning—a million, I think, is nearer to the fact—divided practically among the late slave States would be of some benefit, whether it be used to-day or put at interest, and to-morrow you will get another, and the next year you will get another, and the following year you will get another million. It is said that if the Peabody fund had been distributed it would have been of no avail. Why? Because when it was once distributed that would have been an end Because when it was once distributed that would have been an end of it. We propose to distribute the same money next year that we distribute this year; and I trust and hope that we shall be able next year to vote a larger sum than this for this unfortunate class of people. I am in favor of meeting this necessity now. As I said yesterday, I am in favor of voting a larger sum than this. If it is not large enough, let us vote more now. Let us find somewhere that we can wring from the tax-payers a little more money. I tell you, Mr. President, the people of the United States will pay for this purpose with a freedom and with a zeal that they pay no other portion of the public taxes. I know that it is so with all men who have an interest in public education. I know in the State in which I live we began in public education. I know in the State in which I live we began poor, and the people paid school taxes with a greater freedom and alacrity than they paid any other taxes; and it will be so all over the country. Give them to understand that the money thus collected the country. Give them to understand that the money thus collected by special tax or otherwise goes to educate the unfortunate and the ignorant men in the South, and they will respond to that demand of the Government with alacrity and with zeal.

I believe that the principle is right to pay the money now, but I do not believe in the principle of hoarding this money. I do not believe it is the duty of the General Government, in the ordinary sense of the term, to educate the people. I believe that is the duty of the States, but the States have neglected that duty, and therefore there is an emergency, as has been said, upon us. I believe now in responding to that emergency and appropriating from the public funds.

is an emergency, as has been said, upon us. I believe now in responding to that emergency and appropriating from the public funds. When you have paid this money for ten years you may stop. When the illiteracy stands upon the record as represented by 6 per cent, then you may stop, because then the public of those States will see to it that the school system is not abolished.

To-day you may go through the Southern States (and it has been my fortune to go there twice at the command of the Senate) and you will find that the anxiety of those people is for an education, and if they have responded to the calls of a certain political party with zeal and with alacrity it was because they believed that that party was the party of free schools. To-day in any State in this Union where a common-school system has been adopted and has been in effect five years you cannot without a social revolution destroy the system. Ten years will put it upon a foundation that nothing can defeat or destroy. As I said before, educated fathers will have educated children; the educated older members of the family will see to it that the younger are educated; but more than that, the tax-payers will see to it that the opportunities are presented for every child in that community to have an education. That, I believe, is the duty of the State, and wherever the State responds to that demand then it is the duty of the General Government to drop the matter and let the States take care of it themselves and not further interfere.

I am not a State-rights man in the proper sense of the term. not afraid of the beneficence and donations of the General Government; but I do not believe that the General Government would be ment; but I do not believe that the General Government would be justified in stepping up and supporting the schools of my State. Why? Because we are able to support our own schools and we are willing to support our own schools. Is that the case all over the country? We are told here by friends of this bill, and the friends of the bill as it came from the committee who oppose this amendment, that they are not able to support a public school; that they are not willing to do it if they are able; and because they are neither willing nor able, or perhaps because they are unable, I am in favor of bestowing this gratuity on the part of the Government. I want it bestowed immediately. If anybody will show me how it can be done without embarrassing the Government, I will double it, I will treble without embarrassing the Government, I will double it, I will rebie it, I will give them enough so that every school district in that section of the country shall maintain a competent and proper school for three or four months in the year. I would fix it, if I had the power, so that they would be compelled to do it; but we cannot do that. Therefore we must encourage them; and I say the encouragement best made is by giving them the means of doing it, and not simply by piling up money here and having them endeavor to emulate some by piling up money here and having them endeavor to emulate some other State, to follow the example of Massachusetts or New York or some other State whose example has been held up to them for these many years without any appreciable benefit.

Mr. President, I said yesterday, and I repeat to-day, that I offered this amendment in the interest of the whole theory of assisting these people to educate their children. I do not see how the beauty or the harmony of the bill is destroyed when we pay over this small pittance to the people to be now used as is suggested by the committee itself. I said the bill was founded upon a sentiment. There seems to be another sentiment in it, and that is that we ought not to touch this fund. I know that the committee baye given great attention to the subject. I know that the committee have given great attention to the subject. I know they have consulted the superintendents of public instruction, and I know that their wishes and their views upon this subject are entitled to some consideration; but I do not propose here or elsewhere to surrender my views upon a question of this kind to the suggestions of anybody who can know no more about it than I do. I have tested all the advantages of the common school; I have seen it from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean; I profess to know something about it; I spent seven years of my life as a public-school teacher, and I know something of the wants of the people and how to reach them by the ordinary methods of inductive learning. I know something about it; but if the superintendent of public instruction from Florida or from another State said that he wanted a half of one cent for each child in his State, and that that would be better than a donation, that that would hire teachers and put them in the schools and keep them there, I should very much doubt his judgment, and I would never surrender my judgment upon that question to him.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, there is really no difference between

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, there is really no difference between the proposition of the Senator from Colorado and that of the committee. Both propose to give absolutely nothing so far as money is concerned. The Senator from Colorado proposes to add one or two days to the school year; not more than that. The committee propose to add, it may be a minute, five minutes, fifteen minutes out of the year. That is all there is to it. Now, if the Senator will make a motion to amend the bill, or if he or anybody will appear here with a proposition to distribute fifty millions of money immediately throughout the United States and give forty millions of it to the South, I will vote for that proposition. I will vote for it every year as long as I am in Congress, and I will advocate it as long as I live, if it is wanted.

The accumulation of a great national fund to be appropriated to such an extent as to affect to any perceptible degree the education of the children within the several States will not, in my belief, be the best way to approach this subject. I say that there is no good coming from the interference of the national power in this matter of education, except as it stirs up the feeling at home and arouses the interest of the people themselves. If we should make appropriations, I say that I am ready to do it, if anybody will ask for them; but if we should accumulate a large national fund, so large that ultimately it might relieve the people of the various States to any considerable extent of the burden of self-education, the people throughout the country would abandon their State systems of education. Of course the people are not going to submit quietly to taxes even for the best purpose in the world, and if they find that they can lean upon the General Government for those funds they will come to do so, and the common-school system and the education of the common people, so far as it depends upon the people themselves, will disappear. When common-school system and the education of the common people, so far as it depends upon the people themselves, will disappear. When they have in each locality, in each school district, in each county, in each State, lost their personal interest in the subject-matter of educa-tion, then it will be impossible for the National Government to educate that people, unless it interferes by a well-organized system of its own and plants its teachers in every school district throughout the entire geographical jurisdiction of the country, States and Territories alike

I do not think it would be well for the country that there should be an extraordinary national fund, or a great amount of money cont-ing to the various States in the way of national assistance in the maintenance of the schools by the Government of the United States. Neither the proposition of the Senator from Colorado nor that of the committee will give it, but there will be a great benefit resulting in the way that I indicated in the few remarks which I offered before.

the way that I indicated in the few remarks which I offered before.

The statistics which are offered here are the statistics of the census of 1870. The man who thinks there has been no progress made at the South since that time is laboring under a very mistaken view of things, as I believe. The common-school system in every Southern State has very largely improved since 1870. Many of the Southern States have to-day, I think, vigorous, thrifty, and extremely beneficial and efficient systems of common-school education, and they are improving every day. The man who notes the reports of the national Commissioner of Education must see this. The Southern people themselves are to-day more interested in the subject-matter of education than the people are at the North. The Northern man who thinks that in ten years from this time there will be more intelligence in the North than there will be among the children of the South I believe also labors under a mistaken view.

North than there will be among the children of the South I believe also labors under a mistaken view.

Now, what has brought about this change, which is a matter of fact, since the year 1870 ? It has not been done by the appropriation of any national fund at the South. It has been done, more than by all other agencies whatever, as I believe, by the fact that the Commissioner of Education here at Washington and the superintendents of public instruction throughout the South have co-operated with each public instruction throughout the South have co-operated with each other so that information has become very generally diffused by this national agency all through the South, and the improved condition of the various States at the South has stimulated them to provide for the waster afficient systems of common-school education. There has been no national fund concerned in this process. until we get the statistics of the incoming census will find that the North does not stand with 6 per cent. of illiterates and the South with 45 per cent. He will find that there has been an improvement, and to what is that attributable, I ask?

and to what is that attributable, I ask?

Mr. President, I believe whatever good there is in this bill is in keeping it just as it is, unless somebody will make a motion to have a very largely increased amount appropriated and distributed at once to provide for the existing emergency. For my own part, I think we had better stand by the bill as it now is.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, yesterday I stated briefly the reasons why I could not support the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, which amendment is very broad upon its face and is somewhat attractive. I beg leave now, with the indulgence of the Senate, to follow up a little further the idea that I then threw out in opposition to the amendment. It has been my duty heretofore to look into and examine to some considerable extent the workings of the common-school system. I am satisfied, from my experience and from common-school system. I am satisfied, from my experience and from my observation in the consideration of this question here in the last two days, that the very worst thing we could do would be to give this fund directly to the States, as contemplated by the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

this fund directly to the States, as contemplated by the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The theory of a school fund is that it shall be fixed, that it shall be certain. The purpose of the bill is to fix a fund, though small it may be, but yet to grow, to grow certainly although it may grow slowly, nevertheless it will grow, as imperceptibly as you please, as the islands of the sea, or as the small shrub that becomes the tall sapling of the forest, yet grow it will and grow it must.

Then if this fund is given to the States directly it will be sure to enter into the local politics of the States, to ascend or descend with the political barometer of the States, to share the vicissitudes of the States, and instead of a benefit being conferred upon the people of those States there will be a direct evil done. I have seen this and I have read of it, besides having known it. Here is a fund provided by the bill, fixed and certain, as fixed and certain as the credit or the ability of the United States will be fixed and certain, to grow with the coming and going of each year. Whether it be two cents, four cents, or five cents, yet it will come as certainly as to-morrow's sun. Whatever may be the condition of the State, prosperous or not, high taxes or low, hard times or good times, this fund is to be fixed and certain, and the interest paid regularly. If you say to the States, take this sixty or seventy or one hundred thousand dollars without restriction, without limitation, with no one to account to, then the fund may be dissipated in a short time, and not a trace of it left, because it is as sure to go into the politics of the State as it is given unrestricted to it.

Every sixteenth section grant every school grant that has been restricted to it.

Every sixteenth section grant, every school grant, that has been made by the Government of the United States has been made under restrictions of this character, and every decision that has been made by the Supreme Court of the United States upon those grants has held that they are sacred and consecrated grants, and there can be no diversion of the fund if there is power to prevent it. There have been two celebrated cases, one in fourth Otto, and the other in twenty-second Howard from Indiana, in which this question was tested, and we follow now but in the wake of the precedents when we say that only the interest of this fund shall be used, and that the fund itself shall be forthcoming as sure as the Government of the United States shall be forthcoming as sure as the Government of the United States lives, and breaths, and prospers.

It is confessed on all sides that the benefit immediately from this bill will be small, taking either view of it, whether we use the principal or merely the interest. No school-house will be built under the operation of either view of the bill upon every hill-top in the State of Arkansas and the State of Louisiana and the State of Alabama and ther States. We cannot at once take care of the great mass of in of Arkansas and the State of Louisiana and the State of Alabama and other States. We cannot at once take care of the great mass of ignorance that has been thrown upon the country so suddenly and so unexpectedly by the results of the war, as to which nobody yet knows why it came on, but, as was said of the battle of Blenheim, "it was a famous victory;" and we propose to lay a foundation by which after a while, as certainly as the needle points to the pole, we may redeem this ignorance in the South and in other portions of the country. That we may heal, but no healing will come by the fund being given directly to the States. We should make it as all school funds have been made, a fund upon which you may draw your interest, and whether the sun shines or whether we have storms from the heavens the interest will be paid, and to that extent the schools will prosper.

I am satisfied upon investigating this question, with the experience

I am satisfied upon investigating this question, with the experience I have had with school funds, that this is the only practical course to be pursued in this matter.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. President, I could add but little to what has been said on this subject by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GAR-LAND] and by the other friends of the bill. I simply ask that the friends of the bill stand by it in its present shape. I do not desire to differ with the Senator from Florida [Mr. Jones] certainly, but if the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] is adopted the whole principle of the bill is given away, and in that sense it is a hostile amendment. The bill is for the establishment of an educational fund, and I ask the friends of the bill to stand by it in its present shape and vote down the amendment of the Senator from Colorado. I ask for a vote on that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. EDMUNDS in the chair.) The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. Teller,] on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted-yeas 31, nays

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. To carry out the idea completely, I now move in line 16 of section 3 to strike out the words "said apportionment of said net proceeds and the interest on said fund to and among" and to insert "proceeds of said sales and receipts for patents shall be paid to;" so as to read:

That for the first ten years the proceeds of said sales and receipts for patents shall be paid to the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I do not know but that it would be proper now to turn the bill over to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. Not at all.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I still ask to have the bill perfected by the adoption of the amendment which I have heretofore offered.

In section 3, line 27, I move to strike out the words "the aforesaid" and insert "an," so that the clause will read, "in accordance with an act of Congress." I beg to state to the Senate that I consider the loss of this principle in the bill was my own fault for not asking the Senate to adhere to its agreement made day before yesterday, and the responsibility of it rests upon myself for not insisting on an adherence to the agreement.

agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. Burn-

The amendment was agreed to

Mr. SAUNDERS. I wish to make an amendment in the first section. After the word "provided," in line 5, it reads thus:

That this act shall not have any effect to repeal, impair, or suspend any law now authorizing the pre-emption of public lands, or the entry of public lands for homesteads, nor as limiting in any manner the power of Congress to alter or extend the right of homestead upon such lands.

After the word "lands," in line 10, I wish to insert:

Nor shall this act in any way interfere with any law now in force relating to en-ries under the timber-culture act.

tries under the timber-culture act.

It will be remembered that there are three ways of disposing of the public lands now; one by homestead, another by pre-emption, and a third, under the timber-culture act allowing title to parties who plant and cultivate a certain number of trees. Two of these modes are provided for here, but the third is left out evidently by an oversight of the framers of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. SAUNDERS.]

Mr. BOOTH. If that be necessary, which I doubt, I suggest that after the words "timber-culture act" there should be added "or the act for the sale of timber lands." Timber lands cannot only be acquired under the timber-culture act, but by direct sale.

acquired under the timber-culture act, but by direct sale.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I accept that modification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska modifies his amendment, as the Chair understands. The question is on the amendment as modified.

Mr. BOOTH. On second thought I do not think it is necessary, and I do not effer the amendment I suggested.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska withdraw his modification?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I understood the Senator from Celifornia to propose this as an additional amendment.

Mr. BOOTH. I have withdrawn the suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska accepted it and it then became a part of the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, and it now stands as a part of his amendment.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I wish, then, to withdraw that part of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska again modifies his amendment so that it now reads as the Secretary will report.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed in line 10 of section 1, after the word "lands," to insert:

Nor shall this act in any way interfere with any law now in force relating to entries under the timber-culture act.

Mr. McDONALD. As that whole subject is embraced in section 10 of the bill, I move to strike out the entire proviso from section 1.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Nebraska has precedence.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I think it would be better to perfect this now, and if anything should occur afterward inducing the Senate to strike out any other part they can do so.

Mr. McDONALD. I should like to inquire the necessity of having this same subject twice repeated in the bill, in the first section and in the tenth section?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

of the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. McDONALD. Now I move to amend the first section by striking out the entire proviso beginning on line 5 and ending on line 10, together with the amendment just inserted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana proposes an amendment to strike out the words which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the words proposed to be stricken out, as Provided, That this act shall not have any effect to repeal, impair, or suspend any law now authorizing the pre-emption of public lands, or the entry of public lands for homesteads, nor as limiting in any manner the power of Congress to alter or extend the right of homestead upon such lands; nor shall this act in any way interfere with any law now in force relating to entries under the timber-culture act.

Mr. McMILLAN. Before the question is put on that amendment, I should like to have the tenth section of the bill read referred to by the Senator from Indiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The tenth section will be read for information if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 10. Nothing contained in this act shall be so construed as to affect in any manner the existing laws and regulations in regard to the adjustment and payment to States, upon their admission into the Union, the per cent of the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands within their respective limits, or to repeal, impair, or suspend any law now authorizing the pre-emption of public lands, or the entry of public lands for homesteads, or limit the power of Congress over the public domain, or interfere with granting bounty lands to soldiers and sailors.

Mr. McMILLAN. The tenth section does not embrace the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska, which is proposed to be stricken out. The timber-culture acts are not embraced in the tenth section, and the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska embraces that class of lands. I think it very important that that provision should be incorporated in this bill. It is in now, and I think the Senator from Indiana had better let it remain by withdrawing his amendment.

Mr. McDONALD. I prefer not to withdraw the amendment I have moved. I think that the tenth section is the proper place and the proper manner to declare the reservation of authority on the part of the General Government over the public domain, and if it is not broad enough as it has been reported by the committee, it is very broad enough as it has been reported by the committee, it is very easy to suggest a proper amendment there and have it adopted. The first section is entirely complete without either of the provisos, and the tenth section embraces the purpose of both of them.

Mr. McMILLAN. Then I ask the Senator from Indiana if it is his intention to amend section 10 by embracing the timber-culture act?

Mr. McDONALD. Section 10 can be amended, if it is deemed necessary, for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McDONALD. Now I move also to strike out the second proviso, beginning on line 10 of the first section and ending on line 13. Like the first proviso, the subject of this proviso is fully embraced in the tenth section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The words proposed to be stricken out by the Senator from Indiana will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the words proposed to be stricken out, as fol-

And provided further, That nothing contained in this section shall be held to limit or abridge the power of Congress over the public domain, or interfere with granting bounty lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, I wish to call attention for a moment to the sixth section of this bill. I think it contains a power that ought not to be vested in the Commissioner of Education. I therefore move to strike that section out. I will read it:

SEC. 6. On or before the 1st day of September in each year the Commissioner of Education, under direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall certify to the Secretary of the Treasury as to each State, Territory, and district, whether it is entitled to receive its share of the apportionment under this act, and the amount of such share, which shall thereupon be entitled to receive the same. If the Commissioner shall withhold a certificate from either, its share of such apportionment shall be kept separate in the Treasury until the close of the next session of Congress from the determination of the Commissioner. If Congress shall not at its next session direct such share to be paid, it shall be added to the general educational fund.

I submit that there should not be power in the Commissioner of I submit that there should not be power in the Commissioner of Education to withhold a certificate from a State, he being of the opinion that it had not complied with something, so that thereupon the State should not receive its share unless the State came to Congress and got relief. I do not think that section is necessary to the bill. It is in the power of Congress to deal with any State that does not comply with the ninth section, and I think this ought to be stricken out. It is quite unheard of that a single officer should have the power of a court to decide that a party has not complied with the law and shall not have his share, and thereupon put the burden on the State of coming to Congress and if it cannot get a bill through at the first session to relieve it, it will have lost its share. I hope that will be stricken out. will be stricken out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York, to strike out the sixth section.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I hope the Senator from New York will wait a few moments. We were not quite through with all we wanted in regard to section 10. I wish to perfect it so as to cover the points embraced in the provisos stricken out of the first section.

Mr. KEPNAN I have no objection

Mr. KERNAN. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York withdraw his amendment?

Mr. KERNAN. I am asked to yield that the Senator from Nebraska may perfect another section. I withdraw it in order to enable him to do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn. Mr. SAUNDERS. Now I move in section 10, line 8, after the word "homesteads," to insert "or under the timber-culture act."

of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. ALLISON. Before that amendment is agreed to I should like to suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that it is wiser to strike out all of section 10 after line 3, down to and including the word "homesteads," in line 8, and to insert in lieu thereof "for the disposition of the public lands," so that the section shall read:

Nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to affect, in any manner, the existing laws and regulations for the disposition of the public lands, or limit the power of Congress over the public domain.

The Senator from Nebraska suggests the timber-culture act; some other Senator in a moment may see that some other law of Congress ought to be excepted. Why is it that it is necessary to interfere in any way with existing laws and regulations in reference to the disposition of the public domain, whatever they are, or to limit the power in any way hereafter of disposing of the public domain?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that the bill making exceptions of the other two modes of disposal, left this out. They all ought to be left out or they all ought to be in.

Mr. ALLISON. I agree with the Senator in that; but there are probably some things that even the Senator has overlooked. I ask that the bill be modified by striking out all of section 10 after the word "regulations," in line 3, down to and including the word "homesteads," in line 8, and inserting after the word "regulations," The Senator from Nebraska suggests the timber-culture act; some in line 3, "for the disposition of the public lands." Then the section, if so amended, would read thus:

Nothing contained in this act shall be so construed as to affect in any manner the existing laws and regulations for the disposition of the public lands or limit the power of Congress over the public domain.

Mr. BURNSIDE. That would be perfectly satisfactory, I think.
Mr. ALLISON. I move that amendment.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa is not now in order pending the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, which is to a preceding part of the section.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Let my amendment be put in, and then the other can be moved.

Mr. MORRILL. According to my reading of the section, neither the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska nor that of the Senator from Iowa is necessary, or would change the legal effect of the section as it stands. There is no necessity for any amendment whatever, and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will not change the section from its present status, nor would the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa. The only difference is that the Senator from Iowa strikes out the reservation of the per centum of the net proceeds of the sales of the lands. I think the Senators from new States would not like to have that stricken out, because that may not be a simple law or regulation for the disposition of the lands.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Allow me to ask the Senator from Vermont what necessity there was for naming two manners of disposing of public land and leaving out the third. There are just three ways of dis-land and leaving out the third. There are just three ways of disposing of the public lands, and two of them are alluded to in the bill and the other left out.

Mr. MORRILL. The first clause embraces the whole "existing laws and regulations." The proposition of the Senator from Nebraska is in relation to an existing law.

Mr. SAUNDERS. But this bill says that it "shall not impair or suspend any law now authorizing the pre-emption of public lands."—that is one way of disposing of them—"or the entry of public lands for homesteads;" that is another. Now, if we retain these two, why should we not say "or under the timber-culture act," so as to cover all? It seems to me it would be better to have all in or all out. I therefore insist that we take a vote on my amendment, to which I can certainly see no objection if the section is to be retained at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent of the Senate that my vote may be recorded upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado. I was called from the Senate for a moment and requested the Senator from Florida who sat beside me to say to gentlemen on the other side that I was called from the Senate for a moment, and would endeavor to be back before a vote was taken. The Senator endeavored to make a pair, inasmuch as I was momentarily absent, but without success, and inasmuch as my want of voting on the vote that I ask should be recorded does not change the result, I ask that it may be recorded in favor of that amendment.

Mr. FERRY. That cannot be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The eighteenth rule of the Senate

When the yeas and nays shall be taken upon any question no Senator shall, under any circumstances whatever, be permitted to vote after the decision shall have been announced from the Chair; but a Senator may, for special reasons assigned by him, with the unanimous consent of the Senate, change or withdraw his vote after such announcement. No motion to suspend this rule shall be in order.

The Chair thinks, therefore, he cannot entertain the request of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. PENDLETON. That being the ruling of the Chair, and no doubt in entire accordance with the just interpretation of the rule, I desire to say that having favored in the few remarks I made to the Senate the adoption of the amendment offcred by the Senator from Colorado, I was called for a moment from the Senate, desiring the Senator who sat beside me to make a statement to some gentlemen who were opposed to the views I entertained and procure a pair if he could. It seems that he made that request, but that he was not successful. I desire not to be put in the attitude of having negnot successful. I desire not to be put in the attitude of having neglected merely to vote on an amendment which I had sustained; and having made this statement to the Senate, and it having been impossible to obtain a pair, my purpose is entirely accomplished.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President, I think the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska is very important, just as important as these timber-culture acts are to the people of this country, if this bill can affect the existing laws at all. It is said it cannot do it at all. Then these specifications of the pre-emption law and of the homestead law should also be stricken out. Two of the methods of procuring the public lands being specified in this section, under a well-known rule the implication would be that the other methods not mentioned would be affected by the law, if it has any operation. The omission of a reference to the timber-culture acts in this saving clause would imply that they were not intended to be saved from the operation of this law. If the law has no operation at all, it can do no harm to insert the exception. If the section is to remain embracing these other methods of obtaining the public lands, this one should also be embraced. also be embraced.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KERNAN. I now renew the motion to amend the bill by striking out the sixth section, which was read before I yielded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York, to strike out section 6.

Mr. McDONALD. I should like to inquire of the Senator from New York what substitute he proposes for the provisions of this section if it be stricken out?

Mr. KERNAN. I do not propose any substitute. I do not think it is necessary to make such a provision at all. You may provide that the States shall accept by an act, but I do not propose that the bill shall allow any one officer to say that a State has not complied and shall forfeit her rights unless she comes to Congress and gets an act for her relief at the first session. I do not think it should be in at all.

Mr. McDONALD. Under what section of the bill will the States lose their distributive share?

Mr. KERNAN. This merely says the Commissioner of Education shall give a certificate whether the States are entitled to their share or not. Other portions of the bill provide what the share is.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the bill now provides a method of getting this money by the State. The State is to perform certain conditions, very simple and easy ones, and somebody must pass on the question of whether they are performed. The authority is lodged with the Commissioner of Education, the understanding being that if he declines to make the certificate then Congress acts, otherwise the States get their money as of course. The Senator from New York might just as well strike out the whole bill after the enacting clause as to strike out this section. If he has stricken out this section there is no mode left of the moneys being got, except by an act of Congress, which, of course, would be just as valid without this present law as with it. So that the amendment is merely a motion to strike out the enacting clause of the bill. That is all there is of it.

Mr. KERNAN. I do not so understand it at all. This bill itself declares that the money shall be distributed in a certain way on an acceptance by the State. Then this section comes in, that if this man does not certify that the States have performed these conditions they never shall have it, unless Congress relieves them. The bill provides for distribution and acceptance by the States, a distribution on certain principles, to which is superadded that if the Commissioner does not certify that they have performed the conditions they shall not get the money.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from New York be good enough to inform the Senate what is the process of getting the money by the State of New York without this sixth section? Suppose the sixth section is stricken out and the State of New York has performed these simple conditions, how is it to get its money? It has got to go to some public officer to show him that it has performed the conditions. Some public officer to show him that it has performed the conditions. That authority might be lodged with the Comptroller of the Treasury. He does not know anything about the subject-matter of this act; the returns are not made to his office; they go to another office. Therefore, the head of the office to whom these returns are made certifies that they have been made to the Secretary of the Treasury. Then the Secretary draws his warrant. The Secretary of the Treasury cannot, without such a certificate, know what returns are in the Education Compissions of officer how the wave was applied the relief tion Commissioner's office or how the money was applied the previous year. It depends on the returns made there. It is merely doing in this case what is done in regard to every case. Where money is appropriated for one department of the Government some officer in that department certifies to the Secretary of the Treasury that the facts on which the appropriation is to take effect exist. It is not facts on which the appropriation is to take effect exist. It is not putting the States under any guardianship; it is the usual way of dealing with every appropriation of the public money. Then the Secretary of the Treasury pays out. This being something of special importance, the bill adds that, if the certifying officer refuses to make the certificate to the Secretary of the Treasury, the money shall not be covered into the Treasury, and the States lose it or have to go to the Court of Claims for it, but there shall be a presentation of the matter to Congress that it may set the thing right. That is all.

Mr. PENDLETON. Mr. President, the third section of the bill provides that "upon the receipt of such certificate," that is, as to the amount of the fund, the Secretary of the Treasury shall make a certain apportionment. The fourth section provides that after that an amount of the fund, the Secretary of the Treasury shall make a certain apportionment. The fourth section provides that after that apportionment is made the amount shall be drawn upon the warrant of the Commissioner of Education, countersigned by the Secretary of the Interior, out of the Treasury of the United States and paid to the the Interior, out of the Treasury of the United States and paid to the State officer who is entitled to receive the fund. The machinery by which the money can be paid out is perfect. The machinery of apportionment and of distribution is perfect under the other sections of the bill, and this section No. 6——

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PENDLETON. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. Supposing what the Senator has said to be true, suppose the officer refuses, then comes in section 6 and says if this officer refuses the money shall not be mixed with the general moneys in the Treasury, but kept for the State till it can come to Congress. That is what you strike out by the amendment.

Mr. PENDLETON. The Commissioner of Education has no right to refuse, provided the apportionment is made and the officer appointed to refuse, provided the apportionment is made and the officer appointed on behalf of the State presents himself to receive the warrant. This provision is in addition to that, a surveillance given to the Commissioner of Education, an inferior officer of the Government, to determine whether or not the State has done that which this law says the State shall do as a condition-precedent to receiving the fund, and that which the State has promised to do by an act of its Legislature. There is no defect in the machinery by reason of striking out this section. The machinery is perfect; the distribution is made; the amount is paid over; and the officers are appointed to do the respective duties, and the only purpose of this section is that the Commissioner of Education shall go down into the operations of the State governments in the distribution of this fund, and if he finds that the States have not distributed it according to the provisions of the law, that he shall make this report. I intend when the ninth section that he shall make this report. I intend when the ninth section comes up to propose that that surveillance shall be exercised by Congress itself and only by Congress.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the bill provides that this money shall be paid annually on certain conditions, the conditions being that the State has had a school system in force, that it has applied the money to the use of schools (which nobody will question the reasonableness of) the last year, and that it has made certain returns to the Commissioner of Education. Now suppose the State of New York or Ohie comes for its money. Is it to have this money if it has not made the returns which is the condition? I sit to have its money if it has comes for its money. Is it to have this money if it has not made the returns, which is the condition? Is it to have its money if it has not spent it the previous year as the bill provides? Is it to have its money if it has no school system at all? Certainly not. Nobody proposes that who votes for this bill.

That being the case, it must either wait for an act of Congress That being the case, it must either wait for an act of Congress every year, or somebody must be authorized to give it its money without an act of Congress. If you give that authority to the Secretary of the Treasury he has got to devolve it on some subordinate. That subordinate has not got the returns in his hands; he has to go and ask the Commissioner of Education. Therefore, instead of having it done by a subordinate in the Treasury Department, the Commissioner of Education says, "This State has returned, according to law, to my office these returns, which show a compliance with the act." When he certifies that, the money is paid as of course. If he refuses, the money is retained until the State gets its remedy from Congress. the money is retained until the State gets its remedy from Congress, if it is entitled to it.

Now the Senator proposes to strike that out, the result of which is that either the State has got the money without performing the condition, (which nobody has said ought to be done,) or that the question whether it has performed the condition shall devolve upon a subordinate in the Treasury Department, which does not seem to me to be reasonable.

Mr. PENDLETON. I do not think the alternative of the Senator from Massachusetts is correctly stated. The alternative is not that the State shall receive its proportions not having performed the condition, or that the judgment should lie in a subordinate officer of the Treasury Department or of the Educational Department. The State, having performed its condition, is entitled to receive its money until the Congress of the United States, and not a subordinate in any of the Departments, shall say that it has not done so. The State comes here asking its money, asserting that it has performed the condition, and the Senator from Massachusetts desires that a subordinate in one of these Departments, the Department of Education or the Department. ment of the Treasury, shall say to that State, "You have not performed the condition, and therefore you shall not have the money." I put the case of a State which, in its judgment, and therefore probably truthfully, has performed the conditions upon which it is cutitled to the money, and the Senator desires that this subordinate shall sit in judgment upon the performance of its duty by the State, while I desire that the Congress of the United States shall sit in judgment upon it

Mr. HOAR. If we grant to a State, for instance, the 5 per cent. which the Senator has been so desirons of having for the State of onlio, does he mean to tell us that any State has ever, since the foundation of the Government, come to Congress and said, "I am entitled," and come to the proper department of the Government and said, "I am entitled to this sum of money," and on its warrant, on saying that it has performed the conditions and is entitled to it, drawn the money? because that is what he proposes. This bill says—the simplest condition in the world—that if a State returns so and so, laving a school system and having a privary inter this propose. system and having appropriated this money last year, and if it makes system and naving appropriated this money last year, and it it makes returns of school attendance to the Commissioner of Education, it shall have this money; and then it says in order to get it let it carry the certificate from the office where the returns have arrived to the Treasury and there draw it. That is all.

Mr. PENDLETON. I would have the certificate of the State that it had done its duty under the provisions of the law rather than the certificate of a subordinate officer in one of these Departments. And I do not exactly understand why the Senator from Massachusews should say that I was so extremely anxious that the State of Ohio should have its 5 per cent., for I think he will look over the RECORD in vain to find that I uttered one word upon that subject.

Mr. HOAR. Who shall make the certificate of the State? The certificate of the State will be made by its commissioner of cducation. When the superintendent of education of the State of Ohio is to make a certificate, it is the State; when the Superintendent of Education of the United States is to make one, it is a subordinate bureau officer. If one is the certificate of the State to receive the money, the other is equally the certificate of the United States that

Mr. PENDLETON. When a State has assumed to perform a duty, when its Legislature has declared by law that it will perform that duty, when a law is passed making it obligatory on all its officers that they shall perform that duty, when the State sends here a certified copy of this law and has it filed in a department of the Goving order to entitle it to receive its proportionate share of tified copy of this law and has it filed in a department of the Government in order to entitle it to receive its proportionate share of this fund, then I say that every presumption is to be made in favor of the performance of that duty, and when the State presents itself here to receive its proportionate share of this fund, if there is objection to it, that objection should be made by some officer of the Government to the Congress of the United States, and the Congress of the United States should say whether or not the fund thus given to the State has been distributed and used in accordance with the obligation and the duty of the State or not. There is the difference begation and the duty of the State or not. There is the difference between the gentleman and myself. I do not say that the certificate of the commissioner of education of the State of Ohio is superior or inferior either in dignity or in truth to the judgment that may be passed by the Commissioner of the Federal Government, but I say that when the State has assumed to do the duty in the solemn way pointed out by this law, the assumption and presumption that it has done so is in favor of the State, and if that is to be overridden it should be by in favor of the State, and if that is to be overridden it should be by the Congress of the United States, and not by a subordinate officer.

Mr. KERNAN. I wish to call attention, in addition to what the Senator from Ohio has so well said, to the fact that in the ninth section the bill does not make the right to get the money depend on the certificate of an officer of the State, but the provision is that the State "shall, through the proper officer thereof, for the year ending the 30th day of June last preceding such apportionment, make"—what? Not a certificate of what is done, but "make full report to the Commissioner of Education," and that will be before Congress, and we can deal with a State if it has not complied. But the sixth section enables the Commissioner to say, "I will not pay you; your report is not full enough, and therefore you shall lose your money unless Congress gives it to you at the next session," which will be, perchance, a short one.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I think that this amendment ought to be adopted; and the provision in the fourth section requiring the amount apportioned to be paid on the warrant of the Commissioner of Education countersigned by the Secretary of the Interior is in my opinion wrong. The fourth section ought to be so missioner of Education countersigned by the Secretary of the Interior is in my opinion wrong. The fourth section ought to be so amended that the fund to be distributed among the several States and Territories entitled to the same should be paid on the warrant of the governor of the State or some other State officer, accompanied by a certified copy of the State law accepting the proposition and appropriating the money to the support of the common schools of the State or Territory. That, in my opinion, would be a very proper amendment to be incorporated in the fourth section of this bill, so that the States should have no possible connection whatever with the Commissioner of Education in Washington; but when a State has accepted the appropriation made by this bill, and the proper officer of the State, the governor or the State, treasurer, or some other officer of the State, shall certify that there has been a law enacted by the State, and produce it to the Treasurer of the United States, accepting the appropriation by Congress and also providing for its distribution among the free schools of the State, that ought to be sufficient authority for the purpose of paying the fund out. There is no necessity of having the intervention of the Commissioner of Education in this fund, in my opinion. I shall vote, therefore, to amend the fourth section so by a certified copy of the State law accepting the proposition and appromy opinion. I shall vote, therefore, to amend the fourth section so as to strike out from the bill asy interference whatever in this matter by the Commissioner of Education, resting it upon the authority of the State officer and the law of the State accompanying his certificate

Mr. McDONALD. I am not entirely satisfied with the sixth section, but it seems to me if it were stricken out there would have to be some amendment made to some of the other sections to provide for what it seeks to provide for, because I do not think it was the intent or purpose of this bill to give to any State that distributive share which the proportion of persons incapable of reading and writing in a State would entitle it to unless it had also complied with the ninth section, by the establishment of common schools within its limits for at least three months in the year for the first four years, and four months in the year after that. There does not seem to be anything else in this bill that guards against a failure to comply with that provision before the money is drawn, except that contained in the sixth section.

The Secretary of the Treasury, upon receiving the certificate of the amount of funds, is directed to make an apportionment of the sum among the several States on the basis provided for in this bill, taking the last census as his guide. That is clear enough. Then the next section—the fourth—provides that "the amount apportioned to the school districts of any State or Territory, or of the District of Columbia, and certified as herein provided, shall be paid upon the warrant of the Commissioner of Education, countersigned by the Secretary of the Interior."

That is the manner in which the money is paid out of the Treasury upon the warrant of the Commissioner of Education countersigned by the Secretary of the Interior. I think that fourth section should be amended so as to make the Secretary of the Interior the judge of whether the States complying, and that would otherwise be entitled to the distributive share as fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury, have complied with the ninth section of the act by keeping schools in the manner therein provided for; and unless something of that kind is done I do not feel inclined to strike out the sixth section and leave this matter to be adjusted at each session of Congress when questions of controversy may come up. If the Secretary of the Interior were authorized to determine whether there had been a compliance with the ninth section of this act, that might avoid the objection which has been raised to the certification or failure to certify on the part of this inferior officer, as he is termed, the Commissioner of Education. I have very little idea of what he has been doing, although the office has been in existence for some time. I think the result of striking out the sixth section would be to leave the bill in a very different form from that which the general purpose of the bill intends, and unless it is to be supplemented by that which shall be its equivalent in showing a compliance with the provisions of the law, I shall not vote for the amendment proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York to strike out the sixth section of the bill.

Mr. KERNAN called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 22, nays 37; as follows:

	11110-20
Beck, Brown, Call, Cockrell, Coke, Davis of W. Va.,	Farley, Groome, Hereford, Johnston, Jonas, Jones of Florida,	Kernan, Morgan, Pendleton, Pugh, Ransom, Saulsbury,	Slater, Vance, Vest, Williams.
	NA	YS-37.
Allison, Anthony, Bailey, Baldwin, Blaine, Blair, Booth, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron of Pa.,	Cameron of Wis., Davis of Illinois, Dawes, Edmunds, Ferry, Garland, Hamlin, Harris, Hill of Colorado, Hill of Georgia,	Hoar, Ingalls, Kellogg, Kirkwood, Logan, McDonald, McMillan, McPherson, Morrill, Platt,	Plumb, Rollins, Saunders, Teller, Voorhees, Walker, Windom.
	ABS	ENT-17.
Bayard, Butler. Carpenter, Conkling, Eaton,	Grover, Hampton, Jones of Nevada, Lamar, Maxey,	Paddock, Randolph, Sharon, Thurman, Wallace,	Whyte, Withers.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLISON. In section 4, line 9, I move to amend after the word "same" by inserting the words "or the interest thereof." The object in moving the amendment is to enable such States as are required by their constitutions to invest all their school funds to distribute the interest instead of the principal, as I understand this bill now provides interest instead of the principal, as I understand this bill now provides for. For example, in the State of Iowa all the funds arising from donations of the General Government are compelled to be placed at interest, and the interest only can be used for purposes of education.

Mr. MORRILL. I suggest to the Senator from Iowa to wait and see what the action of the Senate may be on the provision already adopted in Committee of the Whole. If the provision already adopted should not be concurred in when we come into the Senate, I shall regard it as a defeat of this bill, and then it will not be necessary to amend it.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; I am entirely satisfied to wait; but if the provision now in the bill is to remain there ought to be a means provided to save the States which are required to use only the interest instead of the principal of the fund. I withdraw for the moment my amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to amend section 3 of the bill by striking out the provise included between lines 22 and 36, my object being to provide that this entire sum shall be appropriated for the support of the common-school system in the several States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is moved to strike out of section 3 the following words between lines 22 and 22.

lowing words between lines 22 and 36:

And provided further. That one-third of the income arising from said educational fund, and which shall be apportioned to each State or Territory, shall be annually appropriated to the more complete endowment and support of colleges established or such as may be hereafter established therein, in accordance with the aforesaid act of Congress approved July 2, 1862, until the annual income thus accruing to the said colleges in each State shall have reached the sum of $30,000, then the said amount only shall be annually appropriated to said colleges; and the whole remaining annual income of the aforementioned educational fund shall thereafter, in the manner provided in this act, be appropriated by each State and Territory, including the District of Columbia, to the free education of all its children between the ages of six and sixteen years.

Mr. MORRILL. This is a second move in hestility to the bill. The

Mr. MORRILI. This is a second move in hostility to the bill. The effect I have no doubt will be to kill the bill provided this shall be stricken out. I have no kind of idea that the bill can pass if this portion should be stricken out. I hope, therefore, the friends of the bill will resist the amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I am as desirous as anybody can be to have this bill pass in an acceptable form. I had an amendment prepared on this subject, and I will say to the Senator from Vermont who has just addressed the Senate that I intended to leave it to the option of the States whether they would accept this provision or not. I say very candidly that in my own State this fund will be in a great measure lost if this provision remains as it is in the bill. We have an agricultural college fund there, but the income from it is so small that it has not resulted in any practical advantage to the people; and now to take away from the fund proposed to be given to the State by this bill one-third and add it to the fund already in existence, and thus tie it up uselessly to the people, is to my mind not a wise thing to do. I do not know how it will be in other States; but I intended to offer an amendment leaving it to the option of each State to say whether it would take the whole fund for common-school purposes or appropriate one-third, in accordance with this provision of the bill, to the support of agricultural colleges. Some States might be willing to take one-third of the fund for the purpose of supporting agricultural colleges, while States situated like mine might not be willing to do it. I think it would be the wisest thing to do to leave this matter to the individual option of each State. With that view I prepared an amendment. Whether the Senator from Vermont who takes such a deep interest in the bill would be willing to accept that change, I am not prepared to say.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, I have not said one word upon this

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, I have not said one word upon this bill, and I did not propose to open my mouth with regard to it; and yet I am now inclined to say a word in consequence of the motion which has been just submitted by the Senator from Kansas. Congress made an appropriation of public land, as we all know, years ago specifically for the purpose of founding colleges in which agriculture and the mechanic arts should be mainly taught. I presume in nearly all of the States where that money has been expended for the formation of such schools they are found in a weak condition. They are not what they should be; and they are not what they would be in their usefulness if the States had additional sums with which to support them. I therefore think that this bill made a wise provision in determining that a portion of the money to be distributed under it should go to the support of these colleges already in existence. I listened to what the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Brown] said the other day; and if this clause is stricken out and the moneys all go for common schools, the adjuncts to the college like those which have been already established in Georgia, and which are parts of the college and might be denominated as normal schools where teachers are taught for the common schools, would be deprived of any portion of this fund, for this amendment takes it all away from the agricultural colleges now in existence.

I look at our whole system of schools together, from the lowest to the highest, and it is as necessary to educate the teacher of the common school as it is to teach the pupil in the common school for the ordinary avocations of life. You must have the higher school as they have adopted it in Georgia, wisely, as I think, to teach the teacher to prepare him and fit him to teach the common school, and you want the still more highly educated man who shall be able to teach the teachers of these normal schools. You must consider your whole system of schools together, in my judgment, and if you want to do the best with the money you appropriate you will not appropriate it to any one specific object. I am not quite sure but that the suggestion made by the Senator from Florida would be the wisest—to leave it to the States; I would be willing to leave it to my State; but if this money is all to be appropriated in one line, I think it will be a grand mistake. I think we shall do more good by strengthening our agricultural and mechanical colleges, by allowing this section of the bill to stand as it is, and I shall vote for it to stand there, and if the amendment is adopted, I confess I do not think the bill and rate amendments is support.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, of course any measure of this kind which has any complication in its machinery or in its details can be very easily destroyed by amendments, and this bill can very easily be destroyed by the moving of amendments, without anybody's avowing hostility to the bill itself; the practical result, however, is the same. An eloquent speech in favor of this bill, however able and brilliant, has very much less value to the persons whom it is hoped will be benefited by it than a vote to retain the bill as it was proposed. Now, gentlemen from the South either want this gift or they do not want it; they are not obliged to accept it; nobody forces upon any section of the country the bounty or the aid of the Government to its common schools. It is a matter wholly within the discretion of Senators whether they want it or not; but it is also a matter which is not likely to be misunderstood or misapprehended in consequence of the forms of proceeding—of the forms of proceeding—

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him whether he thinks the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Kansas are gentlemen from the South? They have proposed amendments to the bill.

Mr. HOAR. It is not likely to be misapprehended in consequence of the forms of proceeding; and if the gentlemen from the South do not want it, do not consider it to the interest of the country or of their section to accept this proposition, they are the best and the sole judges of that interest; nobody has the least right to interfere with their action; but the result is this: if this bill passes in substance as it was framed, through the Senate, it will become probably the law of the land. If it passes materially changed, it never will be the law of the land.

Mr. TELLER. Why?

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I do not propose quietly to submit to any imputation of hostility either to this bill or to the cause of education in this country; nor is it in keeping with the temper and spirit of the education that I received to submit to a denial of the right of private judgment upon any measure that may be proposed here; and the presentation of a bill with the declaration that unless it is accepted in the same form and in the same language in which it emanates from a committee it cannot become a law is hardly a proper argument to advance to a body of peers.

argument to advance to a body of peers.

Mr. President, other Senators than those upon that committee have opinions upon this great subject; others besides the members of that committee have devoted some thought and some consideration to this subject; and it ill befits any member of this body to assume that when he dies wisdom will perish with him, or that if this measure had been submitted to any other committee of this body it is not possible that something worthy of consideration might have been evolved therefrom

Mr. President, when a man's house is on fire he usually takes the nearest utensil at hand and goes to the creek and gets water and pours it on the flame. He does not devote himself to an attempt to build an extensive system of water-works. The wise physician, if he has a patient that is suffering in convulsions of fever and ague, does not devote his time to an attempt to start a grove of cinchona trees in South America, but he goes to the nearest drug-store and buys a dose of quinine. I propose to treat this matter in a practical direction. Here are certain things we desire to accomplish, not to create a great, magnificent, all-embracing system of universal education for all mankind, but to take hold of certain existing facts in this country and treat them as they exist to-day. When we attempt in our humble way to deal with this bill we are met with the assertion that unless this bill is accepted in shape and form there can be no law passed on this subject. Mr. President, that is not the spirit or the temper in which to approach this subject. I believe that the common school is the nursery of civil liberty in this country, and that if the founders of New England had left no other legacy to mankind than their immortal ordinances of 1642 establishing that system and declaring that universal education should prevail through the public school, they would have established satisfactorily their claim to be considered among the most illustrious and conspicuous benefactors of the human race. What these people South want is the acclimation of the Puritan idea. What these people want who are illiterate and poor is the opportunity to learn the three R's. They want to learn the use of their faculties; they want the application of the common-school system; they want to be elevated up out of the slough of ignorance in which they find themselves; and that is the threatening evil that, so far as I am concerned, I propose to try and meet in this bill. There is too much tendency in this country toward half-education, and these po and carried into the cities and made failures as lawyers and as halfstarved doctors and wretched ministers, and failing in those callings have become lightning-rod peddlers and book agents, and finally disappeared beneath the earth that they cumbered while on its surface.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MORRILL. I think the Senator is misinformed in relation to the graduates of these institutions, and that if he will converse with the president of any of them he will ascertain that they have sent out some of the most efficient business men this country now has within its boundary. I have been told repeatedly by the presidents of some of these institutions that no sooner were their graduates matriculated than they were taken into service as engineers for mines and for railroads and into business so that they received a thousand or fifteen hundred dollars a year salary while the graduates of other institutions had to work along year after year before they got their professions or got into any kind of business.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Vermont and myself can have no difference of opinion on that subject. I believe in the highest education, in the most liberal education, and in the broadest application of these principles to all the citizens of this country. But that

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Vermont and myself can have no difference of opinion on that subject. I believe in the highest education, in the most liberal education, and in the broadest application of these principles to all the citizens of this country. But that is not the object of this bill. I should like to see a great national American university established in this city that should be magnificently endowed and that should furnish the opportunities for the highest and broadest education for every citizen of this or of any other land. But we are not attempting to do that in this bill. We are attempting to deal with the illiteracy of this country, to deal with certain subjects that have a political aspect, and we are called upon in our political capacity here, judging what is best for this country, to decide what appropriations shall be made for the education of the citizens.

Now, sir, I believe that what is to be accomplished is not by the devotion of this fund to the establishment of the common-school system in the South; and when that has once been accomplished, other results will follow. There is a subtle and most potential contagion about knowledge. Let the humblest man be instructed, let the seed be sown, and it will be communicated as far as his influence and his power can go. Educate the present generation; correct this evil that exists in the South and other portions of this country; drop this seed; establish your common-school system; endow these men with the sacred flame of knowledge and the desire for knowledge, and the future will take care of itself. We have already established magnificent foundations for agricultural and mechanical colleges. Very cent foundations for agricultural and mechanical colleges. Very good. I wish them God-speed; I would like to see them still further established; but so far as this little pittance here is concerned, I want it applied to the purpose of a common-school education; and for that purpose, and that purpose alone, not in hostility to this bill, but in favor of what I believe to be its truest and most beneficent principles, I have made the motion that I have submitted.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I merely desire to add a single word to what I said before in reply to the Senator from Kansas. I have here informed by the heads of the colleges in Arkansas Ten-have been informed by the heads of the colleges in Arkansas, Tennessee, and Kentucky that two-thirds of their students are immediately wanted as teachers in the South, and get good wages as such.

Mr. INGALLS. This bill provides in section 8—an amendment offered by the committee—for the establishment of normal schools.

There is an express declaration that 50 per cent. of this fund shall be applied to the establishment of schools for the instruction of teachers.

Mr. MORRILL. But that is not sufficient to do anything at once.

Mr. INGALLS. If 50 per cent. is not enough, do you want to take the false and cheap articles that are exposed for sale and also detecting those that are good.

Mr. INGALIS. It so per cent. Is not enough, do you want to take the whole of the sum appropriated to instruct teachers?

Mr. MORRILL. These colleges are in existence and they require a little additional stimulus to make them very effective, and I wish to say to the Senate that there have been twenty-five Legislatures of this country that have petitioned and resolved in favor of it, and that there is not one subject in which the farmers of this country take so deep an interest as they do in these agricultural colleges. They are making experiments, they are making tests of artificial manures, enough to pay the whole expense to the country, detecting the false and cheap articles that are exposed for sale and also detecting those that are good.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the graduates of these technical schools are greedily employed by the business men and business institutions of this country as fast as they leave their schools, and they are greedily sought for as teachers; and it is impossible to build up the commonschool systems of the South without having some provision for the education of teachers to go hand in hand with the provision for the caheals themselves because of course the great power in the school schools themselves, because, of course, the great power in the school is the teacher; there is no school without him.

Now, the honorable Senator from Kansas says that he does not propose to sit still under some imputation which nobody has made, or under some method of conducting business which nobody has pursued. What I said and what I say now is that, in my judgment, this scheme as framed by this committee, having taken pains to ascertain the opinion of the educators of this country, having taken pains to asceropinion of the educators of this country, having taken pains to ascertain the opinion of the legislators who are to pass the bill, is the only one which can command a majority of the Senate and the House. If it cannot command a majority, none can command a majority. It is not because this committee, of which I have not the honor to be a member, seems to me better calculated to frame such a measure than any other committee of the Senate or of the House; it is not because the individual judgment of the Senators who voted for the amendants. ment of the Senator from Colorado is not better than my own, that I made the remarks which I reiterate. Perhaps I am mistaken, but I believe, as the result of the ascertaining of the public opinion of these two branches, that unless the offer, if it may be properly termed so, of the establishment of the educational fund and the growth and prospect of its addition turns out to be acceptable to the majority of the persons interested, no other offer is likely to be agreed upon by the legislative power which can adopt this measure, and that is all. Now, what is there in that observation which is properly spoken of as an imputation under which a Senator is to say that he cannot sit still? I have nothing of personal desire; I have nothing to gain. It is a matter utterly indifferent to my State so far as its immediate interests are concerned. It is a gift, and a large gift, if you were to speak merely of proportion and of population, of what would be according to its population the proportionate share of Massachusetts to some other States. Gentlemen think and represent that as the result of our political strifes and discussions there is a bitterness, a feeling of hostility and of antagonism on the part of the men of New England toward their brethren of the West and South. It is a mistake. Whatever utterances may be made in speech, if there be a State in this country farthest from us in territory, sharing the least of the common ancestry, differing from us the most widely in opinion, in institutions, opposed to us most angrily in the conflicts which have divided this country in the past, civil conflicts or conflicts of war, that will show us how of our wealth or of our poverty we can help them to anything which is deemed good by civilized States, they may command us to the extent of our power.

Do you want railroads? We will help you build them. Do you want the mouth of the Mississippi cleared so that the farm produce of the Northwest may go around away from Boston and from New England on its pathway to the sea? You have had and you may have again our votes. Do you want your fields reclaimed? Do you want your waste places settled? You may have our money; you may have our children; you may have our help in every form. But much better, as we believe, for you than all these things would be the building up of the school-houses in your States, a creation which is to increase your strength for any future conflict with us, which is to make it more likely that the political power which under the inexorable law is passing away from you to other sections of the country will return to you again, which is sure to make of our little New England with its rocks and its ice and its narrow limits but a corner, an insignificant corner of this mighty Republic, while your rivers, and your water-falls, and your fertile fields, your infinite corn-fields for food, your infinite coal-fields for fuel, your abundant iron, welded and wrought and worked by the educated brain of man, are to make you the seat of empire, of an empire which is to pass away from us. We love our country, without distinction of section, or of race, or of State, enough to be willing to help you do all that. And now will you turn your backs and reject by any indirection the offer, the best the building up of the school-houses in your States, a creation which you turn your backs and reject by any indirection the offer, the best offer that we know how to make? When we come to you with the school-house; when we come to you with the certain root and source of power, of wealth, of population, of comfort, of educated, happy, free homes, which make the dignity and comfort of a State, will you men homes, which make the dignity and comfort of a State, will you turn your backs on it and reject it?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I wish to say only a word in reply to the remarks which fell from the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS,] in which he spoke of the agricultural colleges of the country, and I think an incorrect inference would be drawn from what he said. He spoke of them as failures. In my own State the land scrip granted by the act of Congress of 1862 has been sold, the money has been invested, and securely invested by the State, and to-day we have a school numbering three hundred untils. Young men from every part of our numbering three hundred pupils. Young men from every part of our State are gathered together there, are being educated and are becoming useful men. The school has done good in the past; it is doing good now, and will, I think, continue to do good in the future. The endowment of that school was the bounty of the Government of the United States. The bill that is now under consideration proposes to strengthen and increase the usefulness of those schools wherever they may be situated; among others, the one in my own State will share the benefit of this act. School-masters go out from this institution. They are in demand all through my State and throughout the Southwest, and one of the great needs of the South to-day is not along the school-house, but the teacher who can make the school system effective. We need teachers very much in Tennessee. We have now, I believe, about seven thousand teachers; we have about six thousand public schools. Three hundred thousand children of the State are gathered together in our public schools, and yet we want a greater number of school-houses, and we want more teachers. We have not got them; we are trying to educate them, and I ask the Senate to take into consideration the wants of our people in the West and South with respect to school-teachers and the necessity we are under of educating them for the business which they are to follow.

For that reason I gave in committee, as I give here to-day, my hearty support to this provision in the bill that appropriates a certain ratable part of this money to the support of agricultural schools, for they teach in these schools not only such branches of learning as are taught elsewhere, but they have a wider operation and a wider system. They teach the science of agricultural chemistry, they teach agriculture as a practical art, and in that way this school is doing much good. I say this simply in reply to what has been said by the Senator from Kansas, who intimated that these schools everywhere are failures. They may be failures in Kansas, but they are not in the State of Tennessee.

Mr. INGALLS. Oh, I said no such thing.
Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I regretted very much a while ago to vote against the recommendation of the committee as contained in the bill and for the distribution of the principal of the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands and the net income from the Patent Office in place of the interest. I did it because of the urgent and pressing necessity that I think exists in my own State at present for some important help in the education of the mass of her people. The amount which each State would receive from the interest at 4 per cent. on the basis of apportionment proposed would be so very small for our State as to be of very little assistance to us.

I do not share, I confess, in the fear that after this system is once commenced it will break down under any circumstances. I have never known a system of public schools, and I have not read of one, that has been once put on foot that has gone backward. I think the result will be so favorable that there will be no difficulty when we have once inaugurated the system in carrying it forward. Therefore have once inaugurated the system in carrying it forward. Therefore I think it is better for the next few years to distribute the principal of the fund we may receive from the two sources already mentioned.

But I do protest against the amendment now proposed to take from the agricultural colleges the percentage of this fund that is proposed by the bill to be given to them. I think there has been no appropriation of public money within my knowledge that has done so much good as has been accomplished by the distribution made to the States of land-scrip and the inauguration of these agricultural colleges. stated in my remarks the day before yesterday what had been the history of the workings of this system in my own State, that we have four branch colleges there, which have now about eight hundred students, where we turn out from one of them—which is the only one authorized yet to license teachers—about eighty teachers per annum. We need to have teachers educated as much as we need funds to educate the mass; indeed, it is the first step toward the education of the mass; and I think it would be very unwise now to remove a portion of this fund from the agricultural colleges. I would rather vote that the 50 per cent. should go to that purpose than vote that a less percentage go than the percentage already mentioned in the bill. Therefore I cannot give my vote for the amendment to strike out that portion of the bill. I think it the most important portion of it. Not much harm would be done if the whole fund for the next two or three years were given to the agricultural colleges; but surely two or three years were given to the agricultural colleges; but surely as large a percentage as has been mentioned should be given to them.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I do not know that I have very decided convictions on the amendments offered by the Senator from Kansas. I think the main amendment which has been adopted in Committee of the Whole to-day, as far as my judgment reaches the merits of the bill, will destroy its effect; and therefore, unless it is reversed in the Senate, I shall hope, for one, that the bill will not become a law. I do not believe the money will be guarded with sufficient care, and I think it may be merely another illustration of wasteful and ridiculous excess.

I only rose, however, to say, as I supposed the debate was about to close, that I want to congratulate the Senate and the country upon the final extinction and death of the old doctrine of strict constructhe final extinction and death of the old doctrine of strict construc-tion. Here is part of the revenue of the United States, just as much a part of the revenue as the customs collected at New York or the whisky tax, the receipts from the sale of public lands, over which the old democratic and whig parties fought and wrought for twenty-five years. There was not a democrat between the lakes and the gulf who did not swear that the Constitution was torn in tatters, was not worth preserving, if the proceeds arising from the sales of public lands were distributed per capita and fairly between the States. Oh then the original compact was gone! Now we take this bill up Oh, then the original compact was gone! Now we take this bill up and abandon the idea of an equal partition; we give away the whole proceeds, as a great benefactor who has an estate to distribute at his own will calls around him the most needy and the most deserving own will calls around him the most needy and the most deserving of those to whom he feels the most partially inclined, and says, "Take this freely, without limit and without stint."

I am glad that up to this time we have not heard from the strict-construction side a solitary objection to this legislation. I do not object to it; I shall vote for it, and I congratulate the country that that controversy is so far ended that there is not a man now living who can raise his voice against the distribution of the proceeds of the public lands among the States.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I desire to say in only a word why I shall yote for this hill without being a very strict construction ist.

shall vote for this bill without being a very strict constructionist. The laws upon the statute-book from 1862 up to the present time read thus as to all public lands subject to homestead and pre-emp-

That any person who is the head of a family, or who has arrived at the age of twenty-one years, and is a citizen of the United States, or who shall have filed his declaration of intention to become such, as required by the naturalization laws of the United States, and who has never borne arms against the United States Government or given aid and comfort to its enemies, shall be entitled to enter upon certain lands and to pre-empt certain lands; and these laws stand upon the statute-book to-day, authorizing every man who comes from Africa, from Europe, or from Asia, the day he lands and declares his intention to become a citizen, to take possession of the lands of the United States, and have practically excluded the people of eleven States of this Union—boys who were pages in the Legislatures, who knew no more about the war than if they had been unborn—from entering upon the public lands to take homesteads or pre-emptions. And when these lands are to be disposed of, as is now proposed, to educate the negroes, or educate be disposed of, as is now proposed, to educate the negroes, or educate anybody else, I am willing that the proceeds shall go, rather than to maintain a system that has such injustice in it on the statutebooks of the United States.

books of the United States.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, what has been said by the Senator from Kentucky and by other gentlemen on this side of the Senate explains why objections have not been interposed to the bill; and there are other reasons. There have been donated to public corporations not less than 180,000,000 acres of the public lands, donated by the party of which the Senator from Maine [Mr. Blaine] is so distinguished a leader. When we see the public lands frittered away, given to rich corporations, we may well abate our objections in the distribution of the proceeds of the public lands to educational purposes.

Mr. MORRILL. May I interrupt the Senator to ask him a question?
Mr. SAULSBURY. Certainly.
Mr. MORRILL. I merely ask him if it was not a democratic Senator that first introduced the policy of giving these lands to railroads?
Mr. SAULSBURY. I am not sure who first introduced it; but I am sure that the policy that has been practiced by the party of which the Senator from Vermont is also a distinguished leader has frittered away more than an empire to rich corporations who have been the beneficiaries largely of their legislation. It ill becomes Senators on the other side of this Chamber now to twit us with an abandonment of former ideas in reference to the distribution of the proceeds of the public lands because we have seen in the legislation of the country that the whole public lands of the United States are to be given away in the same direction; and if we choose to discriminate as to the objects to which they shall be given I think we shall be perfectly just in the matter.

Yet I have never said that I shall vote for this bill. On the contrary, there are serious objections to the bill, and without the amendtrary, there are serious objections to the bill, and without the amendment of the Senator from Colorado I certainly should never have dreamed of voting for the bill. I am not sure that I shall vote for it now; but that amendment has taken away from the bill one of its most objectionable features that was proposed, namely, the placing of the school system of the States to a certain extent under the supervision and control of the General Government. To that I am utterly opposed. I think the States of this Union can be trusted to maintain their own educational interests, and they have not been unfaithful in the past: for when under a democratic administration the revein the past; for when under a democratic administration the reve in the past; for when under a democratic administration the revenues of this country had accumulated in the public Treasury until they became a burden to the Treasury and when upon the recommendation of a democratic administration the surplus revenues were distributed among the States of this Union, most of the States, and I speak particularly of my own, faithfully and carefully appropriated every dollar of their share of that surplus revenue to educational purposes, and the fund has been sacredly guarded from that day to the present time. Not one dollar of it has been appropriated to any other purposes; and when the dark clouds of war spread over the country. purpose; and when the dark clouds of war spread over the country, and we were compelled to resort to extraordinary means to raise revenue, we carefully guarded the school fund of the State, and subjected our people to taxation to meet the exactions which were placed upon us by the exigencies of the war.

I should not, perhaps, have participated in this discussion except for the remarks of the Senator from Maine, who seems to want to twit us with inconsistency because we abate something of our objection to the policy of distributing the proceeds of the public lands for reasons such as I have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALLS.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. TELLER. Inasmuch as that clause is not stricken out, there

Mr. TELLER. Inasmuch as that clause is not stricken out, there should be some amendment of it as it now stands, to make it in accordance with the amendments that have been made. In lines 28 and 29 the words "annual income" should be stricken out and the word "amount" inserted; so as to read, "until the amount thus acoruing."

Mr. MORRILL. I hope the Senator will wait until we get the bill into the Senate to see whether his previous amendment will be concurred in. If it should be adopted, then he can move that amend-

Mr. TELLER. Very well, if it will not be overlooked. It would make the bill rather unseemly to stand as it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Colorado to withdraw the amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I withdraw it.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to offer an amendment. After the word "colleges," in line 31 of section 3, I move to insert:

And said last mentioned act of Congress is hereby amended so as to authorize each State and Territory to establish in said colleges, or under their directions, schools for the instruction of females in such branches of technical or industrial education as are suited to their sex.

The Senate will observe that I have made a modification of the amendment, changing the word "require" to "authorize"

Mr. KIRKWOOD. This is to apply to agricultural colleges?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Yes, in agricultural colleges.

Mr. MORGAN. Or by their direction.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Does not that power exist now under existing

Mr. MORGAN. That is a question. The Senator from Iowa may read the law so as to authorize him to say that that power does exist now in the States under the act of 1862, but that has not been the mr. KIRKWOOD. We do it in Iowa.
Mr. MORRILL. And we in Vermont.
Mr. MORGAN. There is a construction in some of the States by which the boards of trustees do not consider that they have the right to establish either female education or that they have a right to establish special schools for the benefit of female education. It is in order to remove the doubt on that point that I offer this amendment. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that almost universally in the South neither have females attended these colleges nor have they been permitted to attend them. No provision has been made in the organization of these colleges—

Mr. MORRILL. If the Senator from Alabama will allow me, I do not think there will be any objection to merely authorizing these institutions to do this. I see no objection to the amendment, and I think it will pass without an argument.

Mr. MORGAN. I am very glad to hear that. I will add a word, however. The Senate may suppose that this is a very unimportant matter, but really it reaches a condition of things in regard to which I think the Senate ought to act so as to provide sufficient and clear authority on the part of these colleges for the maintenance of these schools.

The act which I now propose to amend already authorizes the col-leges to establish schools of instruction, which need not be in the same campus or under the same roof as the other colleges, at which females may attend for the purpose of receiving instruction in technical education. That is the main part of the matter that I desire to reach by the amendment, and I hope that the Senate will adopt it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, [Mr. MORGAN.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PENDLETON. In section 4, line 1, I move to strike out the words "the school districts of;" so as to read:

The amount apportioned to any State or Territory, or the District of Columbia, and certified as herein provided, &c.

This amendment is in accordance with the suggestion I made, and which I think was concurred in by the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. I think that amendment is correct, and it will be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. Pendleton.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PENDLETON. In order to perfect the section in the same direction, I move to strike out all of section 4 after the word "same," in line 9, in the following words:

To the several school districts entitled thereto under such apportionment, which treasurer or officer shall be required to report, on or before the 30th day of June of each year, to the Commissioner of Education, a detailed statement of the payments made and balance in his hands withheld, unclaimed, or for any cause unpaid. The term "school district" as used in this act shall include cities, towns, parishes, or such other corporations as by law are clothed with the power of maintaining schools.

I think the Senator from Vermont will concur in the propriety of this amendment also.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope that amendment will not be adopted. I think it would very essentially change the whole character of the section. I trust that it will not be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. PENDLETON.]

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BAILEY. In section 3, line 35, in order to make the meaning a little clearer, I move, after the word "free," to strike out the word "education" and to add the words "and impartial education in public schools;" so as to read:

To the free and impartial education in public schools of all its children between the ages of six and sixteen years.

Mr. HOAR. That is right.
Mr. MORRILL. That is all right.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to this amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. In section 7, line 12, after the word "free," I move to strike out the word "education" and to insert the words "an impartial education in public schools;" so as to read:

Shall be faithfully applied to a free and impartial education in public schools of all its children between the ages of six and sixteen.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I desire to call the attention of the Senator having charge of the bill to section 6, lines 12, 13, and 14, and I think I shall suggest an amendment that he will be willing to accept. He will notice that it reads:

If Congress shall not, at its next session, direct such share to be paid, it shall be added to the general educational fund.

I suggest to the Senator to insert "Congress" instead of "session," and I will state the reason. For instance, we are now in a short session. Suppose last September the Commissioner had refused to certify to the Secretary of the Treasury, there would be too short a time probably to have gotten a bill through Congress. Therefore if you make it "the next Congress" it appears to me it will meet all objections and perhaps be much better.

Mr. BURNSIDE. There is no objection to that amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator from West Virginia to put in the words "the next" before "Congress" and strike out the words "at its next session."

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It has the same effect and reads a little better as the Senator proposes. The intention is to give a little further time for Congress to act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment as now modified, as the Chair understands it, by the Senator from West Virginia.

West Virginia.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 6, line 12, after the word "if," it is proposed to insert "the next," and in the same line to strike out the words "at its next session;" so that the clause will read:

If the next Congress shall not direct such share to be paid, it shall be added to the general educational fund.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. Davis.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. That amendment will require the striking out in the tenth line of the words "session of," which I move; so that the clause will read, "until the close of the next Congress."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment moved by the Senator from Massachusetts

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will now read an amendment which the Chair is informed was reported from the Committee on Education and Labor, which has not yet been acted upon.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert at the end of section 7 the following additional section:

SEC. 8. A sum not exceeding 50 per cent. of the amount received from the United States by any State or Territory, or by the District of Columbia, the first year of such receipt by it, and not exceeding the amount of 10 per cent. in any year thereafter, may be applied, at the discretion of the Legislature thereof, to the maintenance of one or more schools for the instruction of teachers of common schools; said sum, after the first year, to be apportioned wholly to the payment of teachers of such schools.

Mr. INGALLS. I suggest to the Senator from Vermont or the Senator from Rhode Island, whichever has the bill in charge, whether it would not be advisable to insert the word "normal" after "more," in line 7, and before "schools," and to strike out the words "for the instruction of teachers of common schools." The word "normal" has a well-defined technical signification.

Mr. MORRILL. Yes; but it is not recognized and used in all the States, and therefore the section had better remain as it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report another amendment recommended by the committee.

The CHEF CLERK. In section [8] 9, line 3, after the word "least," the committee report to insert the words "three months in each year until January 1, 1885, and thereafter;" so as to read:

Intil January 1, 1885, and thereafter; "so as to read:

That to entitle any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia to the benefits of this act, it shall maintain for at least three months in each year until January 1, 1885, and thereafter four months in each year, a system of free public schools for all the children within its limits between the ages of six and sixteen, and shall, through the proper officer thereof, for the year ending the 30th day of June last preceding such apportionment, make full report to the Commissioner of Education of the number of public free schools, the number of teachers employed, the number of school-houses owned and the number of children taught during the year, the actual daily attendance, and the actual number of months of the year schools have been maintained in each of the several school districts or divisions of said State, Territory, or District, and the amounts appropriated by the Legislature, or otherwise received for the purpose of maintaining a system of free public schools.

The PDETSTING OFFICER. The generation is an exceeding to this.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to this amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As these amendments have been agreed to, the Chair supposes the Senate would like the Secretary to change the numbers of the sections to correspond with the necessichange the numbers of the sections to correspond with the necessities of the bill as it has been filled up.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I move that the bill be so changed.

Mr. HOAR. It can be done by the Clerk as a matter of course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that, the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] having been adopted, the words "and provided further" should be adjusted to correspond to the text of the bill.

Mr. Teller. I move that amendment to make it uniform.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be made if there be no objection.

there be no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole. The Secretary will amendments made as in Committee of the whole. The Secretary will report the first amendment.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I suggest that all the amendments that have been made be concurred in except the amendment of the Senator from Colorado, [Mr. Teller,] on which I ask for a separate vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island suggests that the question be taken in gross upon all the amendments except the one adopted on the motion of the Senator from Colorado.

except the one adopted on the motion of the Senator from Colorado. Is there objection?

Mr. TELLER. There were two. I suppose the Senator means both.

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, both of them.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Both of them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is proposed that a separate vote be taken only on the two amendments of the Senator from Colorado. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, with the two exceptions named. the two exceptions named.

The unexcepted amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will now report the first reserved amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 8, after the word "year," the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out the following

Provided, That the net proceeds of said sales and receipts for patents shall be set apart as an educational fund, and entered upon the books of the Treasury to the credit of the fund, and bearing interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, the interest on such educational fund only to be paid to said States for educational purposes as herein provided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in this amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this question the yeas are 28 and the nays are 28. So the Senate being equally divided the nays have it, and the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole is nonconcurred in. The Secretary will report the next amendment re-

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 16, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out the words "said apportionment of net proceeds and the interest on said fund to and among" and inserted "proceeds of said sales and receipts for patents shall be paid to;" so as to read:

That for the first ten years the proceeds of said sales and receipts for patents shall be paid to the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, &c.

Mr. TELLER. I suppose it is not worth while to take a vote on concurring in this amendment by yeas and nays, or to make any contest. The Senate now having voted that the theory of the bill is to go on and pay the interest only, that is the end of it. It has been intimated very strongly by the friends of this bill that the effect of my amendment was to kill the bill. The honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. Morrill] says that this is the second hostile amendment. In my solemn judgment the bill is a nullity and a nonentity of no practical importance, a bill that will return to plague us, but will never do any good to the people in whose interest it is professedly passed. That is my honest judgment, deliberately made up after a thorough examination of the bill, and I am, like the Senator from Kansas, not disposed to yield my personal judgment to anybody who has consulted experts. It is a practical question that practical common-sense business men are able to meet and ought to meet; and I repel any insinuation that I have offered any objection to this bill. Mr. TELLER. I suppose it is not worth while to take a vote on common-sense business men are able to meet and ought to meet; and I repel any insinuation that I have offered any objection to this bill. I brought forward the amendment I offered in the interest of what I thought to be, in the first place, the theory of the bill. I think I should be justified in saying that the parties who so strenuously urged its passage unchanged from the form agreed on by the committee were not so anxious for the immediate education of the people as they were to build up a public system of education that might be the admiration of the whole world. I said before it was a sentiment. I repeat it again, it is a sentiment without practical benefit to the people for whose benefit it professedly is made.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. GARLAND in the chair.) The question is on concurring in the second amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, offered by the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. BURNSIDE. There were two amendments made to make the bill correspond with the amendments which have been non-concurred in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They became a part of the amendments of the Senator from Colorado, and are now out, so that the whole thing stands as it was before. I move to amend the bill at the end by adding this clause, which I think ought to be in every bill of this character and indeed in every other that I can think of:

And the power to amend and repeal this act is hereby reserved.

I wish it to be perfectly clear. That is probably the present construction of the bill, but inasmuch as States and possibly school districts get a vested right in this fund, and inasmuch as undoubtedly future legislation, will be necessary to adjust the operations of a scheme of this kind, I think it desirable that there should be no question as to the power of Congress by future legislation to make such further provision or to withdraw this altogether as the public interest may seem to require. I therefore move to add at the end of section 10 the words: 10 the words:

And the power to amend or repeal this act is hereby reserved.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I wish to say a single word. I voted with a great deal of pleasure and a great deal of earnestness for the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado. I supposed that there was a serious difficulty existing in certain portions of our country; that in certain States of the Union there was a large, a lamentably large number of the people of those States utterly illiterate, and that the safety of those States, and to some extent the safety of the country, depended upon removing that unfortunate condition of affairs. Looking at this bill in that light, it seemed to me to be an utter absurdity. It could not by any possibility have any effect upon the actual existing condition of affairs in those States. It could not tend at all to educate the present children of school age in those

The amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado, if it had prevailed, would have given the principal of this sum year by year to bring those children up with some degree of education; and I trusted that when they came to be the men of action of their day, they, having been themselves educated, would see to it that their children in some way should be educated as well at least as they had been. The Senate has decided, however, that that shall not be done, and that the measure as it stands, which can be of no practical importance to the present generation, shall be brought to a vote. Now, in looking at the matter according to the best lights I have, I cannot see any object in doing that other than this: that this is the start of building object in doing that other than this: that this is the start of building up in our country under the control and influence of the General Government a vast educational fund, to be created by it, and applied by it, and superintended by it in the education of the country. That may be a good thing to do; I do not know whether it is or not; I cannot say; but that can be the only effect to follow from the passage of this bill as it stands.

Something has been said here about this bill as it stands being the result of the advice of experts in education. Now, I have a great deal of respect for experts in all branches of learning and all kinds of information; and if this were a question how best to teach scholars in our schools and colleges, what it was best to teach them there, I might defer my judgment to that of so-called experts; but when it becomes a question broader than that—to determine how we shall I might deter my judgment to that of so-called experts; but when it becomes a question broader than that—to determine how we shall raise the means, the money to sustain the teachers in their expert calling of teaching—that is a question of which I think I am as capable of judging perhaps as a man whose business it is to teach. If this be, as I apprehend it is, but a commencement in doing something that is not understood and perhaps not avowed, if it be merely a commencement in building up here at the center of our Government a vast educational scheme, to be fed from time to time by appropriations, diversions of the revenue of one kind and another to it thus a vast educational scheme, to be fed from time to time by appropria-tions, diversions of the revenue of one kind and another to it, thus absorbing the educational system of the country into and under the control of the National Government, I have grave doubts whether it is a thing that should be encouraged or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. Edmunds.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McDONALD. If the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado had been adopted by the Senate, I should have voted for the bill; but as that has been rejected, the bill as it now stands before the Senate is just what its title indicates, "a bill to establish an educational fund, and apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to public education, and to provide for the more complete endowment and support of national colleges for the advancement of scientific and industrial education;" and as the means by which all this is to be carried out are utterly inadequate to the great end sought to be attained by it, I shall wait until the nation is in a better condition to take up and elaborate and carry out so grand a scheme as dition to take up and elaborate and carry out so grand a scheme as this before I shall vote for its inauguration.

The theory upon which this bill has been supported is that it is to furnish educational aid to those who can neither read nor write, and that it would be a great means of educating the colored people of the that it would be a great means of educating the colored people of the South by the distribution of 4 per cent. Interest upon the proceeds of the sales of a portion of the public lands and adding to that a fund which we have improperly taken from the inventive genius of this country and held in some kind of control of the United States; and this magnificent scheme of thus educating the colored people of the South looks to me now, as this bill stands before the Senate, very much like that magnificent charity over which Mr. Bumble presided and which furnished the nutriment that was doled out to the charity inmates of that institution at the time Oliver Twist asked for more. If we are to wait for this fund to educate the colored people of the South and to make them intelligent voters, I fear that the people of this country may have to suffer from that evil, and will have all their

and to make them intelligent voters, I fear that the people of this country may have to suffer from that evil, and will have all their sufferings before the relief comes.

To devote the proceeds of the public lands, a portion of them or all of them, to education under the control and auspices of the several States in accord with and in aid of their several common-school systems would be a measure that I should be very glad to aid in; but to inaugurate a scheme of this kind, under the pretense of educating the people of the South, I shall wait for some other day until there is more means provided for the purpose before I vote for it.

means provided for the purpose before I vote for it.

Mr. BURNSIDE. The friends of this bill can very well afford to wait until the time elapses to let it demonstrate itself. If the Senator from Indiana lives as long as I hope he will live he will feel very proud of the action of Congress in the adoption of this bill, if it passes both Houses

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 17, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

CORRECTION.

Mr. BROWNE. If I correctly heard the reading of the Journal, it states that I obtained indefinite leave of absence. I have asked no leave of absence. There must be some mistake about it.

The SPEAKER. The leave of absence granted was to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. BAYNE. The correction will be made. The Journal was then approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILSON. I call for the regular order.
Mr. HUNTON. I ask the gentleman from West Virginia to withhold the call for the regular order that I may offer a resolution to which I am sure there will be no objection.
Mr. WILSON. I withdraw the call for the regular order.

MARY AND SARAH STEUART.

Mr. HUNTON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved. That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to Mary Steuart and Sarah Steuart, sisters of James M. Steuart, late Postmaster of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to his salary for six months, and also the necessary funeral expenses, not to exceed the sum of $250.

Mr. HUNTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolu-tion was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHANGE OF NAME OF YACHT.

Mr. O'NEILL. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Commerce, for present consideration, the bill (H. R. No. 6539) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to change the name of the yacht Stephen D. Barnes, of Philadelphia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized to change the name of the yacht Stephen D. Barnes, owned by Henry C. Lea, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, to that of Vega, and to grant said vessel a register in said name; the said vessel being a pleasure-yacht only, and not engaged in commercial or other business.

The SPEAKER. The report will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Commerce, to which was referred House bill No. 6539, entitled "An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to change the name of the yacht Stephen D. Barnes, owned by Henry C. Lea, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, to that of Vega, beg leave to report the bill to the House, recommending its passage.

This vessel being a pleasure-yacht only, and not engaged in commercial or other business, or in the carriage of freight or passengers for compensation, and being free of debt at the time of the purchase by the present owner, the committee has unanimously approved it and hope it will pass the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of Mr. WARNER. Is it reported from a committee?

The SPEAKER. It is a unanimous report from the Committee on Commerce. This is a pleasure-yacht, which will not under any circumstances carry freight or passengers for compensation.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. O'NEILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DURATION OF LEGISLATIVE SESSIONS IN TERRITORIES.

Mr. AINSLIE. I ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. No. 1760) amending section 1852 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 1852 be, and the same hereby is, so amended as to read as follows:
"Sec. 1852. The sessions of the Legislative Assemblies of the several Territories of the United States shall be limited to sixty days' duration."
The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Territories, to whom was referred bill H. R. No. 1760, beg leave to report the same back with a recommendation that the same do pass, for the following reasons, to wit:

1. Section 1846 of the Revised Statutes provides that biennial sessions only shall be held in the Territories.

2. Section 1852 limits the sessions to forty days.

Your committee believe that in view of the fact that biennial sessions are established, sixty days in each two years is as short a period as is consistent with justice and a due administration of affairs in each Territory. Some of these Territories contain nearly seventy thousand square miles of territory, nearly ten times the size of Massachusetts or twice as large as the State of Ohio.

Your committee believe, therefore, that the public interests will be better conserved by the limit of sessions of said Territories to sixty days than forty, as under the existing law.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the House Calendar and was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KLOTZ moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN WESTERN DISTRICT OF VIRGINIA.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on the Judiciary, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 6599) to change the time for holding circuit and district courts of the United States for the western district of Virginia, held at Danville, Virginia. I ask that the bill be now put upon its passage. It simply changes the time of holding a court of the United States. It is approved by the bar and the judge presiding at that court.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c. That the United States circuit and district courts of the United States for the western district of Virginia, held at Danville, in the State of Virginia, shall hereafter be held at said city of Danville, commencing on Tuesday after the third Monday in June and on Tuesday after the third Monday in November 1. after the third alonday in while and or russay when the control ber of each year.

SEC. 2. All laws and parts of laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed. This act shall be in force from its passage.

The SPEAKER. The report will now be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 6599) to change the time for holding circuit and district courts of the United States for the western district of Virginia, held at Danville, Virginia, respectfully recommend its passage. It is a matter of convenience for the bar and court.

The memorial of the members of the bar and others was read, as

To the Congress of the United States:

The undersigned, practicing in the United States courts at Danville, and others, would respectfully represent that the present terms are inconveniently arranged, and would ask that the same be changed so that the first semi-annual term occur on the Tuesday after the third Monday of June, instead of the Tuesday after the fourth Monday of February; and the second semi-annual term on Tuesday after the third Monday of November, instead of the 15th of that month, of each year. As the terms now exist, there is too little interval between the November and February term, and it hus deprives suitors of equal facilities at both terms.

Signed by E. Barksdale, jr., and others.

Berryman Green, judge fourth judicial circuit of Virginia, recommends the above change.

change.
I concur in this petition.

ALEXANDER RIVES, United States District Judge.

Mr. CALKINS. I desire to ask the gentleman from Virginia what effect that bill would have on any of the cases now pending, especially the criminal cases? There is no clause in the bill saving the pending cases. I do not know if the gentleman from Virginia has considered that question.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I have considered it to this extent, that I find the judge of the court signs the petition and makes the application.

Mr. CALKINS. Should not the act prescribe that this shall not interfere with processes that have heretofore been served or may be served ?

Mr. CABELL. All that matter has been considered by the judge of the court

Mr. CALKINS. I think there ought to be a saving clause in the bill. But I content myself with calling the attention of the gentleman from Virginia to the point, and am willing to let the matter take

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ELEVATOR IN SOUTH WING OF CAPITOL.

Mr. HAWK, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6623) to amend a paragraph of the statutes of the second session of the Forty-sixth Congress; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAWK. I desire to state that this bill relates to the construction of the elevator in the south wing of the Capitol.

MARGARET S. HEINTZELMAN.

Mr. BINGHAM. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table for present consideration the bill (8. No. 1776) granting a pension to Margaret S. Heintzelman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, do., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Margaret S. Heintzelman, widow of Major-General Samuel P. Heintzelman, deceased, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. BINGHAM. The House Committee on Invalid Pensions has made a favorable report in this case. I ask that the Senate report be read.

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions was read, as follows:

Major-General Heintzelman died May 1, 1880, at the age of seventy-five years. He entered the military service of the United States July 1, 1892, and was retired from active service on the 22d of February, 1869. During his term of more than forty-five years of continuous service he was engaged and distinguished himself in the Florida war, in the war with Mexico, in expeditions against the Indians in California and Oregon, and in the war of the rebellion, being twice wounded in action. His military service was faithful and brilliant, and his death is believed to have resulted from wounds received in line of duty.

He left his family no property adequate for their support.

In view of the action of Congress in similar cases, the committee recommend that the prayer of the petition be granted and the bill pass.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed.

Mr. BINGHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS SAINT MARY'S RIVER.

Mr. NICHOLLS. I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill No. 1814, to authorize the construction of a fixed bridge over the Saint Mary's River, and for other purposes, be taken from the Speaker's table for consideration at this time. I am authorized to state that the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. Conger,] who objected to the consideration of the bill the other day, after examining it has consented Mr. NICHOLLS. It is, with a second section which was added by the Senate

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will recognize gentlemen to make objections to its present consideration. The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Waycross and Florida Railway Company and the East Florida Railroad Company be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct a fixed bridge with one span over the Saint Mary's River at the point selected by said companies for crossing said river with their railroad line, about one and one-half miles below Trader's Hill, in Charlton County, Georgia, and to make such bridge of such height as they may see fit: Provided, The height be sufficient to permit the passage of timber rafts under said bridge; and such proposed railroad crossing and bridge are hereby declared to be the head of navigation on the said Saint Mary's River.

SEC. 2. That Congress reserves the right to alter or amend or repeal this act at any time, and that if at any time the navigation of the said river shall in any way be obstructed or impaired by the said bridge the Secretary of War shall have anterity and it shall be his duty to require the said railroad companies to alter and change the said bridge at their own expense in such manner as may be proper to secure free and complete navigation without impediment, and if upon reasonable notice to said railroad companies to make such changes or improvements they shall fail to do so, the Secretary of War shall have authority to make the sane, and all the rights conferred by this act shall be forfeited and Congress shall have power to do any and all things necessary to secure the free navigation of the river.

Mr. CONGER. I would ask the gentleman if he has any objection

Mr. CONGER. I would ask the gentleman if he has any objection to striking out the last clause of section 1, which declares the proposed bridge to be the head of navigation of the Saint Mary's River?

Mr. NICHOLLS. It is really the head of navigation. Mr. CONGER. That statement must be an inconsistency, for the use of the stream above the bridge for the floating of rafts is prowided for by the bill.

Mr. NICHOLLS. It cannot be used for any other purpose. Boats cannot run up past the bridge, for the river is too small.

Mr. CONGER. Yes, but there is navigation for flat-boats, canoes, and rafts.

and rafts.

Mr. NICHOLLS. The river cannot be used except for rafts.

Mr. CONGER. Is there any objection to striking out that clause?

Mr. NICHOLLS. The principal objection would be that it would require the bill to go back to the Senate.

Mr. CONGER. The other provisions of the bill are in accordance with the usual acts of Congress, and I have no objection to them.

Mr. NICHOLLS. Where this bridge is to be located is really the head of payigation.

head of navigation.

Mr. HUMPHREY. If the river is navigable in fact and in law this bill could not take away that character from the river.

Mr. CONGER. I know that. But the navigability of a stream is as much for logs, rafts, and flat-boats as it is for steamers and other

Mr. NICHOLLS. Yes, sir, but there are no flat-boats on this portion of the river. Mr. CONGER.

But there are logs

Mr. CONGER. But there are logs.

Mr. NICHOLLS. Precisely; but this fixed bridge is to be of sufficient height to permit the passage of timber rafts under it.

Mr. CONGER. I cannot see any propriety in putting in the clause; but I care less about that than I do about the other provisions of the

I hope the gentleman will not object.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] make any suggestion by way of amendment?

Mr. CONGER. I merely made the inquiry of the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair understands the gentleman not

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read three several times, and passed.

Mr. NICHOLLS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPARKS. I call for the regular order.
The SPEAKER. The regular order is the morning hour for reports of a private nature from committees.

Mr. FORNEY. I move to dispense with the morning hour.
Mr. BRIGHT. Does that require a two-thirds vote?
The SPEAKER. It does.
Mr. WILSON. If the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] is carried, will it cut off the consideration of private bills to-day?

The SPEAKER. It will cut off reports from committees; but another vote will be required to dispense with the consideration in Committee of the Whole of private bills to-day. The Chair understands that the object of the gentleman in moving to dispense with the morning hour is to enable the House to consider to-day the Military Academy appropriation bill.

The question was taken upon the motion of Mr. FORNEY; and upon a division there were appropriated as a second of the consideration.

a division there were—ayes 124, noes 30.

Before the result of the vote was announced,
Mr. BRIGHT called for tellers.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry of the Chair. If the pending motion shall be carried, would it prevent a motion to go into Committee of the Whole on private business?

The SPEAKER. It would not. Another vote would be required to dispense with private business for to-day.

Mr. SPRINGER. The House may go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar immediately after the pending motion is carried?

The SPEAKER. It may; but the Chair would recognize the gentleman who submits the pending motion to submit a further motion to dispense with the consideration of private business to-day.

Mr. BRIGHT. I will withdraw the call for tellers.

The SPEAKER. No further count being called for, and two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the morning hour of to-day is dispensed with.

Mr. FORNEY. I now move to dispense with the consideration of private business for to-day.

Mr. BRIGHT. Pending that motion, I move that the House go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee that the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. For-NEY] is more favorable to the gentleman than his own motion. A majority can vote down the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee, whereas a two-thirds vote is required to carry the motion of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BRIGHT. I made the motion principally to give notice to the

Mr. FORNEY. I will withdraw my motion. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Forney] had better insist upon his motion.

Mr. BRIGHT. Has the morning hour been dispensed with?

The SPEAKER, It has Mr. BRIGHT. Then I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering business on the Private Calendar. the Private Calendar.

Mr. PRICE. I suggest that the House goes into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar unless two-thirds vote against it. Several Members. Oh, no!

Mr. PRICE. Yes; the rule is imperative. It sets apart Friday of each week for private business. I ask the Clerk to read the rule. The Clerk read as follows, from Rule XXIV:

On Friday of each week, after the morning hour, Itshall be in order to entertain a motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House to consider business on the Private Calendar; and, if this motion fail, then public business shall be in order as on other days.

Mr. PRICE. I call for the reading of Rule XXVI. The Clerk rend as follows:

Friday in every week shall be set apart for the consideration of private business, unless otherwise determined by a two-thirds vote of the members present and

Mr. PRICE. That is the rule.

The SPEAKER. There is an apparent inconsistency in the rules on this subject; but it has always been held that a majority of the House has the right to control its business.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Under the rule one-third only is necessary to go into committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BRIGHT] that he had better allow the question to be voted on in the form suggested by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr.

Mr. BRIGHT. I withdraw my notion for the purpose of having a vote on that question.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, if there be no objection, will lay before the House certain communications for reference.

There was no objection.

REFUND OF CUSTOMS DUTIES.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a detailed statement of the various sums of money refunded as customs duties during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

SANDY HOOK BAR.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the channel of Sandy Hook Bar; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

CHICAGO RIVER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting reports of examinations of the Chicage River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL T. G. BAYLOR.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the memorial of Lieutenant-Colonel T. G. Baylor for relief.

The SPEAKER. That memorial will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HENDERSON. I have been requested to move that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed. The SPEAKER. If it be so referred that committee will have to report it back again for reference to the appropriate committee. They have no right to institute legislation under the rules.

Mr. HENDERSON. I only act in accordance with a request made to me by the Chief of Ordnance, that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the Chair is willing that it should be referred as the gentleman suggests; but the Committee on Appropriations has no right, under the rules, to institute legislation. On examining this matter the Chair finds it to be a claim, and that it really ought to go to the Committee on Claims. It does not

Mr. HENDERSON. A four-hundred-dollar check.

The SPEAKER. It will require a law, and under the rules the Committee on Appropriations are debarred from instituting any new legislation and from incorporating into any law adding to the expenditure of the public money in any appropriation bill. The Committee on Appropriations uniformly refused to take cognizance of any private claim. The progress of this matter will be facilitated, the Chair suggests, by reference to the appropriate committee.

Mr. HENDERSON. Very well, then. Let it go to the Committee on Claims.

to get their pay before the holidays.

There was no objection; and the resolution was adopted.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM A. AND ADELICIA CHEATHAM.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee resumes the consideration of the Private Calendar, and the first business is a bill (H. R. No. 3561) for the relief of William A. and Adelicia Cheatham.

Mr. BRIGHT. It was the understanding that claim should go to the foot of the Calendar. I find in the RECORD that the chairman of the Committee of the Whole House said it should be put at the foot of the Calendar, there being no objection. It should not come up first in order this morning, and therefore I ask it be passed over in pursuance of the understanding I have indicated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that request was made as stated by the gentleman from Tennessee, but that subsequently the request was withdrawn.

Mr. FINLEY. I do not like to question the information of the Chair, but I remember the understanding that bill should go to the foot of the Calendar. So, too, in reference to the bill (H. R. No. 3784) to compensate Asa Weeks, which follows it, the request was made and agreed to that it also should be referred to the foot of the Calendar. The Chairman ruled that informally passing over the bill sent it to the foot of the Calendar. FRANCIS B. M'NAMARA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 281) granting a pension to Francis B. McNamara.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Francis B. McNamara, late drummajor in Company E of the Sixty-first Regiment of Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The accompanying report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 281) granting a pension to Francis B. McNamara, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to increase the pension of Mary A. Steece, widow of Tecumseh Steece, late lieutenant of the United States Navy, to $150 per month,

The report was read, as follows:

That Mary A. Steece is the widow of Tecumseh Steece, who was a lieutenant in the United States Navy, and was attached at the time of his death to the United States Navy, and was attached at the time of his death to the United States Navy, and was attached at the time of his death to the United States Navy, and was attached at the time of his death to the United States Navy, and was attached at the time of his death to the United States Navy, and was attached at the time of his death to the United States Navy, and was attached at the time of his death to the United States Navy, and was attached at the time of his death to the United States Navy, and was attached at the time of his death to the United States Navy, and was attached at the time of his death to the United States Navy, and was attached at the time of his death to when he died. "When he was well," says Dr. Hyde, "he was foremost in jealously preserving for the sick the ice which we had on board, and which some officers wished to expend in part upon the mess of which he was a member; and when he was taken sick it was a pleasure to me to see how thoroughly he enjoyed the luxury himself, being permitted to hold small pieces of it in his mouth. When it gave out, and the intense heat of his skin became almost insupportable, his strong imagination grew eloquent in depicting to me rivers, lakes, and fountains of cool water in which he would like to repose."

"The intense heat of the weather," continues Dr. Hyde, "at this season in this climate, and the general sickness of the ship's company, together with our great distance from land, made it imperatively necessary that he should be buried at sea," which was done.

It thus appears that Lieutenant Steece died while at his post of duty. The testimony of his fellow-officers to his gallantry and constant fidelity to duty is presented in the language of encomium. He had almost matured what he termed a "Republican Military System," which challenged the attention and consideration of those of his comrades to whom he had submitted it. He left the petitioner without means, his salary being his and her only means of support.

The committee, believing the claim to be meritorious, recommend the passage of the bill with an amendment, that the words "one hundred and "be stricken out, so that the pension of the petitioner be increased to $50 per month; and the bill, as amended, the committee herewith report to the House.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, this is a remarkable report if it is

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Chairman, this is a remarkable report if it is not a remarkable case. I would like to inquire of the gentleman having it in charge whether $50, which the report proposes to give, is the pension which the law now gives to officers of that rank or to the widows of officers of that rank?

widows of officers of that rank?

Mr. COFFROTH. I think this act increases the usual pension that is given to that class of cases, but there are scores of cases where the same pension has been fixed for the same rank of officers. This man lost his life by means of yellow fever. He belonged to the regular Army, and the widows of officers of that rank in the regular Army now receive from the Government $50 per month. They have been increased to that sum. This places this widow upon the same rank and gives her the same pension as the widows of officers of the same rank and class are now receiving.

and gives her the same pension as the widows of omcers of the same rank and class are now receiving.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Chairman, I do not think in this case or in any other case there ought to be that unnatural and unusual increase of pension. I object to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee, which is to strike out "one hundred and" and insert "fifty."

Mr. SPARKS demanded a division.

Mr. BROWNE. I apprehend that the gentleman from Illinois does not desire to oppose the amendment which is proposed by the committee.

Mr. SPARKS. Of course I do not desire to oppose the amendment.

I thought the question was being taken on laying the bill aside. I was not aware that that was the motion pending at the time I asked for a division, and I withdraw the demand.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

BENJAMIN F. WORRELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2448) for the relief of Benjamin F. Worrell.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Interior to restore to the pension-roll the name of Benjamin F. Worrell, late a private in the First Regiment New Jersey Volunteers, and to cause payment to be made to him of all arrears due upon his pension.

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

It is in evidence that Benjamin F. Worrell was placed upon the pension-rolls January 5, 1863, and remained on said rolls until September 27, 1875, when he was dropped from said rolls upon a report made on his case by a special agent (T. P. Kane) of the Pension Office, on the grounds that the wound which caused the amputation of his leg was not received in the line of duty.

It is in evidence that the First New Jersey Volunteers, the organization to which claimant belonged and was on duty with at the time of the wounding, was in the field near Alexandria, Virginia, when claimant was detailed, with a party of four others, to perform patrol duty.

It is also in evidence that while performing said duty the party to which the claimant belonged were fired into on their road to camp, the shot taking effect in claimant's left leg, which resulted in the amputation of said leg.

It is also in evidence that the shot was fired by some unknown enemy, and by no fault of the claimant.

The evidence in the case is largely in favor of the claimant's statement that he was in the line of duty when shot.

Against that theory is the claimant's own statement that he was on a pass when wounded. This statement was made thirteen years after the wounding, and it is in direct conflict with the statement made by him within a year after the wounding. The claimant claims that the statement made by him that he was on a pass was an error, and has made an effort to show he was on duty, but the Commissioner is inclined to the theory that claimant was on a pass, and is therefore not entitled under the law to a pension.

It is the opinion of the committee that the evidence in the case that he claimant was on patrol duty when shot is largely in favor of the claimant's statement, and, as the Pension Office admit that he was not shot by any gnard or sentry, or by any fault of his own, that he should be restored to his formerplace on the pension-rolls, and that he is entitled to the relief provided for him in the bil

The bill was laid aside to be favorably reported to the House.

WILLIAM C. PARKER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3786) granting a pension to William C. Parker, being a substitute proposed by the committee for the original bill referred to them.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William C. Parker, of West Virginia, who lost both legs by a railroad collision while transporting Government troops during the late war, under a peremptory order of General B. F. Kelley, the officer then in command of troops in West Virginia, at the rate of $25 per month.

The report was read, as follows:

Virginia, at the rate of $25 per month.

The report was read, as fo llows:

On the night of May 27, 1861, and during the prevalence of a storm, by a collision of the cars on the line of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, near Wheeling, West Virginia, William C. Parker had one foot torn off and the other so crushed and mangled as to render its amputation necessary, and serious injuries-inflicted in the spine, leaving him a most deplorable cripple for life; that he has no means of support, and that he is a subject of charity; that at that time the engines, cars, and employes of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company were subject to the orders of the military efficers of the Government; that an emergency called for an immediate removal of the troops from Wheeling, to accomplish which General B. F. Kelley, then in command of the Government forces in that State, issued his peremptory military order, about one o'clock in the morning, to have an engine and a sufficient number of cars in a state of immediate preparation for the movement of troops; that Parker was directed to perform this duty, and in his performance and during the prevalence of the storm a collision occurred by which he sustained the injuries aforesaid; that he was not in the military service of the United States, but was acting under the immediate peremptory orders of the military commander, and that in the prompt discharge of his duties and in the execution of these orders he sustained injuries that have made his life one of sorrow and of suffering.

He made application for a pension, but his application was rejected by the Pension Department for the technical reason that he was not actually in the military service of the United States.

While this technicality controls the Commissioner of Pensions, who is acting under and must conform to the provisions of the pension laws, it does not estop Congress from granting pensions in meritorious cases to persons who served the Government, but not in the regular Army, Congress has heretofore exercised eyes from the effects of a fever contracted while in the faithful discharge of his duties.

A great war had just been inaugurated. Its limits had not then been well defined, and the whole country was filled with consternation and alarm. An extreme emergency arose for the immediate use of troops. General Kelley issued his peremptory order, in the execution of which Parker, for the time being, became a servant of the United States. It was his duty to execute that order, and he would have been punishable for a refusal to do so. General Kelley, in his testimony in aid of this claim, uses the following language:

"Although Parker was not in the service of the United States at the time of the accident, yet he was executing a peremptory military order, and therefore I think it would be an act of justice and humanity if Congress would pass an act to place him on the pension-roll of wounded soldiers."

Your committee fully concur in the humane recommendation of that gallant general that the Government should extend relief to the unfortunate wounded man. They deem it preferable, however, to follow the precedent established in the case of Hall, above referred to, and allow him some specific sum.

They therefore recommend that he be allowed $25 per month for the residue of his life. In the course of human events that cannot be very long. The case is one of such peculiar hardship and great suffering that in the opinion of your committee it will be an act of justice and charity to extend relief.

Your committee report herewith a substitute for the bill referred to them, and recommend the passage of the substitute.

Mr. SPARKS. Let us understand this case. If I comprehend aright,

Mr. SPARKS. Let us understand this case. If I comprehend aright, from the reading of the report, it is proposed here to pension a man who never was in the military or naval service of the United States at all.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. STEPHENS. He was in the service, but not upon the rolls.
Mr. SPARKS. He was not in the military or naval service of the United States in any acceptation of the term whatever. Now, he United States in any acceptation of the term whatever. Now, he had, perhaps, a meritorious case. I have no objection to that part of the report; but our pension laws make provision only for pensioning those who were either in the military or naval service of the United States. Does this committee desire to report to the House a bill pensioning a man in conflict with the pension laws? That seems to be this case. I admit, as I have already said, that this seems to present a strong and meritorious case, if you please. The man was wounded severely upon a railroad then being run under the control of the military service of the United States; but this man was simply a civilian, not in the Army at all; was not in the military service in any capacity, but was simply a railroad official; and the question is, should he not look for compensation to the railroad company if any injury was sustained? injury was sustained?

Mr. McMILLIN. Do I understand the gentleman from Illinois to-say that this man was simply an employé of the railroad company? Mr. SPARKS. Yes; that is all. Mr. WILSON. I will explain when I can get the floor that he was

Mr. COFFROTH. Mr. Chairman, it is the duty of the Committee on Invalid Pensions when a bill is referred to it to examine the evidence and examine the law bearing upon the case to enable it to say whether that pension should be granted by the Pension Department or not. If it does not come within the provisions of the rules laid down by the Pension Bureau or within the provisions of any law upon the statute-book in regard to pensions, then it is the duty of the Committee on Invalid Pensions to examine whether it presents a case worthy of consideration and relief by Congress. In the examination of the case now under consideration we found one or two precedents where a man had been pressed into the service by a general in command, for the purpose of the transportation of troops, and where he was injured and received a pension by special act of Congress. This being a very meritorious case, and believing that it required the intervention of a special act of Congress in order to pay this man what he was justly entitled to and place him upon the pension-roll for that purpose, the committee have reported this bill, and they say they have reported according to precedents and in accordance with justice to the party himself. Now, the Senate during the last session of Congress took up considerable time in discussing the question whether a scout should be put upon the rolls or not. They ave decided it affirmatively, and there are numerous instances where the applicant does not come within the provisions of any pension law, and yet Congress has placed his name upon the rolls by special act. Congress has that authority, and for that reason the bill has been reported by the committee; and I desire to say again, Mr. Chairman, that this is a meritorious case.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to give a brief history of this case, as it is one with which I am somewhat familiar. First, I desire to reply to the objection of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPARKS, I that the name of Parker has not been placed on the pen-sion-rolls for the reason that he had not enlisted in the military or naval service of the United States, but was simply an employe of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company. It is true that the Pension Department, by its rules and regulations, could not permit his name to be placed on the rolls, but it is equally true that this House is not controlled by those rules, and it is wise that it should not be. It is equally true that this House has heretofore wisely and properly exercised that discretionary power by granting pensions to persons who have performed valuable service for the Government when they were nave performed valuable service for the Government when they were not in the Army or Navy, and who have suffered from injuries received while performing such service.

Now, what are the facts in this case? This occurrence transpired in May, 1861, in the city of Wheeling, West Virginia. A great war had recently been inaugurated. Its limits were not then well defined, and along the border where I lived the country was filled with consternation and alarm. Many were going off as soldiers to the confederate side and more to the Federal side. It was very uncertain where or when an outbreak might occur. At the instance of the Government the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company put their road, rolling-stock, and employés at the disposal of the United States Government. General Benjamin F. Kelley was in command at Wheeling, and, having received information that the confederates were marching on that city, he issued his peremptory order directing the employés of the railway company to put a train of cars in immediate running order with the view that soldiers might be sent to meet the invaling force. The order was issued about midnight and during running order with the view that soldiers might be sent to meet the invading force. The order was issued about midnight, and during the prevalence of a storm. Parker was charged with the duty of getting the train in order. In the darkness of the night, and during the storm, a collision occurred. He was thrown from the cars; one leg was entirely cut off and the other was fearfully mangled. While in the performance of this duty he was the servant of the Government obeying the order of the commendation of the Government. in the performance of this duty he was the servant of the Government, obeying the order of the commanding general, and would have been liable to be cashiered and punished for disobeying orders. He did for the Government as much as a soldier could have done. By his promptness the train was got ready, and troops were put on it and sent out to meet the supposed invading force.

This case does not stand alone. This Congress has wisely in other cases exercised the power to grant a pension under somewhat similar circumstances. I refer to the case of another constituent of mine, John S. Hall, of West Virginia, who, when a boy, entered the service as teamster and followed the army down to Tennessee. After a battle he set out with supplies for the wounded soldiers in his wagon. He was lost in the woods, lay out in the storm all night, contracted typhoid fever, which settled in his eyes, and both eyes ran out, leaving him forever blind. Congress, with a magnanimity which characterizes the American people, granted him a pension of $25 dollars a month.

Here is a case equally meritorious. The petitioner sustained severe injuries while making the prompt response of a loyal man to a peremptory order of the commanding general, and I trust no man in the American Congress, and certainly no man on this side of the House,

Mr. Chairman, I know Mr. Parker. He is now old and crippled. Let me go further and say he is surrounded by a family of consumptive children, who are utterly penniless and dependent on charity; and if we grant this relief for the remaining period of his life, which in the ordinary course of human events cannot be long, we will be doing not of instications which every reticitie man will sendend.

an act of justice which every patriotic man will applaud.

Mr. McMlLLIN. It would seem from the proposition that is now Mr. McMILLIN. It would seem from the proposition that is now before the House, and the favor with which in some quarters it is being received, that the remarks, undisputed and undeniable, made by the gentlemen who had charge of the pension bill yesterday have had but little effect on the House. We have had propositions to pension soldiers who were crippled in the service, and it has been done. We have had various propositions of that kind; but I believe this is the first time in the short experience that I have had here in which it has been proposed that the Government shall pension disabled railroad employee. employés. Mr. WILSON.

Mr. WILSON. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. McMILLIN. Yes, sir, with pleasure.

Mr. WILSON. Let me say to the gentleman from Tennessee that the party petitioning here was not obeying the order of the railroad company. He was directly in the service of the Federal Government, under the orders of the general commanding in that district.

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not care whose order he was obeying. He was an employé of the railroad and was serving the railroad, and was never a soldier, nor did he ever claim to be. The fact that the Government had taken charge of the railroad benefits him nothing. Why, sir, the Government has reserved the right to use some transportation sir, the Government has reserved the right to use some transportation lines of the country, including those great trans-continental railroads that are drawing their folds around the institutions of this country so that are drawing their folds around the institutions of this country so tightly and threatening to subvert them.

It is proposed to establish a precedent in a democratic House, to be followed in all time to come, by which every employé of a railroad disabled while the Government is using its road shall be pensioned. I ask the House—I ask the members who are here to look vigilantly after the interests of their constituents—not to set such a precedent. When $50,000,000 are required annually to meet the various pension demands; when, according to the statement made yesterday by the gentleman who had charge of the pension bill, over two hundred mill-gentleman who had charge of the pension bill, over two numbered millions will be required to meet the arrearages of pensions alone—

Mr. HOUSE. It will be $500,000,000.

Mr. McMILLIN. When, as my colleague says, we are threatened with an obligation of $500,000,000 for this purpose, is it possible that gentlemen propose to lift the flood-gates of expenditure still higher, and open the doors of the Treasury and let in every railroad employé, be he of low or of high degree, who gets crippled and has the audacity to demand new for it? I hope not

The pension problem is the great problem of this time. We should approach it thoughtfully, and be slow to extend the pension law to those who never enlisted in the service of the country. I do not think, however the circumstances in this individual case may appeal to our charity, that we ought to grant this pension. It has been stated by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] that this man has a consumptive family. Ipresume every Representative here has constituents who are consumptive, and we cannot afford to open the public well, that cannot be helped! [Laughter.] You cannot give a pension to every man who has a numerous family; otherwise, instead of $50,000,000 a year being required, a billion a year would not suffice. There is no statute giving pensions on account of a large family; otherwise, the descendants of Brigham Young would be clamoring for public recognition.

I hope the House will at least give due consideration before it establishes a precedent of this kind, and with proper consideration I do not think so pernicious an example will be set.

Mr. WARNER. I take a different view of this bill and the propriety of its passage than is taken by some gentlemen on this side of the House. I think that such cases as these are really the only cases that ought to be made the subjects of special acts; that is, cases that are meritorious, where damage has been sustained by persons who if not technically in the military service were nevertheless practically in the military service of the Government. Where damage has been sustained in such cases there is some obligation resting upon the Gov-

We have passed general laws covering as we supposed all cases that ought to be pensionable. Still there are exceptional cases; there are two or three hundred, possibly a thousand, cases in the United States similar to this, of men who served in the different departments, some in the Quartermaster's Department, not enlisted men, yet while so serving were disabled, have lost limbs, or have suffered as much disability as those in the military service technically. Their cases are not covered by general law, and can be met only by special legislation.

It would be difficult to extend the general laws so as to cover all these cases. I know a number which I think ought to be made the subject of special acts, and if I had my way I would rule out all that come under the provisions of the general laws and limit our legisla-tion of this character to strictly meritorious cases that do not come within the provisions of the general laws.

Whether this case should be made the subject of special legislation, without attempting to pass a law which would cover a hundred equally meritorious cases, I do not know. It is very probable that such cases can be reached only by special acts of this kind. I am not opposed to a special act to cover a special case not coming under general laws

Mr. SPRINGER. I think this case is one that requires special relief, from the fact that the pensioner was practically in the military service of the United States. What is embraced in the term "service?" It is not necessary that a man should have been regularly enlisted and mustered into the ranks or commissioned as an officer of the time of war a military commander may summon all the male inhabitants of a town or city capable of bearing arms and force them into the service. Their names may not be enrolled, they may not be regularly sworn in, but they may all be marched out to engage in the defense of the city, and some of them may be killed or wounded. Now, would it be said that because they had not been enrolled and mustered into the service they are not entitled to pensions? I think

This man was in the military service of the United States just as This man was in the military service of the United States just as much as if he had been sworn into the service. The company by which he was employed was engaged to operate a railroad. The officers and employes of that railroad company and the cars of the road were impressed into the service of the Government by a military commander in time of war. This man obeyed the command of the military officer and proceeded to operate the mailroad under military direction. He was therefore in the service of the Government. Would the railroad company have been responsible for the negligence of its employés had this man been crippled in the service of the railroad company? Of course not; for the railroad company was absolved from any liability for any accident that might happen to the

This man was liable to the service of the Government, and was in the service of the Government, and compelled to perform that service. If he had refused to perform it he might have been immediately taken out by order of the military commander and shot. He was in the midst of war, and the military commander ordered him to do a certain thing. He proceeded to do it, and while he was doing it he was the servant and employ6 of the Government and in the military service of the United States, and as much entitled to be protected while in that service as any person in the service by virtue of regular enlist-

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a ques-

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Springer] says that it was not necessary that this man should have been enlisted in the military service of the United States. Will he refer me to any statute under which men are recognized as entitled to pensions without being enlisted and sworn into the service of the country?

Mr. SPRINGER. We are making a statute to that effect now.
Mr. McMILLIN. And a very bad one, too.
Mr. SPRINGER. I would not be in favor of a general law on this subject. As the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] has remarked, this is one of the very kind of cases if any which ought to be brought before Congress for special relief. As we cannot make a general law to cover cases of this kind, we must pass special acts granting the relief required.

relief required.

Mr. ATHERTON. I am not willing to extend the pension laws any further than they now reach. I do not believe, upon the report made in this case, that this man was in the service of the United States. In fact, the committee in their report, as I understand it, say that they propose to extend this relief because this man was not in the service of the United States, and therefore his case is not covered by the general pension law. They say in the report that he "was not actually in the military service of the United States, but was acting under immediate peremptory orders of the military commander."

Mr. COFFROTH. Read the whole of that portion of the report.

Mr. ATHERTON. That is what the report says; and "that in the prompt discharge of his duties and in the execution of these orders he sustained injuries." This report says that "this railroad and the cars and the locomotives had been placed under the orders of the military officers of the Government." The report does not say that this man who was injured was placed in the military service, or that he was acting under any immediate order of the military officer.

Now, when the railroad officer directed this man to get out his

Now, when the railroad officer directed this man to get out his locomotive he might have said he was under no obligation to obey, that he was not enlisted in the military service of the United States. He might say, if you please, to the railroad officer, "You may place your locomotive and ears, so far as you may, under the control of the Government for military purposes; but I do not choose to run this train at this time."

Gentlemen who advocate this bill say that this man might have been punished for disobeying the order of the military commander. Now, remember the circumstances. This case arose in West Virginia. A general order was issued by a military commander to have a train of cars put upon the road. The railroad officers ordered their employés to get out the locomotive and prepare the train for use. Did this place the employés of the railroad company in the service of the Government so that they were subject to military control and liable to military punishment? Whose orders were they obeying? Not the orders of the military commander directly, but the orders of the railroad officers who told them to get out the locomotive and place the cars upon the track.

It does seem to me that in no just sense was this man in the mili-

It does seem to me that in no just sense was this man in the military service. In my view he could not have been punished by the military commander for a violation of the order. Upon the whole report it seems to me that he was the employé of a railroad company, simply executing such orders as his superior officers in that company simply executing such orders as his superior officers in that company told him to execute, while perhaps the company was placing its rolling stock, its cars and locomotives, at the service of the Government.

Mr. HOUSE. I see that the gentleman has the report in his hand. Does that disclose whether this man was a loyal man or a rebel?

Mr. ATHERTON. It does not disclose anything on that subject.

Mr. HOUSE. We might pension a rebel by mistake.

Mr. ATHERTON. If this man was in the military service, there is no reason why he should not, at least in the first instance, make his application at the Pension Office. If he was not in the military service. application at the Pension Office. If he was not in the military service, then the question arises, shall we extend the provisions of the pension laws to a new class of cases? I say that we ought not to do this. In opposition to what has been said by my colleague, [Mr. Warner,] I think it unjust to many meritorious persons to take up a single case of this sort because the applicant may have a friend at court and give him relief which is denied to all others. If you propose to extend relief to a new class of cases, let all coming within that class be placed upon terms of equality. If you intend to pension persons who were not regularly in the service of the United States, but who acted in this general way under the authority of a railroad company which placed its cars at the disposal of the Government, let us have a general act which will be fair to all. Let us not take a single isolated case and give relief which we deny to all others.

Nor am I in favor of extending the pension laws to new classes of cases. They are now extended, if not too far, as far at least as the generosity and beneficence of the Government ought ever to carry generosity and beneficence of the Government ought ever to carry them. I am not in favor of any greater expenditure than the present laws require the Government in good faith to make.

Mr. WILSON. I desire to read for the benefit of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ATHERTON] an extract from the testimony of General Kelley, in command of the West Virginia district at the time of the occurrences on which this claim is founded:

Although Parker was not in the service of the United States at the time of the accident, yet he was executing a peremptory military order; and therefore I think it would be an act of justice and humanity if Congress would pass an act to place him on the pension-roll of wounded soldiers.

him on the pension-roll of wounded soldiers.

Now, I concede that if Parker rendered no meritorious, valuable service to the Government, he should not receive the proposed bounty. It will be remembered that this affair occurred early in the war. The confederate forces were marching on the city of Wheeling, as it was supposed, taking advantage of a dark, stormy night. The cars and employés of the railroad company had been put under the command of the military. The car-men of the company were notified and required to put a train of cars in immediate preparation for use, an order they were bound to obey. That put Parker as perfectly in the service of the Government as though he had been an enlisted soldier and was carrying his musket on his shoulder. The order came to him, "Get up your train without delay." He responded in a loyal spirit; he was a loyal man. In the discharge of this duty he was thrown from the car and injured as stated.

I am not at all surprised at the objection coming from the gentle-

I am not at all surprised at the objection coming from the gentle-man from Tennessee, [Mr. McMillin.] Perhaps the atmosphere in which he has lived may have educated him to the belief that no man should receive bounty from the Government for vindicating the old should receive bounty from the Government for vindicating the old flag. But I must confess I am somewhat surprised at the opposition of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. ATHERTON.] I had hardly thought that a gentleman coming from his latitude would have been so hostile to the supporters of the Federal Government, so prejudiced against their claims for relief as to refuse to give them the benefit of a well-earned bounty.

Mr. ATHERTON. I will ask whether I did not do as much for the Government as the gentleman now on the floor?

Mr. WILSON. I do not claim anything for myself. My friend claims to have been a loyal man; I have not claimed to be. But I accept the situation and will gladly accord to those who bravely and gallantly stood by the Government and the Constitution the full measure of all their rights and all the bounty they are entitled to receive.

Why, sir, men have been pensioned for personal injuries received in this Capitol. A few years ago one of the employes of the Senate who fell or was thrown down stairs was pensioned; and there was no objection. Other persons injured in the service of the Government have also been pensioned in the same way. No more meritorious case has come before Congress than the claims of this unfortunate man. His service to the Government has rendered him a cripple for life, his service to the Government has rendered him a cripple for life, so that he is now unable to earn a living for his suffering family. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that this House will promptly award to him the measure of relief which the committee recommend.

I move to amend the bill by striking out the words "place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of," and in lieu thereof to insert the word "pay;" so the bill will then read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay William C. Parker, of West Virginia, who lost both legs by a railroad collision while transporting Government troops during the late war, under a peremptory order of General B. F. Kelley, the officer then in command of said troops in West Virginia, at the rate of $25 per month.

Mr. SPARKS. I have no objection to the gentleman perfecting his bill, but I do want a vote on laying the bill aside to be reported favorably to the House.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I now move, Mr. Chairman, that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 67, noes 15.

Mr. ATHERTON. I do not make any question of a quorum, but I give notice that in the House I shall demand the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

So the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass

DALTON HINCHMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No.

1628) granting a pension to Dalton Hinchman.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll the name of Dalton Hinchman, late a private in the Second Michigan Cavalry.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1628) granting a pension to Dalton Hinchman, late private, under the name of Samuel

M. Burson, in Company G, Second Michigan Cavalry Volunteers, have had the same under consideration, and ask leave to submit the following report:

The committee find the facts set out in the soldier's petition are substantially proven as stated: that he first enlisted in Company C, Eleventh Ohio Infantry Volunteers, in July, 1861, and served until February 22, 1863, when, on account of the abuse of his orderly sergeant, he deserted and again entered the service as a private, under the name of Samuel M. Burson, in Company G, Second Michigan Cavalry Volunteers, and in December, 1863, was wounded in action at Murray Creek, East Tennessee, by a gunshot wound through his left thigh, which has totally disabled him from duty and from earning his living by manual labor, and that his wounds have crippled him for life, and that he was honorably disabled from the service February 21, 1865.

The committee therefore report back said bill, and recommend its passage.

Mr. ATHERTON. I wish to ask whether this case was presented to the Commissioner of Pensions before it was brought to Congress.

Mr. NEW. Mr. Chairman, I wish to remark in reference to this claimant that I have known him from his boyhood, and can say no person more worthy to receive a pension has ever served his country

With the indulgence of the committee I will make a brief statement of his services and of his injuries. In July, 1861, he enlisted at Camp Dennison, Ohio, in the company and regiment named in the bill and report. He served in that company faithfully until February 22, 1863, during that period participating in some thirteen or four-teen engagements, among which I may name Bull Run, Frederick City, and Antietam. About that time, on account of the overbearing City, and Antietam. About that time, on account of the overbearing conduct and cruel treatment of his orderly sergeant, he, with twenty-five or thirty others, left their company—deserted, if you please. In November following he re-enlisted in Company G, Second Michigan Cavalry, as stated in the report of the committee just read, under the name of Samuel M. Burson, having changed his name, very naturally, on account of the fact that he had abandoned the former company without a discharge. In the following December he was wounded in the battle of Mossy Creek, I believe it was called, in East Tennessee, by a gunshot, which entered the left groin, shattered the hip joint and crushed the upper end of the thigh bone. The hip joint became stiff, that leg much shorter than the other, and the result is that his condition as a cripple could not be much worse. He made his application in the usual way to the Pension Department for a pension under the name of Samuel M. Burson, through the advice his application in the usual way to the Pension Department for a pension under the name of Samuel M. Burson, through the advice of the claim agent who prepared and filed his application. A pension was granted to him, but before a payment was made the full facts became known to the Commissioner of Pensions, and his name was dropped from the rolls, by operation of law, because his injuries were not received in the line of duty as a soldier, he having left his company in the manner I have stated and receiving his wound while company in the manner I have stated and receiving his wound while not in and of that company. It was for that reason, and that alone, that he has not obtained and is not now drawing a pension in the

I have before me a letter written by the Commissioner of Pensions stating substantially as I have the reason why his name was dropped from the pension-rolls. In it he says, however, if the facts be as stated by the soldier, his case is not without merit, but that the terms of the general law deny him a pension.

A bill passed both Houses of the Forty-fourth Congress granting him a pension, but it, with other pension bills passed at the same time, was not signed by the President for want of time. A bill was also passed through this body in the Forty-fifth Congress, but failed in the Senate, as the report of the committee there shows, simply for the reason that there was a failure of proof before the Senate committee reason that there was a failure of proof before the Senate committee as to the personal identity of Dalton Hinchman and Samuel M. Burson. He was discharged, Mr. Chairman, on the 21st of February, 1865, his discharge showing that it was because of a gunshot wound. The case is certainly most deserving and in every way worthy of the favorable consideration of Congress. He ought to have received a pension in the years gone by, and it will be a great wrong if arrears of pension are not hereafter granted to him. No soldier who has received the arrears under the general law is more entitled to it than is this soldier. soldier.

I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose, and a message from the Senate by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, notified the House of the passage of the following bills; in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (S. No. 523) for the relief of Charles H. Nichols, late superintendent of the Government Hospital for the Insane; and

A bill (S. No. 1886) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to erect a public building in the city of Pensacola in place of the one recently destroyed by fire.

JAMES J. FERRIS.

The committee resumed its session.

The next business upon the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 788) for the relief of James J. Ferris.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to put the name of James J. Ferris on the pension-roll at $72 per month, subject to the conditions and limitations of the

The report of the committee accompanying the bill was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 788) granting an increase of pension to James J. Ferris, have had the same under consideration, and respectfully report:

That James J. Ferris was a corporal of Company K, Seventy-third Indiana Volunteers; that said Ferris was wounded in the service of the United States, losing his left arm, the same being disjointed at the shoulder, and also losing his right hand, except a scarred and crippled thumb; that said Ferris is totally unable to feed or clothe himself, it being impossible for him to put on the most simple garment without help; that the constant attention and assistance of another person is required to enable said Ferris to clothe or feed or perform the most necessary service for himself.

Your committee find that the said James J. Ferris is now receiving a pension of $\frac{8}{2}$— per month, and they are of the opinion from the foregoing facts that the said James J. Ferris is as totally disabled, so far as concerns helping himself, as if his right hand had been entirely gone, and therefore your committee would respectfully report back the accompanying bill and recommend that it do pass.

Mr. WARNER. I move to strike out "$72 per mouth." We are

Mr. WARNER. I move to strike out "$72 per month." We are departing from what I understood to be the established rule of the House, that is, to leave the rating of these cases to the Pension Office.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, That would defeat the bill.

Mr. WARNER. Very good; let it defeat it. I do not know how many cases there are of this kind, but I think it will be a bad policy to depart from what seems to have been a settled purpose of the House to remit this question of rating to the Pension Office.

Mr. CALKINS. Mr. Chairman, however much force there may be in the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio in ordinary cases, in this case it ought not to obtain for the reason that the Commissioner this case it ought not to obtain for the reason that the Commissioner of Pensions refuses to put Mr. Ferris upon the pension-roll at this rate, because there is a little part of the last joint of the thumb remaining, and he construes the law to be that because there is a small portion of the joint left the hand is not entirely gone, and consequently the man is not brought within the rule which provides for the loss of both arms. The purpose of this bill is to declare that in this case the disability is as great as if both arms were gone. The law rates such cases of disability now at the amount fixed in this bill.

It provides that persons who have lost both eyes, who have lost both arms or both legs in the service, shall have a pension at the rate.

of $72 per month. But the Commissioner of Pensions asys, as I have a pension at the rate of $72 per month. But the Commissioner of Pensions says, as I have a leady stated, that because there is a little part of the thumb, or a portion of the last joint of the thumb, remaining, therefore this man does not come within the purview of the law, and this bill simply allows him to derive the benefit of it because his disability is equally as great as if he had lost both hands.

Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman allow me to make an inquiry?
Mr. CALKINS. Certainly.
Mr. FINLEY. Do I understand that this man has lost the use of both arms

Mr. CALKINS. The left arm is taken off at the shoulder; the right one is taken off commencing at the little finger and leaving only a small portion of the last joint of the thumb on that hand.

Mr. FINLEY. And that disability prevents him from using his hand?

Mr. CALKINS. He has no use of the hand, excepting in so far as' that he may be able to press the remaining joint of the thumb against the hand; but he cannot feed himself or cannot put on his clothes. The disability from this cause is absolute and total, and it is because of this fact that the present bill is introduced to instruct the Commissioner of Pensions that, because his disability is the same as if he had lost both arms, therefore that he should be placed upon the roll on the same terms as if he came strictly within the letter of the law. So to strike out what the gentleman from Ohio suggests would simply defeat the object of the bill and the relief sought. The Commissioner of Pensions would again refuse to put him upon the roll for the same reason that he refused when the application was originally

Mr. WARNER. This may be an exceptional case, and so entirely exceptional as to bring it within the rule providing for such cases by general legislation; but, for all that, it is substituting the judgment of the House for the Pension Office and its surgeons. However, I will withdraw the amendment on the statement made by the gentleman from Indiana.

There being no further objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

BRIDGET SHERLOCK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2453) for the relief of Bridget Sherlock.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Bridget Sherlock, dependent mother of Stephen Sherlock, late a private in Company F, Fifteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and pay her a pension for herself from June 25, 1863, that being the date of the death of her

The report was read, as follows:

That the evidence abundantly shows that Bridget Sherlock was the mother of the late Stephen Sherlock, late a private in Company F, Fifteenth Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, who was mustered into the service of the United States June 14, 1861, as a private, to serve for three years or during the war. That he was discharged from the service November 23, 1862, for disability, at Bowling Green, Kentucky, by order of General Rosecrans. The certificate of disability shows, "Discharged by reason of scrotal hernia, with severe pain in the lumbar regions, heavy.

dragging down sensations, numbness, and difficulty in using the lower extremities, which wholly deprived him of the capacity to earn his subsistence. His case is one of very bad scrotal hernia, caused by a fall over a log May 10, 1882, in front of Corinth, while carrying a heavy load of rails upon his shoulders for the purpose of building a road over which to pass the artillery during that memorable siege, and recommends an honorable discharge." Signed by the assistant surgeon Fifteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteers.

The affidarits of different persons show that the said Stephen Sherlock worked for said parties prior to his enlistment, and that his earnings, to their certain knowledge, went to the support of his parents.

The evidence further shows that at sundry times after his enlistment, and while in the service, he sent money home in letters, by express, and by persons passing. The letters and envelopes that contained the money, together with affidavits, are on file with applicant's papers.

It appears that before the enlistment in the United States service, the said Stephen Sherlock was a laborer on the Louisville, New Albany and Chicago Railroad, and after his return home, having partially regained his health, he sought and obtained the position of freight-conductor on said road, which he held but a short time, when an accident occurred by his attempting to get on his train when in motion, his foot slipping, throwing him off, and the train passing over his foot, crushing it, and it had to be amputated; and owing to his bad health he never recovered, and finally died June 25, 1863.

Mrs. Bridget Sherlock, dependent mother, being a widow, about seventy years of age, without land and without means of support, her support being cut off in part by death of son, your committee therefore report the bill back and recommend its passage.

Mr. WARNER. I move to strike out the words "from June 25, 1863," so as to make this conform to the rule we have established of striking out arrears in all these cases. If stricken out of one, as we

Mr. ATHERTON. I would like to ask the gentleman who presents this bill whether this claim has been presented to the Commissioner

Mr. HOSTETLER. It was presented to him.
Mr. ATHERTON. Upon what ground was it excluded?
Mr. HOSTETLER. It was denied upon the ground that the soldier did not die of disease contracted in the Army, but that his death was

Mr. ATHERTON. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to call the attention of the House to the fact that this report, upon its face, shows that the soldier did not die of disease contracted while in the service of the United States, and if upon that ground the Commissioner of Pensions refused a pension in his case, I hold that it was properly refused. The facts here show that this soldier had hernia. The facts show that subsequently he, being in bad health, engaged in the service of a railroad company; that he fell from a train; that by reason of that fall his foot was injured so as to require amputation; that by reason of bad health when the accident occurred he never recovered. It will not do to say, nor will it be pretended, that all the relatives of will not do to say, nor will it be pretended, that all the relatives of a soldier, whether dependent or not, who receives an accident after leaving the service, and dies from the effects of it, should be entitled to Government aid and Government bounty. It is not contemplated by the law that all such should be burdens upon the Government.

Mr. BROWNE. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a ques-

Mr. ATHERTON. Certainly.
Mr. BROWNE. The House just now pensioned an employé of a railroad, who was injured in the service of the railroad and in the line of duty as a railroad employé. Is it not quite as proper that the House should now pension the mother of a soldier who was killed by a railroad accident?

Mr. ATHERTON. If the case to which the gentleman refers did pass the House it might be a precedent, and to that extent the gentleman will probably be right. But it will be remembered that it is not yet the action of the House, and may never be. At all events, so far as that principle is concerned, I shall oppose it when it comes to the House upon that case to which he refers or upon the one now under consideration. It is propose properly that if a soldier dies of under consideration. It is proper enough that if a soldier dies of disease contracted in the service, who has a dependent mother, that she should receive a pension, if the proof is properly made. But upon what theory should a dependent mother or any other dependent relative receive a pension from the Government by reason of the death of a soldier if he did not die in the service or on account of wounds or injuries received while in the service of the Government.

The gentleman at my right [Mr. COFFROTH] says the committee say this man did die of disease contracted in the service. They do not so report. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to the language of this report. After reciting his services, they say that it is shown by the certificate of disability that he was—Discharged by reason of scrotal hernia, with severe pain in the lumbar regions, heavy dragging-down sensations, numbness, and difficulty in using the lower extremities, which wholly deprived him of the capacity to earn his subsistence.

Then the committee say:

It appears that before the enlistment in the United States service the said Stephen Sherlock was a laborer on the Louisville, New Albany and Chicago Railroad, and after his return home, having partially regained his health, he sought and obtained the position of freight conductor on said road, which he held but a short time, when an accident occurred by his attempting to get on his train when in motion, his foot slipping, throwing him off, and the train passing over his foot, crushing it, and it had to be amputated.

The Government was not responsible for that accident, or for that amputation.
Mr. COFFROTH. Read on.
Mr. ATHERTON. The report continues-

And owing to his bad health he never recovered, and finally died June 25, 1863.

Now, will anybody say that hernia is to be considered under such circumstances the cause of his death? Did not the Commissioner of Pensions determine properly when he said this man's death was caused by a railroad accident, resulting in the amputation of his foot, and that it did not occur from the hernia which was the result of his

Mr. HOSTETLER. I had no intention to keep back any of the facts from the committee or the House, but desired to show most fully to the committee the condition of this soldier when he came out of the the committee the condition of this soldier when he came out of the service and to show also how and when he received the disability that he incurred while in the service, and that he was discharged from the service in consequence of this disability, which the evidence shows; though I believe the report does not show that it was a double hernia caused by this fall while in the service of the Government, and which under the law certainly would have entitled the man to a pension had he made application during his life-time. It was a disability incurred while in the service. But he being proud-spirited did not avail himself of the benefit of the offer of the Government. He deferred making application, and tried to earn a support for himself and for his aged parent until the time of this accident.

The question is this: whether or not this aged mother shall be deprived of the benefit of a pension he might properly have received had he applied for it. It is shown that this hernia which he received while in the service produced partial paralysis, and disabled him to that extent. Now this was probably a part of the cause why he did not recover from the effects of the accident that occurred by his fall from the railway train.

The question then is whether or not this old lady would be deprived of the benefit of the services of her son simply because he was trying to earn a support for himself and her and met this accident under to earn a support for himself and her and met this accident under those circumstances. I trust the committee will do an act of justice to this lady in her old age.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOSTETLER] accepts the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WARNER.]

Mr. HOSTETLER. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "volunteers" in line 8 namely, these words:

Strike out all after the word "volunteers," in line 8, namely, these words: "And pay her a pension for herself from June 25, A. D. 1863, that being the date of the death of her son."

Mr. COFFROTH. Let the bill be read as amended. The bill, as proposed to be amended, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, dc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Bridget Sherlock, dependent mother of Stephen Sherlock, late a private in Company F, Fifteenth Regiment Indiana Voluntages

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on ordering the bill, as amended, to be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House. Mr. ATHERTON. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 7. So (further count not being called for) the bill, as amended, was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

WILLIAM H. SCRIBNER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 859) granting a pension to William H. Scribner, reported by Mr. Davis, of Illinois, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill was read, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William H. Scribner, late a private in Company E, of the Third Regiment of New York Cavalry Volunteers.

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as 10110ws:

The evidence shows that the said Scribner enlisted in the United States military service in Company E, Third Regiment New York Volunteers, on August 22, 1861, and was honorably discharged August 21, 1864. It further appears that on June 28, 1864, while in the line of duty, on a raid with his regiment, he fell from his horse and severely injured his leg and ankle. He was soon after discharged. It is further shown that he never recovered from the injuries then received. The bruises and injury to his ankle-bone developed into permanent disease; he became lame, and finally necrosis of the ankle-bones set in, and at length his leg had to be amputated.

The committee think it is clearly shown that this soldier is suffering from disability resulting from injuries received in the United States military service in the line of duty. They therefore report back said bill, and recommend that it do pass.

Mr. WARNER. I would like a little explanation as to the reason why this application was rejected in the Pension Office.

why this application was rejected in the rension Office. The report is not satisfactory on that point.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. This case was rejected in the Pension Office on account of the inability of this party to show clearly enough to satisfy the iron rule adopted in that office that the disease which necessitated the amputation was contracted in the service. It is believed by the committee that that is clearly shown, and I do not believe that the mere fact of the rejection of the claim by the Pension Office can be insisted on here.

I reported to this House, as is shown on the Private Calendar, on the 6th December, a bill for the relief of John Murphy, whose claim was rejected by the Pension Office. After a rehearing that claim has been adjusted and admitted, and I think if this claim be not passed here at this time it would be reopened and passed at the Pension

Mr. WARNER. Then I submit by all means it should go to the Pension Office. I ask the gentleman from Illinois whether the com-mittee which reports this bill has had any evidence before it not submitted to the Commissioner of Pensions?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Not any.

Mr. WARNER. I submit this is a case that ought to go to the Pension Office.

Mr. HAWK. I would like to say, for the benefit of the gentleman from Ohio, that the claim was rejected at the Pension Office because of the merest technicality, the inability of this pensioner to show precisely that this injury was received at the time the horse ran over him in this charge. To my mind, and I presume to the minds of the committee, this seemed to be proven.

The Commissioner of Pensions thought, by applying the strictest construction to the closest rule of law governing this case, he could not pass it. It was because of that kind of technicality the claim as rejected.

Mr. WARNER. I believe we should abide by the decision of the Commissioner.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

WILLIAM W. CHURCH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1649) granting a pension to William W. Church, reported by Mr. Davis, of Illinois, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William W. Church, late a private in Company K of the Sixty-fifth Regiment of Infantry, Illinois Volunteers, and pay him a pension as such.

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

The evidence shows that the said Church enlisted in the United States military service in Company K, Sixty-fifth Illinois Volunteers, on the 15th day of May, 1862, and was honorably discharged May 15, 1865. It appears the soldier was sound at enlistment; that he suffered some from an affection of the lungs by cold in the winter of 1862-63; rheumatism in 1862; rupture, March, 1865; wound left leg, Harper's Ferry, September 15, 1862; wound left hand, Knoxville, November 20, 1863; and wound left ear, Knoxville, November 30, 1863. The rupture was caused by a horse rupning over the soldier in a cavalry charge, March, 1865, soon after which (May 15, 1865) he was discharged. The testimony all goes to show that the soldier has never been able to do full manual labor since his discharge; that he is now utterly and entirely unable to do manual labor since his discharge; that he is now utterly and entirely unable to do manual labor of any kind for the support of himself and family owing to a very severe rupture, the result of injury received in the military service of the United States.

The committee have no doubt that the disability of the soldier comes from injuries received in the line of duty in the military service of the United States.

They therefore report favorably upon the bill (H. R. No. 1649) and recommend that it do pass.

Mr. WARNER. This is another case that comes clearly within the

Mr. WARNER. This is another case that comes clearly within the provisions of the general law; and if relief is due under the laws it can be granted at the Pension Office. I should like to know why it was not granted there if application was made, and why the case comes to this House.

Mr. HAWK. This is a case where the man was slightly ruptured in consequence of falling from his horse. He himself hardly realized it at the time; but two or three months after he went home the rupture had developed in such a way as to unfit him for manual labor entirely; and now he is entirely and utterly incapacitated from performing any manual labor, the rupture having increased so much in size and is torn out.

size and is torn out.

The technical point in this case is this: the applicant could not, of course, prove that he was ruptured exactly at the time when he fell from his horse, although his own affidavit to that effect was submitted. But how could he get anybody else to testify to that fact? He did not go to the hospital at once.

Mr. WARNER. The report says that he was also wounded.

Mr. HAWK. Yes, that is true; but he did not attempt to prove his wounds. His disability comes largely from the rupture.

Mr. FORT. His wounds did not materially disable him.

Mr. HAWK. His wounds did not disable him materially, although they are a consideration in the case. At the same time he did not

Mr. FORT. His wounds did not materially disable him.

Mr. HAWK. His wounds did not disable him materially, although they are a consideration in the case. At the same time he did not deem them of sufficient importance to claim a pension on that ground.
I know this man personally, and I know something of his case from personal observation. I believe it to be a thoroughly deserving case.

Mr. WARNER. I withdraw my objection.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

JAMES M. ALLISON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3787) to restore the name of James M. Allison to the pension-roll, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee.

The bill was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of James M. Allison for restoration to the pension-roll, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report with accompanying bill:

It appears from the evidence submitted to the committee that the said James M. Allison was enlisted in the United States service in the war with Mexico, as private in Company G, Second Tennessee Volunteers, and was wounded by a gunshot in the front of the left hip, at the battle of Cerro Gordo; that in consequence of disability from this gunshot wound, the said James M. Allison was placed on the pension-roll at $4 per month. November 6, 1874, and on certificate of examining surgeon, showing increased disability, an increase of pension from $4 to $12 per month was allowed November 18, 1874. It appears further from the evidence before the committee that upon the recommendation of one Dr. Van Deman the name of the said James M. Allison was dropped from the pension-roll June 20, 1877. But affidavits of prominent physicians and other respectable citizens of Chattanooga, who are well acquainted with Mr. Allison, show that the disability does exist; that it is the reuslt of a gunshot wound received while in the line of duty at the battle of Cerro Gordo, and that he is, beyond a doubt, entitled to a pension.

The committee are therefore of the opinion that the soldier above named is entitled to be restored to the pension-roll, at the rate of $12 per month, amount received by him before his name was stricken therefrom.

Mr. DIBRELL. I move to fill the blank in the bill with the word.

Mr. DIBRELL. I move to fill the blank in the bill with the word twelve."

The motion was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was laid aside to be reported favorably to

WILLIAM HAMILL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3788) granting an increase of pension to William Hamill, reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Hamill, late sergeant Company K, One hundred and seventeenth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, at the rate of $18 per month; and that said pension date from and be paid at the rate of $15 per month from the 6th day of June, 1865, to the 4th day of June, in the year 1872; and that he be paid pension from and after the 4th day of June, in the year 1872, at the rate of $18 per month, deducting former payments.

The report was read, as follows:

he be paid pension from and after the 4th day of June, in the year 1872, at the fixe of $18 per month, deducting former payments.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3788) granting an increase of pension to William Hamill, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

It appears from the evidence submitted to the committee that the said William Hamill was enlisted in the service of the United States on the 14th day August, 1862, and mustered as a sergeant in Company E, in the One hundred and seventeenth Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers, and was honorably discharged on the 25th day of January, 1865; that while in said service, and in the line of his daty, at Baker's Creek, near Clinton, in the State of Mississippi, he received a gunshot wound in the elbow of the right arm. The ball entered the anterior surface of the forearm immediately in front of the ulma at its articulation with its humerus. The bullet produced total anchylosis of the elbow-joint. The arm is flexed at an angle of ninety degrees, and is as immovable as if it was a solid bone, and causes the parts to perish, preventing any rotation or bending of the arm to any extent whatever, rendering him totally and permanently incapacitated from obtaining subsistence from manual labor, and as equivalent to the loss of a hand. He was pensioned from January 25, 1865, at $5 per month. This rate was increased to $8 per month from July 18, 1866, and again to $14 from April 2, 1873, and reduced to $10 per month from July 18, 1866, and again to $14 from April 2, 1873, and reduced to $10 per month in 1875, on account of the construction of the claim for increase of his pension to $18 per month was rejected because the Commissioner of Pensions holds that, notwithstanding the claimant's disability is permanent, it is not permanently and secretary to the law allowing $18 per month as a pension. Section 4697, title 57, Revised Statutes 1878, provides that from the

Mr. WARNER. If the provision of the bill giving arrears is stricken out and the proposed increase made to date from the passage of the bill, I will not object.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Tennessee. I have no objection to that amend-

The bill was amended accordingly; and, as amended, was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

MRS. SALLIE T. WARD.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1579) granting a pension to Mrs. Sallie T. Ward, introduced by Mr. Willis, and reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. CALDWELL.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, dc., That the pension of $30 per month, heretofore paid to William T. Ward, now dead, formerly a major general of volunteers, United States Army, (certificate No. 109492) be paid to his wife Sallie T. Ward.

SEC. 2. That said pension to Sallie T. Ward shall begin on the 12th day of October, A. D. 1878, the day of the death of said William T. Ward, and continue during the natural life of the said Sallie T. Ward.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1579) granting a pension to Sallie T. Ward, widow of the late William T. Ward, report:

That he was mustered into the service October 4, 1847, as major of the Fourth Kentucky Velunteer Infantry, and served with his regiment in Mexico to July, 1848, and was honorably mustered out with his regiment at Louisville, Kentucky, July 25, 1848:

He was appointed brigadier-general of volunteers 18th September, 1861, and brevetted major-general of volunteers 24th February, 1865.

His services were: Organizing brigade in Kentucky from September 20 to December 1, 1861; commanding troops at Green River Bridge, Kentucky, to January 8, 1862; commanding Sixteenth Brigade, Department of the Ohio, to March 12, 1862; commanding camp of instruction at Bardstown, Kentucky, and all the troops on the lines south of Louisville, Kentucky, to July, 1862; commanding troops at Lexington, Kentucky, during part of July, 1862, and in pursuit of Morgan to August, 1862; commanding at Munfordville, Kentucky, to September 5, 1862, and a brigade in Army of Ohio to November, 1862; commanding post and brigade at Gallatin, Tennessee, to June, 1863; commanding Second Brigade, Third Division, Reserve Corps, Department of the Cumberland, to October, 1863, and brigade in the district of Nashville to January 8, 1864; commanding First Division, Eleventh Corps, to April, 1864, and First Brigade, Third Division, Twentieth Corps, to June 29, 1864; commanding Third Division, Twentieth Corps, to Lave of absence to October 10, 1864; commanding Third Division, Twentieth Corps, to Revente Corps, was discontinued, June, 1865. Honorably mustered out of service August 24, 1865.

He distinguished himself in the battles before the fall of Atlanta and in the fights preceding the surrender of General Joseph E. Johnston's army.

While leading his brigade in a charge at the battle of Reseaca, Georgia, he was severely wounded in the arm and side, but refused to leave the field. He was absent on leave only seventeen days during the whole war.

The fractured bone by the wound at Reseaca gave him much trouble, and he finally found the arm useless. On account of his wounds he was receiving a brigadier's pension of $30 per month at the time of his death. (Certificate No. 1094):

He died October 12, 1878, a few months after completing his seventieth year of life.

While we cannot say that his wounds and exposure

While we cannot say that his wounds and exposures in the service of his country were the direct cause of his death, they doubtless tended to diminish his powers to resist the effects of old age and to hasten his death.

He left a widow, now past sixty years of age, and without property or means or support.

Your committee find many precedents for the legislation asked in the accompanying bill passed at every Congress since the war. Among them we will only refer to the pensions to Elizabeth York, widow of Shubal York, surgeon Fifty-fourth Illinois Volunteers, (ch. 53, p. 582, 14 Stat. at L.;) Rose Webster, widow of Reason H. Webster, Company E. One hundred and twenty-third Illinois, (ch. 116, p. 530, 20 Stat. at L.;) Grace Aikins, widow of William R. Aikins, Company A, Eleventh Iowa Volunteers, (ch. 296, p. 575, 20 Stat. at L.;) Caroline S. Webster, widow of Colonel Fletcher Webster, 850 per month; and widow of General James Shields, $100 per month, (ch. 46, p. 3, first session Forty-sixth Congress.)

Your committee recommend that the accompanying bill (H. R. No. 1579) be passed.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

JAMES D. GRANT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2968) for the relief of James D. Grant, introduced by Mr. MILLS and reported from the Committee on Ways and Means by Mr. MORRISON. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, de., That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to release James D. Grant, a distiller, of Robertson County, in the State of Texas, from the payment of $1,493.46, which remain unremitted of the two following assessments made against him for deficiencies in the production of distilled spirits, occurring in the months of September, October, November, and December, 1876, and January and February, 1877, at his distillery, No. 1 of the first district of Texas, namely: An assessment for $1,340.05 on the list for February, 1877, and another for $528.16 on the list of May, 1877: Provided, That before the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall release the said Grant from the payment of said assessment, or any part thereof, he shall ascertain by inquiry and investigation into all the facts that said Grant correctly reported and paid taxes upon all spirits made by him during the time for which said assessments were made.

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

The claimant, James D. Grant, was a distiller in Robertson County, Texas. The capacity of his distillery, as appeared from the survey under which he operated for the six months from September, 1876, to February, 1877, inclusive, was greater in quantity, yielding $1,862.21 taxes, than the quantity reported by him of spirits upon which he paid taxes. He was assessed for this deficiency, and $374.75 abated therefrom, leaving the sum of $81,493.46 unabated and still unpaid. From the payment of this sum the claimant asked to be released. In support of his petition to be so released he alleges that the survey of his distillery for said period of six months was excessive; that by reason of the use of inferior grain, lack of water, and the want of experience of the workmen he was compelled to employ, the spirits were not produced; and that he correctly reported and paid taxes on all he did or could produce.

It appears from the statement of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that the survey of capacity was excessive in quantity, yielding $661.26 taxes, for which no abatement was or could be allowed by him because the law requires the distiller to account for 80 per cent. of the producing capacity, as shown by the survey under which he operates; that the distillery was operated on the "sour-mash" plan, the mashing and fermenting being done in the same tubs, but no abatement could be allowed under existing laws on account of the employment of inexperienced workmen, lack of water, or use of inferior grain, however equitable; that the revenue officers were satisfied that the claimant did correctly report and pay taxes on all spirits made by him during said period of the justice of the claim that he staid collection that the claimant might secure congressional action and relief.

The committee recommends that said Grant be released from payment of said assessment upon showing to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue that the operation of his distillery for said period of six months he acte

Mr. DWIGHT. Is this the unanimous report of the committee? Mr. DUNNELL. It is the unanimous report of the committee after a very full investigation. It will be seen that the bill affords full protection to the Government by providing that the amount to be paid must be ascertained by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. I think there can be no objection to the bill.

Mr. MILLS. The amendment suggested in the report is made in the bill by the insertion of the provise at the close of the bill.

Mr. WARNER. Is the Commissioner of Internal Revenue satisfied of the propriety of passing this bill?

Mr. MILLS. He is.

Mr. WARNER. Does he recommend the passage of the bill?

Mr. MILLS. He does.
Mr. DUNNELL. As the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Mills] says, the proviso in the bill was suggested by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

WILLIAM S. BURGESS AND OTHERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 709) for the relief of William S. Burgess and others, introduced by Mr. Dibrell, and reported from the Committee on Claims by Mr.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas William S. Burgess, William H. Willhite, and Nathaniel Austin, of White County, Tennessee, each paid to P. G. Wilkinson, internal-revenue collector for the third district of Tennessee, the sum of $300 as a special tax for distilling fruit, the said Austin's payment having been made on the 31st day of August, and the said Burgess's and Wilhite's each on the 8th day of October, 1888; and Whereas the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Sceretary of the Treasury, on the 12th day of October, 1868, made an order exempting such distillers from the payment of said special tax: Therefore, Bettenacted, dc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, out of any money in the Treasury prototherwise appropriated, to pay to the said William S. Burgess, William H. Willhite, and to Elizabeth Austin, administrative of said Nathaniel Austin, deceased, upon proper evidence of her administrative, each the sum of $300, collected from them as special tax as aforesaid.

Mr. COFFROTH. I would suggest that where the reading of the reports is not called for the bills be laid aside without consuming. time by reading the reports.

Mr. WARNER. Let the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 709) for the relief of William S. Burgess and others, of Tennessee, beg leave to report as follows:

relief of William S. Burgess and others, or Tennessee, begreave to report actallows:

The persons mentioned in said bill for relief were engaged in the business of distilling brandy from fruits. The act of July 20, 1868, imposed a special tax of $400 per annum upon distillers, but contained a provision authorizing the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to exempt this class of distillers from the payment of said special tax.

Owing to some difficulty in the construction of this provision in the statute, the Commissioner did not exercise the authority conferred upon him to exempt from the payment of this special tax until the opinion of the Attorney-General was had upon the subject.

On the 10th of October, 1868, the Attorney-General gave his opinion to the effect that the Commissioner was authorized by said act to exempt from the payment of said tax, and on the 12th of October, 1868, the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, made an order, as follows:

No. 173 — Decision exempting distillers of brandy from apples, peaches, or grapes

No. 173.—Decision exempting distillers of brandy from apples, peaches, or grapes from special tax.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE, Washington, October 12, 1868.

Washington, October 12, 186c.

In accordance with the opinion of the Attorney-General of the United States, rendered on the 10th instant, distillers of brandy from apples, peaches, or grapes, exclusively, are hereby, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, exempted from so much of the provisions of section 59 of the act of July 20, 1862, as imposes a special tax of $400 upon distillers producing one hundred barrels or less of distilled spirits, and of $4 per barrel for every barrel in excess of one hundred barrels.

This accomplise is additionable to the section of the content of the con arrels.

This exemption is additional to the exemptions heretofore specified in series 4, to, 7, and assessors and collectors will govern themselves accordingly.

E. A. ROLLINS, Commissioner.

Approved.

HUGH McCULLOCH, Secretary of the Treasury.

In the month of August, 1868, each of the parties named in the bill was assessed with said special tax to the amount of $300, and afterward, but prior to the 12th of October, 1868, each paid said amount to the collector. The Commissioner held the opinion that the order referred to took effect from its date, and distillers of brandy were not thereafter required to pay said special tax. But these claims thaving all paid said tax before the date of said order, their claims for refunding were therefore rejected, upon the ground that said taxes had been legally assessed and collected, and that the Commissioner had no authority to refund in such cases.

While the opinion referred to may be correct, yet it could not properly be regarded as equitable and just that those who paid their taxes promptly should be left in worse condition than those who were less punctual. And at the last session of the Forty-fourth Congress an act was passed for the relief of Samuel B. Stauber and others, allowing them credit for special taxes paid by them under similar circumstances. As a matter of equal justice, the committee are of the opinion that relief should be granted, and recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported forwarably to the House.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

HOMER FELLOWS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3789) for the relief of Homer Fellows, reported from the Committee on Claims by Mr. SAMFORD.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, dc. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, empowered to pay to Homer Fellows, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $250, in full payment of his claim for services as an employe of the House of Representatives from December 4, 1877, to April 4, 1878.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Homer Fellows, for compensation as messenger of the House of Representatives, beg leave to report: That the committee find that Homer Fellows was appointed messenger of the House by ex-Doorkeeper Polk, and, by assignment, performed the duties of messenger to the Committee on the Territories from the 4th day of December, 1877, until the 4th day of April, 1878, and has not been paid for said service.

The committee further find that said Homer Fellows, through the agency of the said Polk, was not borne on the rolls, notwithstanding said appointment, and hence was not paid by the Congress during which he served.

The committee are of opinion he should be paid for the time he served; and recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. WARNER. It is evident, on the face of the report, which has been read, that this man was appointed without any authority of law and without authority of the House to the officer who made the appointment. I think that this is just one of those cases which ought appointment. I think that this is just one of those cases which ought not to pass.

Mr. SAMFORD. This gentleman was appointed by the Doorkeeper of the House, and in fact he was legally appointed; but the then Doorkeeper of the House exceeded his authority and appointed too many persons. On account of the confusion incident to the administration of the office of Doorkeeper by the then incumbent this man was not paid. The Committee on Claims had before them a communication signed unanimously by the territorial Delegates of this House, stating that this man performed the duty for the time for which he asks to be paid. While there may have been some little irregularity on the part of Colonel Polk, the then Doorkeeper, there was none whatever on the part of this claimant. His claim is a just was none whatever on the part of this claimant. His claim is a just was none whatever on the part of this claimant. His claim is a just one, and should be paid.

Mr. WARNER. It is evident, from the gentleman's own statement, that this man was appointed without authority of law or of the rules of this House. Although he may have served during the time for which he now asks payment, it was the duty of that Congress, not of this, to make provision for his payment.

Mr. SAMFORD. I have already explained why he was not paid during that Congress. It was on account of the confusion incident to the administration of the office of the then Doorkeeper, a matter during that Congress. It was on account of the confusion incident to the administration of the office of the then Doorkeeper, a matter with which many members of this House are perfectly familiar. This man not having been paid during that Congress, it was necessary for his case to go before the Committee on Claims for adjudication. That committee have examined it; they have had before them the territorial Delegates, who certify that all these services were performed, and performed faithfully, and that this man ought to have been paid. been paid.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

MRS. S. A. WRIGHT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2414) for the relief of Mrs. S. A. Wright, introduced by Mr. URNER, and reported from the Committee on Patents by Mr. Ballou.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States and otherwise appropriated, the Secretary of the Treasury pay to Mrs. S. A. Wright, widow of the late George Wright, deceased, the sum of $3,500, in full consideration for the entire past and future use by the Government of the United States of the patent linchpin of the said deceased George Wright: Provided, That a full, sufficient, and legal transfer and license is executed and deposited with the War Department for the Government purposes, free of all charges of royalty.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a very long report in this case. The Chair suggests that it be not read unless some gentleman calls for the reading.

reading.

Mr. ATHERTON. I want to hear it read.

Mr. WARNER. What is the amount which the bill proposes to appropriate?

Mr. ATHERTON. Thirty-five hundred dollars for the use of a patent, claimed to have been owned by the husband of this woman. Mr. BROWNE. If it be in order, I move that the committee rise. I do not want to hear that report to-night.

The question being taken; there were—ayes 6, noes 27; no quorum

Mr. PAGE. I am satisfied the Committee of the Whole did not understand the question.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BROWNE and Mr. BRIGHT were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported ayes 62, noes 61.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. STEVENSON reported that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar had directed him to report sundry bills with the recommendation that they be passed, with or without amendments respectively.

PRIVATE BILLS PASSED.

The following bills, reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar without amendment, were severally taken up, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and assed:

A bill (H. R. No. 281) granting a pension to Francis B. McNamara;
A bill (H. R. No. 2448) for the relief of Benjamin F. Worrell;
A bill (H. R. No. 1628) granting a pension to Dalton Hinchman;
A bill (H. R. No. 789) for the relief of James J. Ferris;
A bill (H. R. No. 859) granting a pension to William H. Scribner;
A bill (H. R. No. 1649) granting a pension to William W. Church;
A bill (H. R. No. 1579) granting a pension to Mrs. Sallie T. Ward;
A bill (H. R. No. 2968) for the relief of James D. Grant;
A bill (H. R. No. 709) for the relief of William S. Burgess and others;
and

A bill (H. R. No. 3789) for the relief of Homer Fellows.

The following bills, reported from the Committee of the Whole with amendments, were severally taken up, the amendments agreed to, the bills, as amended, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed:
A bill (H. R. No. 2547) increasing the pension of Mary A. Steece, widow of Tecumseh Steece;

A bill (H. R. No. 2453) for the relief of Bridget Sherlock; A bill (H. R. No. 3787) to restore the name of James M. Allison to the pension-roll; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3788) granting an increase of pension to William Hamill.

The bill (H. R. No. 3786) granting a pension to William C. Parker, reported from the Committee of the Whole with an amendment, was taken up, the amendment agreed to, the bill, as amended, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

The question being on the passage of the bill,
Mr. ATHERTON called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.
The bill was passed.
Mr. COFFROTH. I move to reconsider the votes by which these various pension bills have been passed; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move to reconsider the votes by which all the other bills reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar were passed; and also move to lay that motion on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

THORNTON SMITH.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. No. 562) granting an increase of pension to Thornton Smith be taken from the Speaker's table for reference to the Committee on Invalid

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY.

Mr. TALBOTT. I move that when the House adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The motion was not agreed to; there being-ayes 39, noes 59.

PRINTING REPORT ON COTTON-WORM, ETC.

Mr. SHELLEY, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred under the law to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States of America, (the Senate concurring.) That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 30,000 copies of the second revised edition, with necessary illustrations, of Bulletin No. 3 of the United States Entomological Commission, being a report on the cotton and boll worms, with means of counteracting their ravages; 10,000 copies thereof for the use of the Senate, 18,000 for the use of the House, and 2,000 for the Interior Department.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Chair will lay before the House certain executive communications for reference.

There was no objection.

LIEUTENANT JONATHAN A. YECKLEY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the case of Lieutenant Jonathan A. Yeckley, United States Army, (retired;) which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

CAPTAIN S. T. NORVELL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the petition of Captain S. T. Norvell for pay for services as acting second lieutenant of the Fifth United States Infantry, from January 28, 1862, to February 18, 1863; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PECOS RIVER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to a bridge over Pecos River; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LIEUTENANT G. S. HOYLE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the claim of Lieutenant G. S. Hoyle; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

Mr. Davis, of Illinois, for two weeks from next Wednesday;
Mr. CHITTENDEN, for three days;
Mr. TUCKER, until the holiday recess; and Mr. HEILMAN, from Monday next to January 10.

On motion of Mr. ATHERTON, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of William H. Price, copies being left on file.

TITLE TO LAND, CHICAGO.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6624) to confirm to the city of Chicago the title to certain public grounds; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

EMILY H. DRURY.

Mr. PRESCOTT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R.

No. 6625) granting a pension to Emily H. Drury; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MARGARET CORRIGON.

Mr. PRESCOTT also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6626) for the relief of Margaret Corrigon; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

M. M. CANNING.

Mr. PRESCOTT also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6627) for the relief of M. M. Canning; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

And then, on motion of Mr. UPSON, (at three o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

By Mr. ATHERTON: The petition of Keys & Co. and others, of the District of Columbia, for legislation to prevent double taxation of livery-stable keepers in said District—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. GEORGE R. DAVIS: The petition of Craft J. Wright, for arrears of pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KETCHAM: The petition of C. D. Godfrey and 37 others, for an appropriation for the improvement of the Yellowstone Park to the Committee on the Public Lands.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Change of reference was made of the petition of citizens of Salt Lake, Utah Territory, for compensation for damages resulting from the diverting of their irrigating water to supply Fort Douglas mili-tary reservation, from the Committee on the Public Lands to the Com-mittee on Claims.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, December 18, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. Harrison, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

NATIONAL FAIR ASSOCIATION.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Speaker, I move by unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 4429) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Fair Grounds Association." I ask to be permitted to state the amendments of the Senate do nothing beyond making a simple change in the number of directors of the National Fair Association and striking out the word "grounds" from the title. It increases the number of the board of directors.

There was no objection, and the motion was agreed to.
The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:
"That the name of said association shall be 'The National Fair Association of the District of Columbia.'

"Sec. 2. That the board of directors of said association shall consist of eleven members, to be elected in accordance with its charter and by-laws.

"Sec. 3. That within thirty days after the passage of this act the stockholders of said association shall be convened in general meeting, and shall elect six of their number as additional members of the board of directors, who, with the five directors now serving, shall hold their office until the second Monday in January. 1881, and until their successors are elected; six of said board shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

"Sec. 4. That on the second Monday in January, 1881, and annually thereafter, the stockholders of said association shall be convened in general meeting and shall elect eleven of their number as a board of directors.

"Sec. 5. That in all elections each share of stock shall be entitled to one vote, and shareholders may vote by proxy in accordance with the provisions of the by-laws."

Amend the title by striking out the word "grounds."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move to concur in the Senate amendments. The motion was agreed to.
Mr. BLACKURN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the mo-tion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CONGER. I demand the regular order of business, as I am desirous of going on with the appropriation bills.

Mr. HUNTON, Mr. CALKINS, Mr. UPSON, and others requested the withdrawal of the demand for the regular order of business.

Mr. CONGER. I will withdraw it for a few moments only.
Mr. BLOUNT. I renew the demand for the regular order.
Mr. FORNEY. I move to dispense with the morning hour to-day for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of one of the appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. That motion requires a two-thirds vote.
The motion was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

MILITARY ACADEMY BILL.

Mr. FORNEY, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 6614) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes, and moved its reference to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I reserve all points of order on that Mr. FORNEY. I now move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the purpose of considering the Military Academy appropriation bill.

Mr. HUNTON. The gentleman yields to me for a moment.

Mr. BLOUNT. We ought to go on with the appropriation bills.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to go on with the appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. So does the Chair.

Mr. FORNEY. I renew my motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. REAGAN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The first business in order is the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6614) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes. for other purposes.

Mr. FORNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to dispense with the first formal reading of the bill.

formal reading of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FORNEY. I desire to make a brief statement for the benefit of the House in reference to this bill. It is based upon estimates made by the Department, amounting in round numbers to $394,000. The sum recommended by the bill is $322,135.37. The amount appropriated last year for similar purposes was a little over $316,000. This appropriation is greater than that of last year to that extent, and rendered so by the fact that under existing laws the amount due the professors, nine in number, is increased by $1,000 on account of length of service. Two of the professors heretofore entitled to $3,000 will receive $3,500 during the coming fiscal year. Those who have been in the service for ten years or over are entitled to the pay of a colonel, which is $3,500, and the pay is therefore increased to that extent under the law.

onel, which is $3,500, and the pay is therefore increased to that extent under the law.

In this bill we also appropriate to complete the hospital for cadets, allowing for that purpose a little over $11,000, as recommended by the Boara of Visitors. The old hospital is to be used for the accommodation of officers, which is much needed. In all other respects the bill is precisely similar to what it was last year. If no gentleman desires to discuss it any further I shall move that it be read by clauses for amendment and debate under the five-minute rule.

There being no objection, the bill was read by sections.

The Clerk read as follows:

For department of law: For text-books and stationery and books of reference for the use of instructors, $100: Provided, That the Secretary of War may, in his discretion, assign any officer of the Army as professor of law.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill whether that proviso in this clause changes the existing law?

Mr. FORNEY. No, sir; the law was changed three or four years ago in that respect. This only allows a wider range for the selection of the law instructor. Heretofore the Secretary of War had been limited in his selection to the judge-advocates of the Army. The law is not changed in any respect from what it was last year.

Mr. CONGER. For the purpose of saying a word in reference to this matter I move to strike out the proviso. I do not know, sir,

Mr. FORNEY. It will not hurt if it be allowed to remain in. Here-tofore the Secretary of War has been compelled to select from the judge-advocates, and that was confined to some six or eight men—six, I believe. Now, we changed that so as to confine this selection not to a limited number but to the entire Army, and the Secretary of War, therefore, has a broader field from which to select.

therefore, has a broader field from which to select.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Chairman, there have been some things which occurred in the Law Department, and the application of the laws and the enforcement of the rules at West Point within the last year, that have aroused the attention of the country to the mode of proceeding there. I do not know that the professor of law in the transaction to which I now allude, or the Judge-Advocate-General there, was the professor of law provided for in this bill. But I do say that there was an exhibition made by the officer in charge at the time of the examination of the colored cadet there, in his intercourse of this Government, that was unworthy of any officer in the officers of this Government, that was unworthy of any officer in the law or in the military or in the civil or naval service of the Govern-

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask what officer he

Mr. CONGER. If it does not come out of my time.
Mr. BLOUNT. I merely ask the question as to what officer the gentleman alludes to.

Mr. CONGER. I refer to the officer that was appointed to take charge of the interests of cadets in the establishment, who became charge of the interests of cadets in the establishment, who became the prosecuting officer.

Mr. FORNEY. Who does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. CONGER. I refer to the officer whose duty it was in a court of inquiry to see to the rights of all persons in there, or who was assumed for the time being to be the person in charge, who became a public prosecutor of a witness to the extent that even the Government of the United States was called upon by popular sentiment all over this country to send a civilian lawyer there, that at least there might be the appearance of fairness or impartiality or justice in the prosecution of that inquiry. I do not care, sir, to revive any of the profound feeling or sentiment that spread like wildfire throughout the North on account of that examination and the occurrences which took place there. But if this clause has any reference to continuing took place there. But if this clause has any reference to continuing took place there. But if this clause has any reference to continuing in force or allowing to remain in power and teaching in that institution the doctrines and policy that were exhibited on the examination of one of the cadets there—a cadet in a public institution of the United States; an institution whose professors, whose officers, even whose prosecutors and law officers are all paid out of the Treasury of the United States; I say if there is to be a renewal of the feelings and sentiments which were displayed there and of those scenes which then took place, there are many people in this country who will desire their Representatives to withhold money from that institution absolutely and let it die. [Here the hammer fell.] The gentleman from Georgia and others interrupted me so that my five minutes was occupied in part by them.

Mr. RANDALL (the Speaker) obtained the floor and yielded to Mr. CONGER.

Mr. CONGER

Mr. CONGER. I have felt, Mr. Chairman, in common I believe with nine-tenths of the fair-minded people of the United States, during the last year, that an institution which was heretofore the pride and glory of the American people; an institution which was taken away from the influences of cities; taken away from the North; taken away from the South, taken away from contact with the multitude, from all the surroundings that might in any way embarrass it; an institution planted upon a plateau where the mountains look down upon West Point and West Point looks down upon the Hudson River, far removed from all commercial or political influences or feelings, that that was the place of all other places within the limits of the United States where, when the Government took up a young man that that was the place of all other places within the limits of the United States where, when the Government took up a young man from the remote parts of the country, a boy, too young to have imbibed evil habits or vicious principles, and sent him there to educate him and fit him for the Army of the United States, whether he come from the interior of the country, from the city, or from the wilderness—that when he came to this secluded place, sent there by the Government at its expense, he should be taught and educated, his mind and his principles regulated for the best interest of his country, without regard to section and for the service of the whole United States. I have believed, sir, that it was no place in that secluded point for the teaching of northern or southern doctrines. It was to be removed from all influences. There was to be no aristocracy. There was to be no caste there. There was to be no question about the right o. arv man that this Government sent there to be educated by our servants, whether he was white or black, whether he was rich or poor, whether man that this Government sent there to be educated by our servants, whether he was white or black, whether he was rich or poor, whether he was of high birth or of lowly origin. But the amazing spectacle has been presented within the last year of an institution thus guarded, thus paid for out of the public Treasury, being made an institution in which caste rules, an institution where a man sent by this Government to be educated has been compelled to dwell in the silence and the solitude of his cell without intercourse, without sympathy, without kindness, without consideration. I care not whether this colored cadet be the author of his own misfortunes, whether he may have deceived the officers of that institution by himself having committed what he has charged against others. I say an institution that will drive a man, goad a man, compel a man by his isolation, by his destitution of all sympathy, to resort even to such measures, needs watch-

Sir, I have heard it said that of all punishments in this world that of absolute solitary confinement was the worst. I have heard it said that you may pass along the aisle and listen at the door of the contact who never sees human face, and that you may pass along the aisle and listen at the door of the convict suffering solitary confinement, who never sees human face, and you will hear an unearthly moan in his dreams in the night-time mingled with every drawn breath. Sir, it is equally damnable that in an institution of our own a child chosen by the people to be educated by the servants of the people among others thus chosen should be compelled to live a life of four years with no intercourse, no companionship, not a word of cheer, because he belongs to a degraded and lately enslaved race. [Here the hammer fell.] I wanted to say a few more words upon this subject. [Cries of "Go on."]

Mr. FINLEY. I hope the gentleman's time will be extended.

Mr. OSMER obtained the floor and yielded his time to Mr. CONGER.

Mr. CONGER. I wanted to express in connection with the passage of the West Point bill my own indignation, and I believe the indig-

Mr. CONGER. I wanted to express in connection with the passage of the West Point bill my own indignation, and I believe the indignation of nine-tenths of the American people, not against individuals, not against officers at West Point, but against the spirit which prevails there and is permitted there to control so that they can thus ostracize the wards of the nation whom they are paid to educate. It is not for them to judge whom the nation shall send to that academy. Their place is to teach and to educate those whom the sovereign nation sends there, whoever they may be.

There is no place in all this Union where that intolerant spirit of caste has been more manifest as exercised apparently against a race or a man of a particular race or condition than in that institution. Even the venerable old man who used to grace a seat in this House, or a man of a particular race or condition than in that institution. Even the venerable old man who used to grace a seat in this House, Mr. Martin I. Townsend, district attorney in the State of New York, when sent to West Point by our Administration, which saw the people demanded some recognition of the rights of cadets—he too, by some officer in charge of that inquiry, was treated with the same contumely and the same scorn with which that institution by its officers and the brother cadets of this colored man had treated him.

Now, sir, I do not like the spirit manifested there. I have hoped that in the appointment of a man who has been just and true to the colored race as well as to the white race, a brave and gallent soldier.

that in the appointment of a man who has been just and true to the colored race as well as to the white race, a brave and gallant soldier with a heart too grand to be governed by prejudice and caste, that institution may be redeemed so that it may become again the pride and glory of our country. Feeling so, I did not care to antagonize this bill. With the prospect of the appointment to be at the head of that institution of that gallant soldier whose every principle of life has been justice to all, I am willing to permit this to pass without speaking further, but I desired to enter my protest against the spirit which seems to have prevailed in that institution as to the equality of rights of the cadets there educated. [Here the hammer fell.] I withdraw of the cadets there educated. [Here the hammer fell.] I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read the following paragraph:

For continuing addition to cadet barracks, $25,000.

Mr. PHILIPS. With reference to the paragraph just read, which is the last item in the bill, I desire to submit that in my judgment the appropriation asked for is unnecessary. It would have been well and I should have been pleased if the Appropriations Committee could have deferred this until the Board of Visitors to West Point for the last year could have made their report to Congress, which is now in process of preparation and will be ready to submit next

With the completion of the new hospital for which an appropria-With the completion of the new hospital for which an appropriation is made in the preceding paragraph, in the judgment of the Board of Visitors, a continuation of an appropriation for the wing to the cadet barracks will be quite unnecessary. As is shown by the letter which I have here from the post commandant, General Schofield, there are quite a number of officers quartered in the cadet barracks. The completion of the new hospital will of course vacate the present building occupied as a hospital. The vacation of the old hospital will surrender to the use of quarters for these officers now quartered in the cadet barracks.

in the cadet barracks.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him how many officers there are in the cadet barracks?

Mr. PHILIPS. There are twenty-one. And the conclusion arrived at by the Board of Visitors is that the vacation of the old hospital And the conclusion arrived win afford sufficient accommodation for the officers quartered in the cadet barracks and give as a matter of course increased accommodation in the barracks for cadets.

The number of cadets assigned to each room of the present barracks The number of cadets assigned to each room of the present barracks does not exceed two; and, as is usually the case, the officers have taken for themselves the best quarters, the best ventilated and the most commodions rooms, so that their vacation by the officers will afford ample accommodation, in our judgment, for the increase of cadets in the institution.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. What amendment do you offer?

Mr. PHILIPS. The amendment I propose is to strike out lines 192 and 193, making an appropriation of $25,000 for additional cadet barracks. A sufficient appropriation ought to be made now to complete racks. A sufficient appropriation ought to be made now to complete the new hospital, which every interest of economy requires should be completed, and if urged to immediate completion the old hospital building can be set apart for officers' quarters. I send to the Clerk's desk, to be read for information in this connection, a letter received from General Schofield in response to one addressed to him by the Board of Visitors.

The Clerk read as follows:

Headquarters Department of West Point, United States Military Academy, West Point, N. Y., June 7, 1880.

UNITED STATES MILITARY ACADEMY,
West Point, N. Y., June 7, 1880.

Sir: In response to your letter of the 5th instant, I have the honor to inform your committee as follows:
First. The number of cadets at present quartered in the barracks is 244.
Second. Number of living-fooms in barracks, 154. Of these 127 are used by cadets; 21 used by officers; 2 used by cadet dentist; 2 as cadet company armories, and 2 as cadet light prison; in addition to which are 15 rooms not available for living-rooms, used as follows: 4 for trunk rooms, 2 for armories, and 9 as part of officers' quarters, being dark. Total, 189 rooms.

Third. Rooms having two occupants, 118; having one occupant, 8; unoccupied, 1. Fourth. Twenty-one rooms in barracks are occupied by fourteen officers, six of whom have living rooms in the angle and sleeping rooms in cadet divisions.

Fifth. Probable increase of the number of cadets at beginning of the next academic year 68 over number present at the academy, making a total of 312, so that if the corps is filled to that number 58 rooms would have to be occupied by three cadets, showing a necessity for 29 additional rooms for cadets and 3 for officers.

Sixth. Average dimensions of barrack rooms: length 22 feet; width 12 feet; height 10½ feet.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant.

Major-General United States Army, Superintendent Military Academy.

Hon. John F. Philips, Committee of Board of Visitors, West Point, N. Y.

Committee of Board of Visitors, West Point, N. Y.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will move to strike out the last word, and yield to my friend from Missouri [Mr. Philips] if he desires to say anything further. This is a matter in which I feel some interest, and I desire to hear all that he has to say upon it.

Mr. PHILIPS. It will be observed, from the letter which has just been read, that there are now twenty-one rooms in the cadet barracks building occupied by fourteen officers. Those twenty-one rooms would accommodate well forty-two cadets. With that addition to the number of rooms now occupied by the cadets it is our opinion there will be sufficient accommodation for all the cadets for the next fiscal year. In my opinion, formed after personal inspection made during the past summer, there is no public necessity for this additional appropriation of $25,000 for the extension of the wings of the cadet barracks. of the cadet barracks.

of the cadet barracks.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman is just from West Point as one of the Board of Visitors. The sum of $25,000 was appropriated for the present fiscal year for the extension of the cadet barracks and the work has already been commenced. What does the gentleman propose to do with that?

Mr. PHILIPS. There has been an extension of the wings of the barracks which can be abandoned where it is. As I understand from the information gathered there, the appropriation here proposed is not so much to complete buildings now in process of construction as it is to add to the building.

Mr. BLOUNT. So I understand, and that is in pursuance of a plan adopted many years ago, and for which we appropriated last year $25,000. This apprepriation is in continuation of the work on that wing.

Mr. PHILIPS. As I understand it the $25,000 already appropriated will be sufficient to complete the internal arrangement of the rooms in the building already erected.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think my friend is mistaken, according to the information which has come to the Committee on Appropriations.

The estimate of the Department is for a sum much larger than we propose to appropriate in this bill. We appropriated $25,000 for the current fiscal year to begin the work. No information has come to us that the building is completed, but an estimate was made for a larger sum than we here appropriate. We have agreed to give a part this year, with the intention of going on from year to year until the building is completed.

Mr. FORNEY. The Secretary of War asks for $56,000 for this purpose, and the committee agree to give $25,000, deeming that amount sufficient for the coming fiscal year. I will read what the Board of Visitors say upon this subject, the board appointed by the President; a different one I suppose from the board to which the gentleman be-

The board have examined the new hospital, and find from the report of the engineer officer in charge that a further appropriation by Congress of $21,617.64 will be required to complete the building.

We appropriated $10,000 last year, and we now appropriate the balance, being the amount the Secretary of War asks to be appropriated. The board proceed to say in regard to this hospital building, "it has been erected in the most substantial manner." In regard to the cadet quarters, the board reports:

On inspection of the cadet quarters, the board find that they are inadequate to their proper accommodation, many of the rooms at present being occupied by three cadets, which overcrowds them and is likely to interfere with health and a proper attention to their studies.

Plans have been drawn and estimates made for extending the west wing of the barracks, so as to add thirty-two rooms, and your hoard recommend that Congress be asked to appropriate the necessary sum for this purpose.

The necessary sum for this purpose we are told is $56,000. By reference to page 147 of the Book of Estimates, gentlemen will find the following items.

For completion of main building and one wing for the new hospital for cadets, $11,617.84.

For continuing addition to cadet barracks, $56,190.54.

The Committee on Appropriations thought that $25,000 would be sufficient for the coming fiscal year. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Philips] has been one of the Board of Visitors sent there by this House, and he knows more about the matter than I do. I have given all the information which we have.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I would like to have the attention of members of the committee for a moment. I only want to say that in 1876 the first estimate was made for the extension of the cadet building, the amount estimated being $$1,190.54. Last year we appropriated $25,000 for that purpose to be expended during the current fiscal year, and we recommend in this bill the appropriation of $25,000 additional for the coming fiscal year.

If the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Philips] shall prevail, of course we will practically throw away the $25,000 appropriated last year, and which will be expended during the current fiscal year. It is true that he has had read a letter from General Schofield, of year. It is true that he has had read a letter from General Schooled, or which we now hear for the first time, showing that upon the completion of a certain building a number of rooms will be released for the use of the cadets, barely enough, even upon his own showing, to accommodate the number of cadets that are entitled to go there, should the institution be filled.

I think it is much wiser to go on and complete these buildings, es pecially as they have been estimated for, as we have entered upon the work, and as the Board of Visitors report them to be necessary.

I would suggest to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. Philips,] that perhaps it is unfortunate, if any considerable number of the Board of Visitors hold the views that he does, that they did not submit them of visitors not the views that we want to the form of a report.

Mr. BLOUNT. A minority report.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. A minority report, so that we could have had the advantage of their views officially given. I feel quite clear that it is wise to reject the amendment of the gentleman and to continue the work upon this building.

that it is wise to reject the amendment of the gentleman and to continue the work upon this building.

Mr. WARNER. I think when the Board of Visitors and the commanding officer at West Point concur in telling us that this appropriation is not necessary we should be guided by that opinion, at least so far as to agree to strike out this appropriation without any thing further being said.

Mr. HUBBELL. The report of the Board of Visitors is the other way.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] allow me to say that this is the only report [holding up a pamphlet] which the Board of Visitors has made?

Mr. WARNER. I refer to the forthcoming report.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I know nothing about that.

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Philips] is a member of the board; and I think the recommendation of this board with the he specificant to determine up to strike such this item.

ought to be sufficient to determine us to strike out this item. I will ask my friend from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY] how many cadets are now accommodated at the institution?

Mr. FORNEY. Two hundred and seventy. The full number authorized by law is three hundred and twelve; and there will be an increase if we should increase the number of members of this House

Mr. WARNER. This appropriation bill shows that it costs some

Mr. WARNER. This appropriation bill shows that it costs somewhere about $1,200 per annum to educate a cadet at West Point, which is a very large sum, I think. Whenever there is a reasonable opportunity to cut down the appropriation, I believe it ought to be done.

Mr. PHILIPS. Mr. Chairman, in explanation of the apparent delay in the presentation of the report of the Board of Visitors, I will state that hitherto, as it appears, the Board of Visitors appointed on the part of the House and the Senate have made no report to Congress at all, although the statute requires a report; and under the impression that the members of the board appointed by the Speaker gress at all, although the statute requires a report; and under the impression that the members of the board appointed by the Speaker of the House should make its own report to the House, I had, at the instance of the Board of Visitors on the part of the House, written out a report, which has been ready for a week past; but upon the suggestion of Senator Edmunds, a member of the board on behalf of the Senate, we concluded that the report must be a joint report of both branches of the board to Congress. We have had a conference this morning; and the report will be ready by Tuesday next. The report of the Committee on Appropriations has simply anticipated the report of the Beard of Visitors. The statute requires that we shall make our report within twenty days. That time not having expired, we were not impressed with the necessity of haste in respect to it. to it.

Mr. FORNEY. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the

Mr. FORMEY. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the Board of Visitors on the part of the Senate and House are opposed to the completion of this building?

Mr. PHILIPS. From what I understand in respect to this matter the concurrent report of the two branches of the visiting board from Congress will agree in the suggestion that the completion of the new hospital will allow the rooms of the old hospital to be used for the accommodation of officers now quartered in the barracks. As is shown by the letter of General Schofield, there are twenty-one officers quartered in the barracks, occupying fourteen rooms; and there are about one hundred and eighteen rooms of the barracks, in each of which not more than two cadets are quartered, and in some only one. The letter, as will be observed, does not disclose the fact asserted in the report of the executive branch of the Board of Visitors, that there are three cadets quartered in some of the rooms. The conclusion is apparent that with the vacation of twenty or twenty-one rooms by officers now quartered in the cadet barracks, (those being choice rooms,) there will be ample accommodation for the cadets.

There were two hundred and forty-four cadets there on the 1st of June last. In the first class there are fifty-three members who will shortly go out, while the number of new cadets who will be admitted will be probably about sixty-eight, making in the aggregate not over two hundred and sixty-eight cadets in the institution for the ensuing year. If two cadets were put in each room there would be ample accommodations for them in the barracks. The letter of the post commander indicates that there is waste room now used for storage and other purposes.

Speaking for myself and in behalf of the Board of Visitors, I will say that we have no disposition whatever to stint in the smallest degree the accommodations in that institution, but we conceive that no appropriation ought to be made beyond the necessities of the pub-

Mr. ATHERTON. I would like to inquire of the gentleman having this bill in charge the full number of cadets the country is entitled to have in this institution?

Mr. FORNEY. Three hundred and twelve; and if we increase the number of Representatives next year there will be a corresponding increase in the number of cadets.

Mr. ATHERTON. I was just going to make that suggestion. It seems to me we might well calculate generally upon having at the institution the full quota of cadets to which the country is entitled; and certainly the number is likely to increase in the future rather than diminish. Naturally there will continue to be the same number of cadets entitled to places at West Point as there are members of Congress; and probably there will be the same number of cadets at large. As the membership of this House is likely to be increased, I think it quite probable there will be an increase in the number of cadets authorized to attend that institution.

But, in any event, it seems that we have already appropriated for this building $25,000. It seems to be conceded that $56,000 more will complete the building; and I suppose the $25,000 already appropriated would be substantially lost unless this additional appropriation

It would seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that the Board of Visitors appointed by the President of the United States gives the better reason, and hence their report is more entitled to our consideration than that of the other board.

A MEMBER. Composed of our own members.

Mr. ATHERTON. Yes, sir. I do not care where the report comes from. We have the right to consider which gives the better reason; and the probability of increase in the number of cadets, together with the fact that the $25,000 already appropriated would be substantially lost unless the building be completed, would seem to me to indicate that the statement made by the Board of Visitors appointed by the President is more entitled to our consideration than that of the heard appointed on the part of Congress. Not that I propose to the board appointed on the part of Congress. Not that I propose to say that these gentlemen, having been upon the ground, are not entitled to due consideration at our hands for anything they may recommend; but we have a right to look at the reasons upon the one side and the other as furnished by these two boards; and to my mind (speaking for myself) it seems that the committee appointed by the President gives the better reason for our action, and that we should follow its precommendation. follow its recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his formal amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There has been no formal amendment offered.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then I move to strike out the last word. And I regret, Mr. Chairman, very much to differ from my friend from Missouri, for whose opinion I have a great respect. The reason, however, souri, for whose opinion I have a great respect. The reason, however, he gives for the action he proposes is not to my mind a satisfactory one. He attempts to sustain the position he occupies by reading a letter from General Schofield, wherein it is stated there are only twenty-one rooms used by officers, the remaining available rooms being used as sleeping-rooms by the cadets. General Schofield states that if the corps of cadets should be filled up to three hundred and twelve, fifty-eight rooms would have to be occupied by three cadets each. That being true, if the twenty-one rooms now in use by officers should be vacated by them, there would still be required sixteen rooms putting two boys in each room. rooms, putting two boys in each room.

It is not correct, as my friend seems to think, therefore, that the rooms occupied for other purposes than by officers and cadets can be used as sleeping-rooms. The contrary is stated in the letter of Gen-rooms occupied for other purposes than by omcers and cadets can be used as sleeping-rooms. The contrary is stated in the letter of General Schofield.

There is possibility, too, of an increase of the corps of cadets under the new apportionment. That is an additional reason why we should continue to carry out what Congress has already begun; that is, the adding on to this building of this new wing.

As I stated a while ago, the plan was made many years since for this barracks, and in that plan the erection of wings was contem-plated. The Board of Visitors, members of Congress and those appointed by the President two years ago, recommended this additional wing should be provided, taking in view not only the fact that the cadets were already crowded, but the probability of an increase in cadets were already crowded, but the probability of an increase in the corps of cadets.

I happened to be of that number. We felt the importance of the matter, and the Committee on Appropriations accepted it unanimously, agreeing it was time the erection of this additional wing should be commenced. The whole appropriation asked for was not given, but the committee agreed to the sum of $25,000, to be used during this fiscal year for the purpose of proceeding with the construction of that wing. That they have done so I cannot tell, but the presumption is they have made contracts with a view to the completion of the work. It does seem to me, that being true, it is best for us to let this sum of money stay in here and allow the wing to be completed, for it is certain it will be demanded in the future; that as the work has been begun we might as well go on with it now until the work has been begun we might as well go on with it now until it is completed.

Mr. PHILIPS. I wish to ask a question for information. On that point I may be misinformed; but do I understand the gentleman to say that the $25,000 heretofore appropriated has been expended and the work begun under that appropriation is incomplete? In other words, is the building begun under that appropriation of $25,000 in process of construction?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do.

Mr. PHILIPS. And the $25,000 here asked for is to complete that building which has already been begun?

Mr. BLOUNT. It is an additional sum. What amount it will take to complete the wing I do not know. In the estimates $56,000 is asked for. Whether that will complete it or not we cannot tell. It is an additional sum amount which they think they can use for the fiscal year.

perhaps an amount which they think they can use for the fiscal year, for which provision is being made.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. The original estimate is $81,000.

Mr. PHILIPS. My objection to this is predicated upon the impression made upon the Board of Visitors on the part of the House, from our inspection and observation, that this appropriation is to begin an addition and not to complete a building already in process of contents.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. BLOUNT. I cannot, of course, tell anything about the correctness of my friend's scource of information; but I know, as a matter of fact, that $25,000 was appropriated at the last session of Congress, the bill then being in charge of the gentleman who now has it, for the purpose of beginning the erection of this wing. What has been done by the architect I do not know. This is an additional sum to be united with the former one for the purpose of making this extension.

Mr. PHILIPS. There was no material on the ground observable to us; and we saw no exterior wall there which was incomplete.

Mr. BLOUNT. I presume that is a true statement; but it is to be presumed that contracts have been made for building material which of course could not have been upon the ground when my friend was

Mr. PHILIPS. Of course, Mr. Chairman, if the appropriation already made has begun the erection of the building I, for one, believe it is proper to go on and complete it. If this appropriation, however, is designed for the erection of a new structure, that is, for the extension of a new wing, I still adhere to my original objection to it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have examined the statute and am sure I am correct in my statement.

Mr. PHILIPS. I understand the gentleman to state his statement

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Allow me a word.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. BLOUNT. I withdraw my informal amendment to the amendment, so the gentleman from Illinois may be heard.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I renew the pro forma amendment in order to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question. I wish to ask him when he was at West Point? Was it not in June last?

Mr. PHILIPS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. This appropriation was not available until the 1st day of July, and probably that is the reason the gentleman did not see any appearance of proceeding with the construction of the building. Mr. PHILIPS.

That is possibly the reason.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I have no doubt that they have commenced work since he was there.

Mr. FORNEY. I desire to state, in response to the inquiry of the gentleman from Missouri, that the appropriation asked for in the Book of Estimates is "for continuing addition to cadet barracks." I presume that the work has been commenced before this time.

Mr. PHILIPS. In view, Mr. Chairman, of the assurance of the gentleman from Georgia that the $25,000 heretofore appropriated has been expended, and in view of the fact that I am well satisfied if the work is commenced it should be prosecuted, I now withdraw the amendment which I offered.

Mr. FORNEY. I move that the committee rise and report the bill

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Reagan reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 6614) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes; and had directed him to report the same to the House without amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. No. 133) to establish an educational fund and apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to public education, and to provide for the more complete endowment and support of colleges for the advancement of scientific and industrial education.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FORNEY. I demand the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the final passage of the bill, on which the rule requires that the yeas and nays shall be

Mr. CALKINS. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the call of the roll on the passage of this bill be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the rule requires the yeas and nays to be called, and that this rule had better be adhered to, as it is nays to be called, and that this rule had better be adhered to, as it is a wholesome practice.

Mr. CALKINS. I simply desire to make the request in this case with a view to get a ruling from the Chair as to whether or not the rule absolutely requires it unless demanded by some member.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks from the language of the rule that the yeas and nays are required to be called absolutely. This was one of the reforms incorporated in the new rules on their revission by the committee and adopted by the House in order that when the responsibility of appropriating large sums of money should be upon the House it should only be done by a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. CALKINS. I supposed that it was the purpose of the Committee on Rules not to enforce this rule except on the suggestion of some member where unanimous consent was not given.

some member where unanimous consent was not given.

The SPEAKER. If the rules are to be vacated in that way the Chair thinks it might run into an abuse. Of course unanimous consent will vacate the rules; but the Chair thinks that this practice had better be adhered to.

Mr. WARNER. I object to dispensing with the roll-call on the passage of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The sixth clause of Rule XXI is as follows:

Upon all general appropriation and revenue bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors, the yeas and nays shall be taken on the passage of such bills in the House and entered upon the Journal.

It is true that by unanimous consent the rule can be vacated; but the language of this rule was made intentionally strong in order that the practice might become established. It will be observed that the language of the rule is imperative.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] objects to the vacation of the rule.

Mr. BUCKNER Lacing to solve it is the second of the second of the rule.

Mr. BUCKNER. I desire to ask if it cannot be suspended by a two-thirds vote?

The SPEAKER. It could be suspended on Monday by a two-thirds The SIERRER. It could be suspended on Monday by a two-thirds vote, but it is not now in order to move a suspension of the rules. The Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 175, nays 4, not voting 112; as follows:

Mr. WEAVER. I send to the desk a resolution which I ask to have read; and I will ask unanimous consent to have it placed on its passage.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 6613) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, and moved that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. Mr. ROBINSON and Mr. KEIFER reserved all points of order. The motion of Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, was agreed to.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill; and pending that motion I move that all general debate on this subject be limited to one hour.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. Hill in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. No. 6613) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I move that the first and formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. CONGER. If that cuts off general debate, I object.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I propose after a little to make a motion to limit general debate, and I will try to accommodate the gentleman from Michigan.

There being no objection, the first reading of the bill was dispensed

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I now move that the Committee rise, that I may make a motion in the House to limit general debate upon this bill.

Mr. BURROWS. I am afraid the gentleman will find as much difficulty in limiting general debate at this point, the bill not having yet been considered, as he found in endeavoring to limit debate before the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. There has been no debate upon the bill. The motion that the committee rise that the House may make an order to limit debate is not now in order.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I wish it understood by the House that I shall occupy but little time in what I have to say. If I can have the attention of members, I think it will expedite the consideration of this bill.

sideration of this bill.

In framing this bill, Mr. Chairman, the committee have had in view two important points. One is the protection and extension of our commerce with foreign countries, and the other practical economy in the appropriation of the public money.

So far as our diplomatic intercourse is concerned your committee have not thought it necessary to add one dollar to the appropriations of last year. Indeed, it is the opinion of that committee, as expressed in the bills heretofore reported to this House, and I may say of this House, too, as expressed in the votes given, that more money has been expended in this direction than was either necessary or profitable. But the Senate has on every occasion, when a reduction was attempted But the Senate has on every occasion, when a reduction was attempted by this House in that part of our foreign intercourse, obstructed the passage of such legislation, urging as a reason therefor that it was new legislation upon an appropriation bill, and that so long as the statutes regulating the number and compensation of our ministers abroad stood unrepealed, this House had no power in an appropria-tion bill to restrict the number or pay of said ministers. The House has therefore been compelled on several occasions to recede from its position. Your committee have for this reason deemed it inexpedient to again attempt to force the opinions of this House upon the Senate, and have therefore made up this bill in exact accordance with the act providing for the present fiscal year, neither adding to nor subtracting from the appropriation of said act.

From this course, however, it is not to be inferred that a change of opinion on the part of individual members of said committee has taken face; but they await the pleasure of the Committee on Foreign Relaplace; but hey await the pleasure of the Committee on Foreign Relations touching this subject. It is believed by many who have examined the subject closely that our present diplomatic system is next to useless, and is kept up in its present form as affording an asylum for disappointed and superanuated politicians. This may be charity to these retired gentlemen, but it is hardly just to those who foot the bills. Could this cumbrous system be reduced to half its present dimensions and the money now spent in maintaining it be expended in research and constructions are the the construction. in promoting our consular service, much good would accrue to the commerce of the country from such a change.

So far as our consular system is concerned, we have pursued a different line of policy. We have adopted and reported to this House a number of changes which have been proposed by the Secretary of State and which we think will advance the interest of the country. If I can have the attention of this committee for a few moments I will give more in detail the changes which we propose to make in

Mr. KEIFER. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the committee has reported a bill upon the plan heretofore proposed by them, to cut down some of the salaries

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. No, exactly the reverse; the gentleman misunderstands me.

tleman misunderstands me.

Mr. KEIFER. That is my fault; I desire to understand the gentleman correctly. I am, then, to understand that this bill does not in any respect undertake to cut down the salaries fixed by law?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. It does not.

Mr. KEIFER. In no case at all?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. In no case at all.

First, as to the consular service there, it is recommended by your committee that the salary of the consul-general at Halifax be increased from $2,000 to $3,000.

The officer at Halifax was raised to the grade of a consulate-general by the appointment of M. M. Jackson (who had been consul there are framed was raised to the grade of a constitue-general by the appointment of M. M. Jackson (who had been consulthere since 1851) on the 11th of June, 1880. The jurisdiction of the consul-general embraces all the consulates and subordinate agencies—in all, thirty-eight offices—in the eastern maritime provinces of the in all, thirty-eight offices—in the eastern maritime provinces of the Dominion of Canada, including Newfoundland. The duties imposed by the appointment in the supervision of the subordinate consular offices place the office at Halifax in the same relation to them as that held by the consul-general at Montreal toward the subordinate offices in the other provinces of the Dominion. These duties, in addition to this extended supervision, also embrace the adjustment of all difficulties and disputes arising with the local authorities in connection with the fishing fleet, prior to their reference to the Department.

The recommendation is intended to place the office at Halifax more nearly on the same footing as the consulate-general at Montreal. To this end, also, an allowance should be made of $800 (which your committee recommends) for clerk-hire, no allowance for that object being now authorized by Congress

Second. That the consulate at Apia, Samoan Islands, should be placed in class 4, with a salary of $2,000 instead of $1,000.

The political and commercial considerations for this recommendation were submitted to the members of the sub-committee by the Section were submitted to the members of the sub-committee by the Secretary of State, which members can read, and which are briefly these, to wit: that these islands are now jointly protected by the English, German, and American Governments; that the point is one at which the vessels of all nations call on their way to and from San Francisco to Australia and New Zealand; that it is in a direct line between the two points; that it is a most important coaling station; that our consul there exercises judicial functions as well as consular and diplomatic; that the English and German governments are straining every point to secure ascendency in these islands; that a suitable person cannot be had for the position at a salary of $1,000, and hence the proposed change. proposed change.

To these may be added the importance of extending the jurisdiction To these may be added the importance of extending the jurisdiction of that consulate so as to embrace neighboring groups of islands and those more remote, and to be able by larger compensation to obtain a suitable person for the office. Great Britain recognizes the importance of the place by appointing a consul with £1,000 salary, with other allowances, and it is reported that the salary of the German consul is large. It is also to be remarked, as stated above, that the consul for the Samoan Islands is a judicial officer; and it may fairly be questioned whether a proper person to determine the rights fairly be questioned whether a proper person to determine the rights of property and persons there can be had for the salary of $1,000.

Third. That the consulates at Dundee and Nottingham should be Thru. That the constitutes at Dundee and Nottingham should be placed in class 4, with a salary of $2,500.

The present salary of the consul at Dundee is $2,000. The average fees for the last five years have been $6,440 a year. The fees at Nottingham for the same years have been $6,588 a year. It will be observed that these amounts of fees equal those at consulates in Great Britain whose salaries are $2,500. Both offices return a rever-

Great Britain whose salaries are $2,500. Both offices return a revenue to the Treasury.

Fourth. That the consulates at Crefeld, Maracaibo, and Sidney, New South Wales, should be placed in class 5, with a salary of $2,000. These offices are now compensated by fees. They have no salaries. Apart from the growing importance of these ports it will be observed that, on comparison with other $2,000 consulates, the fees collected justify the salary asked for. As it is now, the Treasury receives very little from Crefeld, whereas on a salary of $2,000 about $1,200 would be turned into the Treasury. The same is true, in substance, of Mar-be turned into the Treasury. The same is true, in substance, of Maracaibo. At Sidney the fees turned into the Treasury would cover the action. At stilley me less tailed the table the salary and contingent expenses but leave no revenue. It is unquestionable that better service is obtained from salaried officers than from those who have only fees as their compensation. The fees at these places for the year 1879 were as follows: Crefeld, $5,802; Maracaibo, $3,466; Sidney, $2,531.

Fifth. That the following consulates should be placed in class 6, with a salary of $1,500, namely: Aix-la-Chapelle, Guayaquil, Guada-loupe, Manila, Ottawa, Para, Puerto Cabello, and Southampton.

Of the foregoing the following are feed consulates, namely: Aix-la-Chapelle, Guadaloupe, Manila, and Ottawa. The remaining ones have a salary of $1,000. The fees at these posts for the last year were as follows: Aix-la-Chapelle, $1,562; Guadaloupe, $1,707; Manila, $1,398; Ottawa, $2,991; Puerto Cabello, $1,225.

During the year 1880 the trade returns from Aix-la-Chapelle show an increase of nearly twice that of the preceding year, and that the an increase of nearly twice that of the preceding year, and that the business is equal to that at Cologne, the consul at which post has a salary of $2,000. The expense to the Government will not be increased, except at Manila and Puerto Cabello, at any of these feed consulates by the proposed salary; and at Ottawa a gain of nearly $1,000 will be made to the Treasury.

At the remaining posts, namely, Guayaquil, (Ecuador,) Para, (Brazil,) and Southampton, the propriety of a becoming salary is based (as to the two former places) on the needs of the enlarging trade with South America, and upon the fact that a decent man cannot be had who can live on the salary of $1,000 as the representative of the United States. Southampton is important as the resort of destitute seamen and as the point of departure of steamers for the East. The office is used by the Department of State for the dispatch of its matter. There is at present no allowance for rent of office or clerk-hire, ter. There is at present no allowance for rent of office or clerk-hire, and, when the duties now charged upon the consul there are considered, the salary of $1,000 is inadequate.

Sixth. That the consulate at Mozambique, on the east coast of Africa, Sixth. That the consulate at Mozambique, on the east coast of Africa, should be revived on a salary of $1,500.

There is now a strong effort making in that quarter by several American business firms to establish their trading houses in that colony, (Portuguese,) and they have urgently represented to the Department the need of consular protection. Admiral Schufeldt, who recently visited that coast, also urges the establishment of a consulate there. If a salary of $1,500 should be regarded as too high, a salary of $1,000 might be appropriated. This would allow the incumbent to engage in business.

of $1,000 might be appropriated. This would allow the incumbent to engage in business.

Seventh. That the consulate at the following places should be transferred to class 7, with a salary of $1,000, namely: Algiers, Bombay, Nuevo Laredo, Piedras Negras, Sierra Leone, and Turk Islands.

The consulate at Algiers now has a wide jurisdiction on the northern coast of Africa, and is located at the capital of the colony. The fees are inconsiderable, while the office is of acknowledged usefulness both to the large number of Americans visiting Algeria and to the enlargement of trade on the coast, as to which very strong efforts are now making. The consulate is regarded as a very necessary one and of growing importance.

The consulate at Bombay exercises jurisdiction over the whole of Western India, and is the port of import, in a very large measure, for

The consulate at Bombay exercises jurisdiction over the whole of Western India, and is the port of import, in a very large measure, for American goods into that country. His fees amount to more than the salary asked for, and the port is an important one.

The offices at Nueva Laredo and Piedras Negras (both on the Mexican border) are feed offices. It is urgently represented by the Treasury Department that competent men should be placed there in order to prevent smuggling. They also have some political importance from the condition of affairs on the border. Outside of Matamoras (which have a salary of $2 000) they are the most important posts on the Bio has a salary of $2,000) they are the most important posts on the Rio

The office at Turk's Island has largely to deal with shipwrecked seamen and damaged vessels, and demands the presence of a consular officer of experience and good judgment. It is for these reasons especially that the office is found necessary. There are more wrecked and stranded American vessels in that quarter (about the Bahama Islands) than in any one other quarter in the world. The consulthere is of acknowledged usefulness to underwriters, and should be a manuscript of edgests compared to worthy of adequate compensation worthy of adequate compensation.

This embraces the changes which have been proposed by the committee. As stated above, they are mostly the suggestions of the Secretary of State. We believe them to be important to the extension and protection of our commerce.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman state how many salaries have been reduced, and the total of the reduction?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. The gentleman will find that statement at the end of the bill, if he will refer to it. While it will be found that we propose changes in the compensation of our consuls.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. The gentleman will find that statement at the end of the bill, if he will refer to it. While it will be found that we propose changes in the compensation of our consuls and consular agents, yet, when we come to foot up the amounts in the bill, the changes will be found to result to our advantage.

It is true that we save nothing from the bill of last year by this bill (nor did we deem it proper to do so) so far as the consular system itself is concerned. It will be remembered, however, that last year we raised a commission which proceeded to China and which has negotiated a treaty said to be of great importance to us. For the expense of that commission we appropriated about $37,000. That service is not appropriated for in this bill, as a matter of course, it being an appropriation for a temporary purpose. In this way we get a credit of $37,000 in making up this bill, and the changes proposed do not cover that amount by $16,016.78.

Mr. WARNER. Were all the increases which are contained in this bill recommended by the Secretary of State?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Every one of them, and some others in which we did not concur. It will be found, therefore, when the items come to be footed up, that this bill saves to the Government from the amount of last year, mostly on account of the Chinese commission, as just stated, the sum of $16,016.78.

Mr. AINSLIE. Has there been any estimates submitted to the committee of the expenses of the Chinese commission?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Not yet. I suppose the commis-

Mr. AINSLIE. Has there been any estimates submitted to the committee of the expenses of the Chinese commission?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Not yet. I suppose the commission has not filed its final report; at least no statement on the subject has been submitted to the Committee on Appropriations.

There are one or two other points I might mention. Last year we appropriated for the contingent expenses of our diplomatic service the sum of $80,000. We were asked to appropriate this year the sum of $85,000. By turning to the report of the Register it will be found that the amount expended at the close of the last fiscal year, of $80,000 appropriated, was $73,054.82, leaving a balance of $6,945.18. That balance doubtless will be absorbed by outstanding accounts which have not yet been settled, and your committee therefore could see no necessity for giving $5,000 additional to the amount appropriated last year.

Again, it was asked that we appropriate for the contingent expenses of our consular service $140,000. We appropriated last year for that service $125,000. It was ascertained by the committee, from the settlements which have taken place, that about $137,000 have been expended in the settlement of the accounts of the last fiscal year and pended in the settlement of the accounts of the last fiscal year and of the preceding year, an amount in excess of the sum appropriated; but this could not well be avoided, as all accounts are never in at the end of the year. Therefore, in order that there shall be no deficiency in that portion of our service for the next fiscal year, we propose to appropriate $135,000, which we believe to be sufficient, instead of $125,000, the amount appropriated last year.

I believe I have now stated pretty much all the points of difference.

I believe I have now stated pretty much all the points of difference. We have favored our consular system because we believe that the interests of commerce demand it. We did this the more readily because we ascertained, by turning to the report of the Fifth Auditor for the fiscal year before the last, that there was paid into the Treasury of fees over and above the expenses of the consular system the sum of $131,396.52. For the last fiscal year the showing is that the amount so paid in was $249,307.31; making a difference in favor of the last fiscal year of $117,900.89.

I do not know but that the sub-committee to whom this bill was referred would have been in favor of extending sympathy and protection to this consular system further than we did, but we were apprehensive that we would meet with objections either from the full committee or the House which we could not overcome. We have therefore thought proper to follow the recommendations of the Secretary in every instance where we felt ourselves at liberty to do so. It is time, Mr. Chairman, that we should begin to remove from commerce the shackles which have been put upon it.

One of the most serious drawbacks to our foreign commerce is the restrictions which are put upon the purchase of vessels for our carrying trade. As the law now exists, a man cannot go to any country outside of his own and buy a vessel and get an American register for it. He is compelled to buy from the New England ship-builders, or those who are engaged in that business in our own country. This has proved to be very detrimental to our commerce.

Whereas in 1861 we carried in vessels owned by Americans about 74 per cent of all the goods transported to and from this country, we now carry but 21 per cent. American bottoms are pretty nearly driven out of the carrying trade. Whereas at or about the same period we received a very large proportion of the money arising from the transportation of passengers, we now receive but about 6 per cent. of the same, the balance, as shown by the reports, going to the owners of foreign vessels. 74 per cent. of all the goods transported to and from this country, we

Mr. HUBBELL. I hope the gentleman does not intend to create the impression in this House that we have by our legislation lost the the impression in this House that we have by our legislation lost the commerce or carrying trade which we had formerly.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. That is my belief.

Mr. HUBBELL. The gentleman ought to know perfectly well that at the time of the breaking out of the rebellion we had a very large carrying trade, and that we lost it by the war of the rebellion. It is only surprising that we have regained so much of it as we have already. already is only surprising that we have regained so much of it as we have already.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. That may be true in part; but the time has come when these restrictions which now shackle our commerce should be taken off. I can see no reason why a party who wishes to engage in the carrying trade should be compelled to go to New England ship-builders and buy from them; I can see no valid reason why he should be prohibited from buying wherever it suits him. But if he buys in any other quarter he cannot get an American register, and his vessel going upon the high seas is liable to be treated as piratical. I repeat that this is one of the shackles which should be taken off. I think the people demand this at our hands; and we should enter upon that policy now.

I deem it unnecessary, Mr. Chairman, to say more upon this subject. Perhaps I have said too much already. I shall await any objections which may be made to the bill when we come to consider it under the five-minute rule. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. MONROE,] my colleague on the committee.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman from Ohio proposes to yield until I can make some remarks. He may wish to reply to them.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Very well.

Mr. MONROE. Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen having charge of this bill, as I understand, yielded the floor to me; but the gentleman on my right [Mr. CONGER] would like, I believe, for some reasons, to speak next; and as it is not important to me, I yield the place; but in doing so I do not wish, of course, to be understood as yielding my opportunity of making a few remarks on the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chairman, the appropriate place for peculiar Michigan.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Chairman, the appropriate place for peculiar diplomatic and political remarks comes, I admit, on a diplomatic appropriation bill. The discussion of ship-building and the carrying trade is thrown in here by way of an apology to this House for the policy of the democracy in cutting down, as far as possible, for six years the appropriations for our consular agencies, a policy which needs some apology. The intimation comes also in a side-thrust that it is necessary to destroy the vast ship-building interests of the United States—the production of ships of wood and iron and steel and com-States—the production of ships of wood and iron and steel and composite; and this is offered to make good the apology for cutting down the appropriations for consuls and consular agencies. The opening is a very fortunate one for me. I accept the gentleman's proposition; and I take note of his apology and his reasons for not increasing the number of consuls, their salaries, and their efficiency. If there is anything important to the manufacturers and producers of the United States to-day, as it has been for years past, more than all other things, it is that, in view of the exercise of their ingenuity and industry, the wooderful development of their invention as applied to the construcwonderful development of their invention as applied to the construcwonderrif development of their invention as applied to the construc-tion of all kinds of machinery in world-wide demand, but the market for which is confined almost exclusively to our own country, this great nation should have representatives abroad among the millions of people on the face of the earth who might use our products; who might make purchases of our commodities—representatives who shall see where American manufacturers and producers may find a market; who shall inform the Government at home, and through the Government the manufacturer and producer, of the condition and demands of trade in every region where these representatives are sent; who shall keep up an enlightened and vigorous communication between the markets of the world and the producers of our land.

It was my good fortune a few years ago, in conversation with the Secretary of State, at a time when constant attacks were made upon our consular system, to suggest to him, aided by several other gentlemen of this House, the propriety of preparing circulars instructing our consuls and commercial agents, wherever they might be among the nations of the earth, to search diligently the condition of the markets of the respective countries for American productions of all kinds, to report continuously, to send us information to be distributed through the press and be circulated through printed statements or in letters to manufacturers.

ments or in letters to manufacturers.

Sir, we were then a great, restless, laboring nation, producing more than we had a market for, manufacturing more than we could sell throughout the length and breadth of this land. That fact, with others, caused the stagnation in business, the prostration of the industrial interests of our land.

Those suggestions were carried out by the Secretary of State by the preparation of careful instructions sent to our consuls and commercial agents abroad, as well as to our ministers representing this country in other lands, requiring them to make frequent reports of each of the regions where they dwelt in reference to the probability or possibility of introducing the products of American industry, whether agricultural or manufacturing. The reports began to come in speedily. It was found that throughout the nations of the earth there were new markets for the product of American industry, and the particular kinds were mentioned in these reports to the State Department, and immediately thereupon the manufacturers and producers of these particular kinds or articles were communicated with by the State Department and were notified when and how these new markets for their industries might be made available. The particular kinds of machinery and agricultural implements, indeed products of all kinds were notified when a product of the particular kinds of machinery and agricultural implements, indeed products of all kinds, were pointed out and places designated where new markets for their sale could be found by our home producers.

The result has been, Mr. Chairman, to my own knowledge, that over one hundred and eighty thousand dollars' worth of wagons have been sent to the islands of the Pacific and Australia, finding a new market there, information of which came through the reports made by our consuls in those countries—a fifteen-hundred-dollar consul, a thousand-dollar consul, or a consul merely drawing fees, probably thousand-dollar consul, or a consul merely drawing fees, probably receiving nothing at all.

I learn there has been imported into Russia nearly two hundred thousand dollars' worth of agricultural implements to be used upon the great wheat and grain fields of Southern Russia, and that the first step toward that importation and the leading cause to that exportation from our land, the original cause of the new markets for this special industry, was the reports of the one poor consul in all Southern Russia to his government, which reports were sent to the manufacturers of the agricultural implements which he stated might find a market there. Reapers, mowers, binders, and threshers have find a market there. Reapers, mowers, binders, and threshers have been sent to Russia, according to the last report, to the extent of over $200,000, and the demand for them is still increasing.

over $200,000, and the demand for them is still increasing.

But what do we pay that consul? Two thousand dollars a year at Odessa. There is the great Russian Empire of eighty millions of people, our neighbors on the northwest, always desiring intercourse with us; and what do we pay in Russia for consular agents and consuls? We pay a consul-general at St. Petersburg for all of Northern Russia, for all the Russian Empire, $2,500. For that vast empire we have only one consul-general. What more do we do for that mighty nation of eighty millions of people, waiting for our productions, buying of us in the simple article of locomotive engines $7,000,000 already? What do we pay for our commercial knowledge and intercourse with that great nation, our friend, our neighbor? We have an additional consul in Russia. Thank God, we are not left in all Southern Russia without a representative. I find it here in this bill. Here is a consul at Odessa.

We pay him $2,000 a year. This is all for an empire of eighty millions of people, a friendly nation, just emerging from semi-barbarism, or at least a great portion of it, and just at this time demanding agricultural and other implements, if only to learn how to manufacture them, demanding the ten thousand valuable agricultural implements made in this land.

To encourage our communications with that great nation we pay in toto $4,500. And such is the result in these later days of economy, retrenchment, and reform! I venture to say that already the information derived from these consular agents in Russia has added some $10,000,000 to our sales in that empire during the last ten years. some $10,000,000 to our sales in that empire during the last ten years. Yet we have only one consul-general shivering among the iceburgs of St. Petersburg. [laughter,] and a consul sweltering in the heat of Odessa, fanned by the breezes when they can be gotten up from the Black Sea; one receiving $2,500 a year for freezing in a climate not colder than the hearts of the Committee on Appropriations, [laughter,] and the other sweltering in the heats of Southern Russia—not more afflicted with heat than is my friend who reports this bill by his eagerness to place ships upon the free list, so that those who ply on the little rayinghle streams in the interior of Mississippi may on the little navigable streams in the interior of Mississippi may purchase abroad vessels for the commerce that floats down from the plantations.

I have happened to pick out these two places from this bill. Next

But the gentleman cannot excuse himself to-day by saying there are as many consuls provided for as formerly, for, sir, the world moves. I tell that to the gentleman. Commerce moves, although we cannot buy free ships from England, or we cannot contract with agents in this House for their purchase. New fields are opened up to our trade. Our trade increases and demands new markets. The energy of our people will continue to create new appliances to save labor, our manufacturers will continue to increase their production, and provision should be made in time for new markets for their sale. and provision should be made in time for new markets for their sale.

We can produce more than can find a market upon this continent.

We must go out into all the available markets in the world. Where are they? That is the question. The answer comes from these consular reports. When we have opened to our trade the highways of the world, we can then supply the markets of every land with our manufactures and other products.

But the gentleman thinks the carrying trade is commerce! Ah, how

But the gentleman thinks the carrying trade is commerce! Ah, how little part of commerce is the carrying trade with its risks! We can manufacture ships as cheaply and better than any other people. Why should we not? We have iron, steel, copper, wood, composite. We can manufacture them against the world. We are doing it to-day. There would be no difficulty or trouble were it not for the continual effort made in this House that our people should go abroad and buy ships, thus endangering and preventing the establishment of ship-yards of every kind suitable to the production of ships. We have at hand all the material, iron, steel, wood, composite, and skilled labor. If we were not met with this constant cry here for free ships we could manufacture them still cheaper than we do to-day.

There is no need of going abroad; every industry of this country should be protected. The ten thousand men engaged in ship-building upon our coasts, upon our lakes, in Wilmington, Delaware, at Chester, upon the Mississippi River, everywhere wherever they are, should be protected and should be sustained. They should not be threatened.

Oh, but there should not be permitted to come before this House one single bill for them, but a "diplomatic" bill ought to be permitted to go through the House, is the doctrine that we are to learn from the lightning eloquence of the chairman of the committee who reported this bill!—a diplomacy which is to break down the ship-building interthis bill!—a diplomacy which is to break down the ship-building interests of the whole country and leave it in a worse condition than ever. They cannot let it alone. For my part, Mr. Chairman, I have ceased to hope or expect that they will let that interest alone, or that anything would come from this committee (which reports such diplomacy as this) that would have a tendency to lift up, to elevate, to build up, or to improve in any way the industries of this country in that regard. The gentleman from Mississippi brings forward his bill, but he has been told in tones that he cannot disregard that he must close the portals of his mouth on the subject of free ships! The people who sent him here tell him in a kind of language that most men understand in these latter days that if he had a diplomatic bill to introduce to introduce it. They told him that the power to destroy the indusstand in these latter days that if he had a diplomatic bill to introduce to introduce it. They told him that the power to destroy the industries of this great country was being fast taken away from him; that they were withdrawing their confidence in him and in his party, that had destroyed their industries and broken down the manufacturing interests of the country long enough. A brighter day is dawning for the manufacturing interests all over the country.

I do not dwell upon this now, Mr. Chairman, as long as I would, because this is the last spasmodic struggle of my friend who is undertaking to inject his life-long free trade system into this parthage.

because this is the last spasmodic struggle of my friend who is undertaking to inject his life-long free-trade system into this, perhaps his last public demonstration as chairman of the Diplomatic Committee. [Laughter.]

Now, sir, after this little episode, which in the tenderness and kindness of my heart I throw out, to call attention to the doctrine and theory which prevails so thoroughly in the South that the ship-building industries of this country must be destroyed; that free-trade, which has been condemned by the universal voice of the American people, shall be left as a legacy from this democratic Congress to be people, shall be left as a legacy from this democratic Congress to be

Gold came back to our shores in payment for our commodities exported abroad. And it gave new life to our country; it made resumption possible; it made resumption easy. It started the spindles in our factories. It set in motion the tremendous trip-hammer that forged the iron into shape and usefulness. It gave an impetus to our grain growers, to our manufacturers all over the land. From all the world, first commencing in rivulets and collecting into streams as it gathered into London, we brought back the gold of the world into our Treasury and the pockets of our people.

In these circumstances there never was a time when a small expenditure to encourage our consular agents abroad to be active, to penditure to encourage our consular agents abroad to be active, to be zealous, to be watchful, to be vigilant on behalf of American in-dustries and American interests would do so much as it would do today. The people have commenced at their own expense and by their own exertions to find additional markets for their productions, and they have been aided by these reports from consuls and ministers abroad. Sir, we cannot imagine the vastness of the benefit that has accrued to the people of the United States from the watchfulness and care with which these two-thousand-dollar consuls have searched through the regions where they live for new markets for our productive. ductions.

It is time we had a different consular system. It is time we paid our men better. We send a man into a foreign land with a pitiful salary of $1,000, or $1,500, or $2,000, or $3,000, to be the representative of our commerce and manufactures in the region where he is stationed; and right by his side is the British consul, receiving £5,000, living in a house built for him by his government, a man of repute, a man of wealth a man that has access to and intercourse with all the business men of the region where he resides; and alongside of him is our poorly paid, industrious, earnest, hopeful man, struggling on, looking to-day for the means to buy his bread to-morrow, and promoting the industries and the commerce of such a nation as ours; receiving a meager support from his own Government, overshadowed by the princely position of the representative of the little island in the sea. Yet he does very much for us, and brings in his portion of the vast accumulation which goes to make this balance of trade that makes our country to-day more prosperous than any other country in the world. It is time we had a different consular system. It is time we paid the world.

Sir, I felt impelled to make these remarks on this bill not knowing how it might be, whether there might not be reductions in the bill. But even if the bill be as it has been heretofore, I desire to make these remarks because, in my judgment, the time has come when any Congress of any political views ought to look at this great subject of our commercial intercourse, not only with the civilized and enlightened nations of the earth, but our commercial intercourse with all parts of the inhabitable globe where the people will purchase our commodities and send the reward of our labor. I shall not propose an parts of the limitatione globe where the people will purchase our commodities and send the reward of our labor. I shall not propose any amendment. If I were to ask anything in regard to this matter, I should ask that the bill be recommitted to the committee that the committee should tell us whether our consular system in the growing demand for markets for our immense productions did not need now an immediate revision; whether we should be tied down to the old landmarks.

I do not care what party started that system. I know that to-day the appropriations for our consuls are less than they were ten years ago, although new regions of country are opening up to trade, and the nations of the earth are vieing with each other to obtain possession of the trade of those new regions. They are establishing agencies, they are spending millions of dollars, to obtain even the trade of interior Africa; risking thousands and millions of dollars, and hundreds of lives of those who go there into that sickly climate, to obtain possession of the outlets of trade from the interior of Africa. We do not try to obtain that trade We do not try to obtain that trade.

We do not try to obtain that trade.

Even in respect to the nations with which we have commercial treaties we begrudge the trifling sum that will enable us to obtain the attention of the people about one little port in the south of Russia and one place in the north of Russia, and of the millions of friendly people in the Russian Empire. With proper consular arrangements with the different countries of the world, with proper consular arrangements, not expensive, not extravagant, but of ordinary cost, we might establish commercial intercourse not by treaties, not by high-sounding phrases, but by direct export to and import from all the nations of the earth and all the isles of the sea.

Now, if what I have said approaches even as a shadow the reality, I would like the gentleman to tell me why it is not better that he should devote his marvelous energies to the preparation of a new bill than to come in here weeping and moaning like the bending bulnushes of the Nile because he cannot buy a catamoran from a foreign nation and register it here at home?

nation and register it here at home?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. CONGER. Certainly.
Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I suppose the gentleman has unbounded confidence in the present Secretary of State, Mr. Evarts.
Mr. CONGER. That is not material to the consular question. I have very high respect for Mr. Evarts. I have conversed with him on this subject.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I will state to the gentleman that in every single instance where the Secretary of State has recommended the establishment of a new consulate or the promotion of a consular brought up and again condemned in future republican Congresses, where every industry and every enterprise of this people knows that it can depend for protection and support, I look over this consular and diplomatic bill. I find that Austria, with its sixty-nine millions of people, has but two representatives in the consular and diplomatic part of the bill. One of these is at Trieste on the Adriatic for all of Austria, who is to receive only $2,000—one of the great powers of the earth, with only one shipping port, and that (on the Adriatic) directly on its borders; but the great Danube, like our own Mississippi, flowing through it, floating the products of that mighty kingdom down into the Black Sea, thence into the Mediterranean, thence to the ocean, and thence to the whole world; anxious for our commodities, desirous to obtain our products, open always as a great market to the enterprise of this country; but two little consulates of some modities, desirous to obtain our products, open always as a great market to the enterprise of this country; but two little consulates of some class or other, I hardly know what—class 5, at $2,000 each, I believe! Two little consuls for an empire containing a population of sixty-nine million of souls, who to-day would receive our productions, our manufactures, our cotton goods, our agricultural implements, our steam-engines, and thousands and tens of thousands of the different implements and articles which we have invented and manufactured, some of greater value, some of less expense, if we only had commercial communication with that great kingdom. And yet this "diplomatic" bill has distributed that kingdom between two little petty consuls who receive in the aggregate only $4,000 to keep up the intercourse of the United States of North America with the great Kingdom of Austria and Hungary, the middle of the continent of Europe! Is that good policy? Is that what you call diplomacy? Is that statesmanship? Will the gentleman strike out a word from my assertion that we need more commercial intercourse, greater means of finding a market for our producers and manufacturers and for all the surthat we need more commercial intercourse, greater means of finding a market for our producers and manufacturers and for all the surplus products of this great country? And will he frighten us by saying, "Somebody somewhere wants to buy a ship, and without paying duty, and wants to break down our ship-building interests!" Or will he claim that it is statesmanlike or "diplomatic" to refuse the relief that is so much needed and cripple our commercial intercourse at this day when the whole people have demanded with a unanimity of voice that we would do well not to disregard, that we shall have greater facilities for spreading our commerce all over the earth in order to onen up other markets for our surplus productions and manufactures? open up other markets for our surplus productions and manufactures? This little bill, Mr. Chairman, with the defects I have named, and they are not even the worst, is all that is given to us in answer to the great demand which has been made upon us by the people of this country. This is all that is left us to take or reject. I do not know that we can modify or improve it now. Perhaps the rules will be invoked to shield it from any of the changes which are demanded by the best interests of the country. I do not know that the committee would take the bill of the country. I do not know that the committee would take the bill back and go over the ground again, and see, where the people of the United States make millions of dollars by the efforts of a few additional, active, well-paid consuls in the distant parts of the earth, whether they will be willing to incorporate that into their bill and make it what it ought to be before presenting it to the House. They have received, within the last few days, and each of us has received, copies of the printed reports of our consuls largely filled with information demanded for our producers and our manufacturers.

I venture to say any man who has read them will see where some mation demanded for our producers and our manufacturers.

I venture to say any man who has read them will see where some manufacturer, some producer, within his own region can look to find a new opening for the productions which he has for sale.

Mr. Chairman, one matter of profound congratulation to the American people has been, and is to-day, perhaps, that the balance of trade is in our favor. Notwithstanding the despondency, notwithstanding the panic, notwithstanding the depression of labor, notwithstanding all the isms that were floating wildly through the country and alarming the American heart, the people went on producing and manufacturers.

the panic, notwithstanding the depression of labor, notwithstanding all the isms that were floating wildly through the country and alarming the American heart, the people went on producing and manufacturing. In the darkness of their own land they sent out their productions into the light of the world and found new markets. The balance of trade began to turn in our favor. In one sense the panic and the depression were the very means of encouraging the enterprise and the genius of American producers to find a market where they could sell their goods. What was the result? We exported more than we imported, the amount being sometimes enough for parts of the year to equal $365,000,000 a year.

What was the effect of that? The balance of trade being in our favor, we sold all over the world more than we bought from all over the world. The balance was in our country among our people. Foreigners paid for our products through the great mart of exchange, London; they paid by sending back our notes and our bonds, and our people took up our bonds. They paid by sending back our railroad securities; and our people took up our railroad securities with what we received for the surplus productions we sold in foreign lands. The people abroad had no longer our bonds, no longer our railroad securities, no longer the evidences of our indebtedness. But they must have our grain; they must live; they must have our beef; they must have our grain; they must live; they must have our beef; they must have our petroleum; they must have our lard-oil; they must have the millions and millions of döllars' worth of the different products and commodities which we send to them and the rest of the world, to be paid through their counting-houses. What could they do? They had nothing but their gold left them, and they sent their gold. Each dispatch brought news of the shipment of gold. Each ship that came, one following the other in quick succession, was laden with gold.

officer by the payment of a higher salary it has been done by the Committee on Appropriations except in one instance, that of a consul at Gaboon. There perhaps is one thing which ought to have been done—the gentleman himself should have been called to fill the office of Secretary of State in place of Mr. Evarts.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Allow me one moment.

Mr. CONGER. Let me answer the gentleman.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Did not the Secretary of State recommend that the salary of the consul-general at Halifax be raised to $4,000 a year?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Yes, and we do increase it, but give only $3,000 a year.

Mr. CONGER. The complimentary remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] in reference to the position which he is pleased to say it would have been well for the country if I had occupied comes, like all the other admissions by that side of the House, with no effort at the proper time to accomplish that valuable result, [great laughter;] but somewhere about three years and a half afterward, waking up to the necessity and propriety of agreeing to what [great laughter;] but somewhere about three years and a half afterward, waking up to the necessity and propriety of agreeing to what almost all of us on this side of the House think proper, the suggestion is made. Now, it might have been better that I should have been called to that distinguished position, although I know of nobody else who would suggest it except the gentleman from Mississippi. And it may perhaps be better that the new consulate on the Gaboon be created, and that my distinguished friend from Mississippi be called upon to fill the post, and to give to the country the benefit of his distinguished services there. [Laughter.] But we cannot direct these things ourselves. Man proposes and God disposes. Whether my friend will go to Gaboon or I to the State Department is hidden in the uncertainties of the future.

I do know this, however, that when six years ago and when four

I do know this, however, that when six years ago and when four years ago this Committee on Appropriations prepared a bill contrary to the recommendations of the Secretary of State, contrary to the recommendations of Assistant Secretary Seward under whose immerecommendations of Assistant Secretary Seward under whose immediate supervision these matters were, against every remonstrance, against every urgency, threatening to do away with the whole consular system, he devised means requiring our consuls and consular agents to make reports to this country, and so appeal from the gentleman and his party to the country for a better consular system. That I know; of that I was a small part.

Now I tell the gentleman, and I say it without hesitation, that in the opinion of members of Congress on this side of the House, in the opinion of members of the Cabinet, there has been a continuous, willful, I might almost say, if there was any motive for it, a malicious attack on our diplomatic and consular system for six years past.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Allow me a moment.

Mr. CONGER. Certainly.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Does the gentleman think that the committee of which I am a humble member has attempted to destroy the consular system?

Mr. CONGER. I do not speak of the present Committee on Appropriations particularly; but I do say that from six years ago until two years ago there was apparently a studied attempt, upon the plea of priations particularly; but I do say that from six years ago until two years ago there was apparently a studied attempt, upon the plea of retrenchment or reform, or, the Lord knows what, to weaken and destroy the diplomatic and consular system of the United States.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Allow me to ask the gentleman if he is willing for the statement he is making to go to the country, that the Committee on Appropriations of this House has attempted to destroy the consular system of this country?

Mr. CONGER. That is what I make the statement for. [Laughter]

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Very well; let the gentleman's statement go to the country.

Mr. CONGER. I could go through the diplomatic appropriation bills of six years ago and four years ago, (I do not know the gentleman was then on the Committee on Appropriations,) and convince him that there was a constant effort to cut down the salaries of these officials. They were reclassified—

Mr. SPARKS. One moment.
Mr. CONGER. Well.
Mr. SPARKS. Does the gentleman mean the diplomatic service or the consular service, the salaries of which were designed to be cut down ?

Mr. CONGER. Both.
Mr. SPARKS. Allow me to suggest to the gentleman that he is utterly mistaken. Efforts have been made to trim the diplomatic service of its useless membership, but never to decrease the compensation of the consular service, but rather an increase in that direc-

Mr. CONGER. I know cases where consulates were left out of the bill entirely-important places. I know places where by this rearrangement consuls were cut down.

Mr. SPARKS. Pray, name one.

Mr. CONGER. Well, sir, I will name them at my leisure. The gentleman knows me well enough to know that I do not stand here to fight the men of straw that he holds up with a strong hand.

Mr. SPARKS. Will the gentleman allow me a moment? He knows my kindly feelings toward him, certainly.

Mr. CONGER. They are reciprocated heartily.

Mr. SPARKS. Having been a member of the Committee on Appropriations in the Forty-fifth Congress, I say that our efforts were to protect the consular service. We did feel that the diplomatic service was top heavy, something like a "fifth wheel to a wagon," and we propose to trim it; but at the same time we ought to foster and improve the consular system. That is all there is about it.

Mr. CONGER. That may have been the object of the gentleman. Mr. SPARKS. It was the object of the committee.

Mr. CONGER. With our growing commerce, our rapidly-extending communication with all the world, there should be a rapid, decided, and positive increase in our consular system. It should be supported, not crushed. I tell the gentleman that consular stations were left out of the last bill that he talks about; some of them today I find put in again in this bill. There were important consular stations, with great intercourse, where the Secretary of State was compelled to appoint a commercial agent or else the Government business could not have been done.

Now, I cannot go into particulars. There is no gentleman on the other side of the House who will deny that in this classification of consuls there are great reductions from what the system was eight other side of the House who will deny that in this classification of consuls there are great reductions from what the system was eight or ten years ago. Take the two bills. Here are great reductions in salaries, a constant depression and cutting down of the influence and ability of consular agents to perform the service. The gentleman admits the fact in regard to the diplomatic service; I assert it in regard to our consular service. I tell the gentleman that the people of the United States learn from exporters and manufacturers in ten thousand cities, villages, and country places of the United States that there is a means provided by the Government of finding out through our consular system the wants of any foreign country, and through our consular system the wants of any foreign country, and that one of the principal objects of the establishment of the consular system is to furnish such means to the people. They are demanding of Congress a speedy reform in the management of the consular system especially and the appropriations for it. This feeling entered vigorously into the last contest. Our commercial interests, our tariff interests, the protection of our industries everywhere, and connected with that the facilities for exportation, the finding of a foreign marwith that the facilities for exportation, the finding of a foreign market for our productions, entered into the discussions of the people of the United States; and they spoke upon it in a voice which, it seems to me, it would be well for every Representative governed by the will and wish of the people to heed, and in nothing more than preparing a proper consular system which would, for instance, let us into the heart of Russia, into the heart of Austria. Why, there is not even a consul for all the valley of the Nile. Notwithstanding the great intercourse which our country is trying to open with Abyssinia, Nubia, and that part of Africa, we have for that region only a consul-general and an agent at Cairo, the two officers receiving $4,000; we have none at Alexandria—none far up the Nile, where it meets the caravans of Africa bringing in the products of that country and buying the productions and manufactures of the rest of the world.

But, sir, I have not time except to glance at the matters which I have attempted to present. I say the time has come when there must be a revision and a reform of our consular service—not in the must be a revision and a reform of our consular service—not in the direction of retrenching a few dollars upon each officer, but in the direction of first finding where consular officers can be useful, and then giving them the pay proportionate to the value of their services to the people of the United States. Then the manufacturers, the agriculturists, the producers of this country, will be satisfied, and not till then will they cease to demand new regulations upon these explicates.

agricultatists, the producers of this country, will be satisfied, and not till then will they cease to demand new regulations upon these subjects.

Mr. MONROE. Mr. Chairman, I have not much to add in regard to this bill. The gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. SINGLETON,] in explaining the provisions of the bill, has anticipated much of what I would have said on that point; and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Conger] has made the speech which I had in my head in regard to the value of these commercial reports which have lately been coming to us from our consuls in different parts of the world. I entirely agree with him as to the great value of these reports. They are very suggestive as to what the demands of our commerce are speedily to become. I had intended to say a few words on that point; but, Mr. Chairman, I do not at all regret that the gentleman from Mississippi and the gentleman from Michigan have anticipated me, because they have both presented the topics which they had to offer better than I could have done. I am always glad when any topic which I might have discussed is presented by some one else in the House better than I could have done it. That has been the case in both instances to-day. There may be room, however, for a word or two more in regard to the bill.

Now, as I observe that some members of the House are reading the secret.

Now, as I observe that some members of the House are reading the report of the Committee on Appropriations upon this subject, it may be well enough, in order to prevent confusion and to obviate unnecesbe well enough, in order to prevent confusion and to obviate unnecessary questions, to call attention to one or two typographical errors. Near the beginning of this report the total appropriation recommended by the bill is printed $1,189,935. The appropriation actually recommended by the bill is $1,190,435.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. That mistake occurs in the report only; the sum is correctly printed in the bill.

Mr. MONROE. I was going to add, as many reports are found on the desks of members with this sum inaccurately printed, that the correct sum may be found at the end of the bill.

Then again, at the close of this report, I find the list of consulates where salaries have been substituted for fees has been made inaccurate by the accidental insertion of Gnavaguil among the consulates supposed to be paid by fees. Guayaquil is a salaried consulate, and hence should not be placed in this list. The point is not of great importance, but it might have led to some confusion if unexplained. Now, Mr. Chairman, just one word on another point. My friend from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] I know wished to do entire justice to this bill. He did not quite do justice to it in regard to the matter of Austria-Hungary. We have at least one more consulate in that country than he named, but, on account of the consulates being arranged in different classes he no doubt overlooked it. In addition to the in different classes, he no doubt overlooked it. In addition to the consulates he mentioned, we have a consul-general at Vienna, and, although I had not time to look through the different classes, I have an impression we have one more. However that may be, I know we have a consul-general at Vienna, who keeps an eye somewhat upon the general system of commerce between that country and this. We have also the two consuls that the gentleman from Michigan has

In regard to this bill, Mr. Chairman, there are several points in it where I could readily have voted for a larger sum than is inserted by the committee; and I could cheerfully undertake, at the proper time, to sit down with my friend from Michigan, or others who may be interested in the matter, and review our whole consular system. I agree with him that these reports which come to us from all parts of the world, and which seem to demand an enlargement of our commerce and an enlargement of our consular system, do indicate that we must speedily go thoroughly and carefully into this whole question. The only question between myself and the gentleman from Michigan, and I do not think we should differ much even about that, would be whether the time has come this winter to undertake to reconstruct whether the time has come this winter to undertake to reconstruct the whole consular system of the country.

My judgment was that it had not come, and my reason for that judgment was this: I found these reports still coming from all parts of the world. The gentleman from Michigan is quite right as to their value, but the business of getting these reports is yet in its infancy. They are only beginning to come in. They are very suggestive; and after reading them it does occur to you there should be a new consulate here and a new consulate there, an enlargement of the salary at such a place, or advancement in grade and rank of a consular office in another place, and so on. But one difficulty about taking up this whole subject this winter is that we have not as yet got the whole case before us. whole case before us.

And I must say to my friend from Michigan, through the chairman, that I think in this respect the judgment of the Secretary of State is of great value, because I know his heart is in this business. I know he has felt great interest in sending out circulars with carefully prepared questions, and bringing in these reports. I know he is anxious to have the consular system of the country keep pace with the commerce of the country, and with the demand for the extension of that commerce.

Whoever else may be cool in regard to this matter the Secretary of State I know is not. We have had some conferences with him on this subject, and I know he wants to enlarge the consular service just as soon as we get ready to say what ought to be done.

But, as I have understood the Secretary of State, he does not think as yet he has got the whole case before him and so understands what the demands of different parts of the world are as to make it expedient at present to go into this business of recasting the whole consular avision of the country.

Now, that may be right or it may be wrong; it is a question of judgment; and as one member of the Committee on Appropriations, after getting all the information I could in regard to the matter, my judgment was that the Secretary of State was right on that point, and that the time had not yet come, that we do not have a sufficient fullness of detail, that we do not yet have the case sufficiently before us to sit down and say just how this consular system should be recon-

The probability is if the Committee on Appropriations sat down to that work this winter, even with the Secretary of State to help them, and did their best to reconstruct this system on the most liberal scale, they would make a great many mistakes in consequence of the incomplete character of the information which has yet reached this country. And we should find we had adopted a system that had to be reconstructed again at a subsequent session of Congress.

The Secretary of State is ready to go at this work just as soon as the time has come. I hope we all are. I think there is a general feeling in the House that the consular system at no distant day is to be reconstructed. I think there is a feeling among us all that whenever that time comes, whenever we find that the commerce of this country requires it at our hands, we shall none of us hesitate to go on with the work of reorganizing our consular system and making it adequate for all the demands of our commerce. I admit that the bill in its present form would not be considered satisfactory provided we took the view of the case that the time was now here that this reorganization of the system should be had. But the committee have acted upon the theory that until we get much more information upon the subject we would better act in a manner consistent with what we the subject we would better act in a manner consistent with what we believe to be the present needs of the service.

When the time does come that this system is to be reorganized it should be done after mature and thorough reflection and examination into the whole system. I think, therefore, that the bill as a whole is a very satisfactory bill. As I said before, I would very gladly have provided larger sums for salaries at some points; but a bill of this kind has to be made up as a sort of compromise, the result of different opinions and views upon it. Concessions must be made in such matters, and I am only doing justice to the Committee on Appropriations when I say that, assuming the time has not come yet for a thorough reconstruction of the system, there was a general disposition to meet the whole subject fairly; and it is a matter of some interest to both sides of the House that so far as the question of consular salaries is concerned almost everything that the Secretary of State asked for has been granted in this bill. Almost everything he asked in the way of extending the consular system for the present is conceded; and in that respect there is little difference between the is conceded; and in that respect there is little difference between the views submitted by the Secretary of State and those of the Committee on Appropriations. Hence I thought it but right to state to the committee that I would give the bill my support, although it was not in every particular exactly what I would have preferred. The principal item of difference between this bill and the estimates of the Department of State—the heaviest item—is that in which the Department asks for $25,000 to erect buildings for the American legation in Japan. The committee struck that out for the reason that they did not feel prepared now to enter upon the work of constructing new buildings, nor did they feel quite certain that it was an economical thing to do at the present time. Yet it might have been. It was simply a question of judgment about which men differ.

Now, Mr. Chairman, to sum up in regard to the advancement made here in respect to the consular system. When gentlemen read this bill they will see that there has been an honest attempt on the part of both the Secretary of State and the Committee on Appropriations of both the Secretary of State and the Committee on Appropriations to meet the great wants of the country and of our commerce. They have met this demand in the best manner that the present condition of affairs will in their judgment admit. Perhaps not by a broad effort, not in a fundamental manner by changing the whole system, but in a fair, equitable manner, based upon the present condition of things. In the first place, to run rapidly over the points in which progress has been made in this bill, it establishes one new consulate at Mozambique, in Southeastern Africa.

Again, there are six consulates at which the salaries have been increased—Halifax, Apia, Dundee, Guayaquil, Para, and Southampton. The increase in these cases has been from five hundred to a thousand dollars.

At fifteen consulates this bill substitutes salaries for fees. I most heartily approve of that change. Mr. Chairman, I could wish that we were not under the necessity of having any consuls supported by fees. The salary gives to the consul a distinguishing mark as to his authority as an officer, and puts him upon a better footing with the consuls representing other nationalities.

Mr. DUNNELL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

tion?

Mr. MONROE. Certainly.

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to ask whether it would not be a stimulus to greater activity on the part of the consul if his salary depended entirely upon fees, rather than have a fixed sum paid him. Would he not in that case be more likely to look more closely to the necessity of commerce and the wants of the country to which he might be as-

Mr. MONROE. That is an important inquiry, and there are, no doubt, two sides to this question. By the light of such experience as I have had in the service, and also of such reading and examination. I have had in the service, and also of such reading and examination as I have been able to give to the matter, I am of the opinion that salaried consuls, other things being equal, are more efficient and better officers. In the first place, their rank is better. It places them, as I have said, on a better footing with the consuls of other countries; it puts them in gentlemanly relations with the representatives of other governments. The feed consul is scarcely a consul at all. The salaried consul is recognized all over the world as an officer of the Government. When he grees out to call among the representatives of ernment. When he goes out to call among the representatives of other governments, and leaves his bit of pasteboard, with his name upon it, his fixed salary places him upon the footing, not of a half-way officer of the Government, but a man representing in his position the full authority of the Government from which he comes. But if the salary is not fixed by law, if it happens that he receive only fees, then he is looked upon as some sort of a fellow turned loose upon the world to pick up a living by ravages upon the commerce of the

It is not well to send a poor fellow abroad and tell him you will not pay him any salary, but expect him to live off the country somehow. It is a bad system, and I am glad to see so much of it abolished as we have undertaken to do in this case.

And let me say here that the fee system is not always economical. Some of these consuls paid by fees make large returns. Some of them get larger salaries than some consuls having the better class of salaries get. In the case of the fifteen consulates where we have substituted fixed salaries for fees we have put these men in a fairly good position. We have done what will please them by increasing good position. We have done what will please them by increasing their rank; and in the aggregate we pay them a little less than they received when paid by fees. I am sure they would rather get their money in the form of a salary, and there has been a little gain, but not much, on the side of economy. The fees will now be paid into the Treasury. I have here a list of all the consulates in which salaries have been substituted for fees, and it will be seen that the aggregate of the salaries is not quite equal to the aggregate of emoluments which had been paid to these men out of the fees which they had re-

Well, Mr. Chairman, we have not only created one new consulate, raised salaries at six consulates, substituted fixed salaries for fees at fifteen consulates, but we have given the Secretary of State $10,000 fifteen consulates, but we have given the Secretary of State $10,000 more than we gave him last year for what is known as the contingent expenses of the consulates. The allowance made to the Secretary of State for this purpose is an important and useful allowance. It is used to pay rent and many other miscellaneous expenses; but one of the important things about it is that it is a fund over which I believe the Secretary of State can by law perhaps exercise a little discretion. I have not lately looked at the statute upon that point, but in voting for that additional amount I felt that I was giving the Secretary of State a little margin for the exercise of a sound discretion, so that he could look over the field and see what the needs of our commerce were, and do something, perhaps, through this additional fund toward providing for them. The truth is, changes are going on all over the earth. Every day consulates are becoming more important in one place and less so in another. It is important, therefore, to give the Secretary of State a little discretion as to that, and it is for that reason we all thought it wise to wait awhile before we attempted any general reconstruction of the consular system. attempted any general reconstruction of the consular system.

Let me give an illustration of what I mean. Montreal has always hitherto been the seat of the consulate-general of Canada. We have thought that the important point; but of late Halifax has become the interesting point—partly on account of this great question of the fisheries—and the Secretary of State has deemed it important to have a gentleman there with semi-diplomatic powers. We have accordingly advanced the rank of the consul there to that of consul-general which gives him to a certain extent, a diplomatic position. We eral, which gives him, to a certain extent, a diplomatic position. We increase his salary and make appropriation for a clerk for him. Halifax I suspect is likely to be hereafter the important point for consular services in the British possessions of North America.

Then there is this small place, Apia, a port in the Samoan Islands, which we never heard of before, but which has now come to be politically significant on account of the tripartite occupation of those islands by England, France, and the United States. We have also raised the salary of the consul there.

raised the salary of the consul there.

I wish to refer to another thing in the bill which I believe has not been mentioned. We have added $2,000 to the amount of money the Secretary of State uses to pay consuls who are not citizens of the United States. It sometimes becomes absolutely necessary to have such consuls, and it is essential that the Secretary should have a fund at his disposal for paying them.

There have been some other small additions in this bill. The approximations for the disposation service have been bett substituted.

propriations for the diplomatic service have been left substantially as propriations for the diplomatic service have been left substantially as they were. There is no important change there. The great difference between the bill of this year and the bill of last year is, that there has been progress made and liberality displayed in regard to the consular service. This was done out of respect to the growing demands of the commerce of our country. Fortunately it so happens that we can make these additional appropriations for consulates without further expense to the Treasury of the United States, because the appropriation bill this year is relieved of one heavy item which it had last year, that of an appropriation of $37,000 for the commission to China; the work of that commission, I believe, having been very properly done, the gentlemen connected with it having commission to China; the work of that commission, I believe, having been very properly done, the gentlemen connected with it having exhibited more energy and dispatch than is usual in such cases.

Again, we return to the Treasury these fees for which we have substituted fixed salaries; so that while this bill on the face of it is $10,100 more than the bill of last year, yet there is really less expense to the Government of the United States under this bill than there was under the law of last year. The reduction is someting more than $16,000.

Now, to sum this whole thing up for friends on our side of the House and those on the other side of the House also, if we were to attempt to-day to test this bill by the enlarged view of our growing commerce and of its great demands for an enlarged consular system, the Appropriations Committee would be compelled to admit that this bill comes far short of the mark and does not meet that exigency.

If you judge of this bill simply upon the basis of our present consular system, if you decide whether you will vote for it or not (and I expect you will all vote for it) with reference to its liberality and fairness as based upon that system—if that be the test, then I will say that while I do not think it a perfect bill, while I would have altered it in a few points myself if my own individual preference could have prevailed, while I would have been glad of a little more liberality in two or three places, yet, under the circumstances, I consider it a fair and satisfactory bill—a bill which the friends of our comparers and of our convenier system, when they come to read it commerce, and of our consular system, when they come to read it carefully over, will not find much reason to complain of.

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to ask one or two questions of the gentleman from Ohio who has just taken his seat, [Mr. MONROE.] He has said that all the items embraced in the recommendations of the Secretary of State have been provided for in this bill.

Mr. MONROE. Not all. I said nearly all so far as the consular service is concerned, but not quite all even there.

Mr. DUNNELL. I find some items in the estimates of the Secre-Mr. DUNNELL. I find some items in the estimates of the Secretary of State which are not provided for in this bill, but perhaps they will be provided for in the sundry civil or the miscellaneous appropriation bill yet to be reported. For instance, the sum of $7,000 is asked for by the State Department for the more frequent publication of the second state of our consuls. I suppose that item is to priation bill yet to be reported. For instance, the sum of $7,000 is asked for by the State Department for the more frequent publication of the commercial reports of our consuls. I suppose that item is to be provided for in some other bill not yet reported.

Mr. MONROE. That is so; that is not considered as belonging properly to the diplomatic bill. It belongs perhaps primarily to the Committee on Printing; ultimately it will be decided on its merits. There is no disposition anywhere, that I know of, to interfere with the granting of that item.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. There has been no decision upon that subject at all; it has not been considered.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Chairman, when I sought recognition a few moments ago I intended to ask some questions which have been fully answered by the gentleman from Ohio; and as I do not desire unnecessarily to take up the time of the House, I will not occupy its attention now except to say that I am very much pleased to recognize a fact which I think is true of this bill and which is in harmony with the closing remarks of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. MONROE.]

There is in this bill evidence of a progress in the right direction. One year ago I made some remarks in the Committee of the Whole on the diplomatic appropriation bill then pending, and I directed my attention principally to the importance of our consular system. I must say that in this bill there is a decided advance, and I am glad of it. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] spoke well when he alluded to the value of the consular system in developing the

I must say that in this bill there is a decided advance, and I am glad of it. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Conger] spoke well when he alluded to the value of the consular system in developing the commerce of the country.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Singleton] may be better answered by other gentlemen when he says that the navigation laws of this country are crippling American commerce. I think American commerce received its most deadly blow during the rebellion. It has also been injured by the change in the commerce of the world from sailing-vessels to steamships, which change has put us in our present condition as a commercial nation. If we should repeal the laws to which the gentleman refers, the entire coastwise trade of the country, which we now entirely and completely hold, would fall intoforeign hands. But I do not propose to enter upon that discussion now.

My friend on my left, the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. Hub-Bell,] desires a moment upon this point, and I will yield to him any time that I may have left.

Mr. Hubbell. Mr. Chairman, I have thought it would perhaps be well to correct the error into which the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Singleton] fell when he stated that the decrease in our tonnage was attributable, as I inferred from his remarks, to the fact that we did not allow free ships. He says that the laws discriminating against foreign shipping coming into this country are the cause of our commerce falling off.

In 1878, when the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill was

In 1678, when the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill was pending before the Committee of the Whole, I prepared and submitted to the committee a sueech upon the subject of our foreign commerce, which was filled with statistics. By a reference to the tables in that speech it will appear that in 1860 our tonnage amounted to fifty-three hundred thousand tons. In 1866 it had fallen off some two million tons; and up to 1877 it had increased only to about forty-two hundred and forty thousand tons.

Now, this falling off of our tonnage can be traced directly to one cause, that cause being the unfortunate rebellion which took place in this country. Its slow increase since that time is not at all chargeable to our customs laws or to the laws which prevent ships from able to our customs laws or to the laws which prevent ships from coming into this country free.

In 1860 our tonnage was almost equal to that of Great Britain, and we enjoyed almost as much of the carrying trade of the world as did Great Britain. How had we obtained that trade? We had had up to that time a set of statesmen—democratic statesmen—who had courage, who saw that the way to build up a trade was to encourage it. They encouraged it by means of lines of steamers and lines of sailing-vessels to many parts of the world, to which they granted what was termed "subsidies."

What is the reason that to-day the increase in our tonnage has not been as great as we would have it, in view of the fact that our exports are all the time exceeding our imports? Is it because our laws do not allow free ships to come in? Not at all. Is it because we do not pay our consuls sufficient salaries? Not at all. You might do not pay our consuls sufficient salaries? Not at all. Fou might allow free ships, you might raise the salary of every censul at points where now trade is springing up, to $10,000 per annum, and you would increase the carrying trade of this country but very little.

Why, sir, the fact stares us in the face to-day that Great Britain, France, Germany, Spain, nearly every country that undertakes to participate in this carrying trade, subsidizes every line of steamships running to points where the trade is growing. It is not because our laws prevent ships from coming in free that we do not get the trade; it is simply because we of to-day have not the coursage to brush away persimply because simply because we of to-day have not the courage to brush away perhaps the crudities, perhaps the irregularities which may connect themselves with subsidizing lines, and to come right to the point of paying a fair remuneration, of encouraging in some way the construction of ships and the establishment of lines of ocean communication with other countries.

You might allow ships to come in free, and it would not make any difference as to the ship-building in Maine. The time has gone by for sailing-vessels. We must have steam instead of sail. We must have ships that can carry immense cargoes. We may talk about this as we choose; while we are perhaps the greatest producing country in the world, while we have more resources than any other country, while we probably shall have a larger balance of exports than any other country, those exports will be carried by foreign ships just so long as we neglect to encourage our own lines.

The trouble is not with the consular system. If my recollection serves me right, the Congress of the United States has ever been trying to strengthen this consular system. Why, sir, at the time when the bill was pending on which I made the speech to which I have referred, the amendment offered by myself was adopted, calling upon consuls and consular agents to make monthly reports of the upon consuls and consular agents to make monthly reports of the condition of trade in their different countries. It is not the want of proper consular salaries, it is the want of the fostering hand of the Government in building up steamship lines, that prevents us from having tonnage and carrying trade.

Allow me to state one other fact. As I understand, there has been no change whatever in the navigation laws since 1860. The carryno change whatever in the navigation laws since 1860. The carrying trade of the country does not always show the wealth of the country. If we want to do business in the carrying trade, we must adopt the methods which other nations adopt. If they are liberal to their customers, they will get the trade; if they encourage the establishment of steamship lines, those lines will carry the commerce. It makes no difference whatever about the increase of pay in our consular service, unless you take some steps to encourage the establishment of transportation lines under the auspices of the Government and sailing under the American flag. and sailing under the American flag.

For the purpose of bringing this question more fully to the attention of the House and the country, I will take the liberty of printing as part of my remarks a portion of the speech which I made on the occasion referred to, showing precisely the condition of our carrying trade, together with the number of subsidized lines engaged in that trade by other countries.

OUR MERCHANT SERVICE NOT WHOLLY DESTROYED.

It must not be supposed, however, that our shipping has been entirely swept from the ocean, as foreign competitors would have the commercial world believe. A careful compilation from the annual commerce and navigation reports of the United States from 1800 down to the close of the fiscal year 1877 shows the following re-

Total t	onnage of	the United States.
Year. 1800	292, 492		Tons. 4, 242, 599 4, 282, 607
1820	1, 298, 958	1872 1873	4, 437, 746
1850	3, 535, 454	1874 1875
1860			4, 279, 458 4, 242, 599

These figures show an increase from a fraction over a quarter of a million tons in 1880 to five and one-third million tons in 1880—just before the commencement of the rebellion—and a falling off of two million tons up to 1866, or during the war. Our tonnage in 1860 was nearly equal to that of England at that period; but many of our ships were, while unable to sail in safety under the American flag, transferred to English purchasers. American tonnage, however, is again on the increase, the returns for 1877 showing nearly a million tons more than at the close of the war, employed mainly in our home coast, lake, and river trade. So much, then, for our merchant marine. It is not what it should be, but though depressed it is on the increase in our own waters, and if the proper means are now employed to foster and extend our ocean tonnage in iron steamships and sailing-vessels of both wood and iron, we may ere long be again enabled to compete successfully in the contest for a larger share of the world's commerce.

SOME FOREIGN MARKETS IN WHICH AMERICAN COMMERCE MAY BE INCREASED.

Having shown in a series of tables the description of goods sent from the United States and of those imported, the countries with which we are in commercial intercourse, and the percentage of commodities sent to and received from each, it will be well to glitnee briefly at some of those markets where opportunities are presented for an increase of our foreign trade. Proceeding by geographical divisions, 1 will consider first-

THE SOUTHERN COUNTRIES IN OUR OWN NEIGHBORHOOD.

It is well known that Mexico, Cuba, the West India Islands, Central and South America are not, in the usual acceptation of the term, manufacturing countries. Yet each produces beyond its own consumption specialties which make up a large annual export, consisting of raw materials and other products which are always in demand in manufacturing and commercial centers. These are all natural markets of the United States. Their people want from us flour, port, lard, butter, cheese, lumber, furniture, locomotive engines, rails, cars, sugar-mills, and manufactured goods in cotton, woolen, and mixed fabrics. For these they will send us wool, coffee, cocca, hides, tallow, horns, rubber, drugs, dyes, gums, tapioca, rosewood, diamonds, &c. This would be a valuable exchange; but to what extent do we participate in this traffie? They buy from the United States altogether about 12 per cent. in value of their importations. England gets the lion's share, nearly 60 per cent. The import trade of Mexico, South and Central America, and the West Indies, including Cuba, amounts annually to about $300,000,000 in value; their exports to about the same. In this trade England leads; France and Germany come next, the United States, Spain, Holland, and Portugal coming in for a portion each, in small parcels, of what there is left.

But there is another feature in this trade in which the United States is shown to greater disadvantage than any other country. A reference to the tables will show at a glance that we sell to our southern neighbors fewer goods in value than we purchased from them. For example, during the last fiscal year Brazil purchased from us goods to the value of nearly 6 per cent. of our total exports, while we purchased from Brazil to the value of nearly 6 per cent. of our imports. In other words, Brazil purchased from us goods to the value of less than $7,500,000, while we purchased from that country goods to the value of $43,500,000, but a during the last fiscal year took from us goods to the amount of less than $13,000,000, while we purchased from that country products to the value of $68,000,000, making a balance against the United States $655,000,000. Take another illustration. Club during the last fiscal year took from us goods to the amount of less than $13,000,000, while we purchased from that country products to the value of $68,000,000, making a balance against the United States of $55,000,000. Here, then, we have two items which together amount to $91,000,000. The balance against the United States in the other countries named in the group of markets under considera

Here is a list of ten distinct companies who together dispatch eighteen steamships monthly to Brazilian ports. In addition to these there are a number of other companies and firms which dispatch steamers to Brazil at irregular periods. How many American steamers are there plying between Brazilian and United States ports? This question was recently propounded and answered in an address before the New York Liberal Club by Mr. Landisman, on the resources of Brazil and the valley of the Amazon. He said:

"From the United States there is not a steamer leaving for Brazil except a single one belonging to a private trading-house."

It is a matter of doubt whether even that solitary craft is now running, for it is stated in a recent issue of the Boston Commercial Bulletin that—

"The United States to-day has not a steamer in the Brazil trade, while in the harbor of Rio Janeiro there appear every month at least twelve steamers under British colors, together with one each from Havre, Marseilles, and Gonoa, and two each from Bremen and Hamburg."

Twelve steamships monthly from Great Britain, and not one from the United States! And yet I believe we are in the habit of calling ourselves an enterprising people. With rare exceptions the same condition of affairs is general in all the ports of our southern neighbors.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit some remarks in reply to the statement of the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. Conger,] to the effect that the legislation of this House in reference to the consular service has tended to destroy the efficiency of that service and to cripple our foreign commerce. This point was urged by the gentleman with some zeal. Facts are much more important than unsupported declarations in reference to a matter of this kind. If gentlemen will examine the facts in regard to the amount of our exports for the last eight years they will find that during the time the democrats have had a majority in this House our exports instead of decreasing have largely increased under the legislation enacted by this House and the Senate. I have made a comparison of the amount of our exports during eight years ending June 30, 1879. I have not the statement for the year closing June 30, 1880. Taking these eight years ending June 30, 1879, I find that for the four years during which the democratic House made appropriations for the consular service the whole amount of our exports was $2,632,000,000 in round numbers, as given in the American Almanac for 1880, compiled by Mr. Spofford; and during the four preceding years, when the legislation of both Houses was under the control of the republican party, the whole amount of our exports was $2,292,000,000, showing an increase during the four years of democratic legislation of nearly $340,000,000. The following statement will show the exact figures for than unsupported declarations in reference to a matter of this kind. $340,000,000. The following statement will show the exact figures for

Mr. DUNNELL. Will the gentleman yield a moment? He states that this increase has resulted from democratic legislation. I would like him to state what laws passed since the democrats have been in power have caused this increase.

Mr. SPRINGER. I was answering the point made by the gentleman from Michigan to the effect that the legislation of the democratic party has almost ruined our export trade; that we have legislated in such a manner as to deprive this country of the advantages it should enjoy in sending its products abroad. I was answering that argument. I showed, notwithstanding the fact that the democratic party had made the appropriations for the consular system during all this time, yet our exports were continually increasing, and for four years had increased more than $339,000,000.

It is not our legislation in reference to the particular salary a consul receives, whether $2,000 or $2,500 a year, that makes the demand abroad for American products and the articles of our manufacture. It is not that, sir; for trade is governed by a higher, a more impor-tant law than the amount of salary paid to consuls abroad. The laws of trade, of demand and supply, regulate this whole matter. I admit that commerce can be crippled by unfriendly legislation; but that is not unfriendly legislation which endeavors to secure efficiency in the administration of our consular laws at a reasonable salary for the services of the consul.

I am in favor of encouraging commerce with foreign nations. in favor of having a representative of the Government of the United States in every commercial port and city in the world, and I am in favor of paying him a reasonable compensation for his service. But, sir, I am opposed to using this important arm of the service as an asylum for broken-down politicians.

Mr. HISCOCK. Does the gentleman from Illinois know of any abuse of that kind he desires to have corrected?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do. Mr. HISCOCK. Let him, then, suggest it by amendment to this

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the honorable gentleman from New York has himself made in Committee on Appropriations the proper amendment to provide remedy for all such abuses. He is a member of that committee, and I am not. The appointing power has more to do with this than legislation.

I am not complaining of this bill. I hope it remedies all abuses. I could, if time permitted, point out many abuses in the consular service which have come under my observation during the five years of my legislative experience. They are, I am glad to say, being corrected, at least some of them.

Mr. EINSTEIN. I do not quite catch the drift of the argument of the gentleman from Illinois, and I should like to ask whether, from his preceding remarks, he takes the position that our exports for the last four or six years have increased because the Senate and House of Representatives became democratic, or because of the law of supply and demand, the crops here being so enormous and more than we could use and the crops in Europe and elsewhere having failed, thus creating an unusual demand? Does he mean it is because of better democratic an unusual demand? Does he mean it is because of better democratic legislation during the last four or six years?

Mr. SPRINGER. What does the gentleman say is the reason?

Mr. EINSTEIN. I am asking the gentleman from Illinois the question; he made the assertion, and I did not quite catch the drift of his argument.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desired the benefit of the gentleman's answer, because I wished to use his reply against the gentleman from Michigan in addition to what I have said.

Mr. EINSTEIN. I am happy to be of service to my friend from

Mr. Elakitelik. I am happy to be of service to my friend from Illinois in allowing my answer to be turned in reply to the gentleman from Michigan, if that can be done.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Michigan made the point that our legislation was destroying our commerce, breaking it down, and I was endeavoring to show that our exports had continually inand I was endeavoring to show that our exports had continually increased during the time the democratic party had had control of the legislation of the two Houses of Congress and made apprepriations for the consular and other services of the Government.

Mr. EINSTEIN. That is the question I wished to ask the gentleman from Illinois: whether he thought it was the law of demand and supply, bad crops in Europe and good crops here, that caused these larger exportations from this country, or that it arose altogether from better legislation by the democratic party during the last four years?

Mr. SPRINGER. I made the point that the democratic legislation had not injured the commerce of this country at all, but that, on the contrary, while the democratic party held control of the two Houses of Congress our commerce had flourished more than ever before; that, in other words, there has been a very large increase during the time in other words, there has been a very large increase during the time the democratic party has made the appropriations for the consular and other services of the Government.

Mr. EINSTEIN. I am glad to know the democratic party has not injured our commerce.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes; and I wish the gentleman to remember that.
Mr. EINSTEIN. It is a satisfaction to this side of the House that there is one thing at least of importance to the country it has not in-

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman will find a great many other things that democratic legislation has not injured, if he will only study the subject up.

Mr. EINSTEIN. I am trying to find it.
Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman has a subject before him that will occupy the rest of his congressional career.
Mr. EINSTEIN. In finding it?
Mr. SPRINGER. It will occupy the gentleman's time in learning what he seems to have neglected.
Mr. EINSTEIN. In looking for that to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes; in learning what I have stated. I am afraid he has not been as diligent in searching in this direction as he might have been.

The assertion, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that the economies of the democratic House of Representatives have crippled the commerce of the country is absolutely exploded by the fact, unquestioned and apparent to all, that during the control by the democratic party of the two Houses of Congress our commerce has largely increased, as I have shown.

Further than that, it is said our legislation has injured the country in other respects. When were we more prosperous than now? When did United States 4 per cent. bonds sell for 111 as they now do? When have we negotiated a loan of the United States to as good an advantage to the country as since the democratic party has had control of the legislation of the House of Representatives? When have our exports been so large? When has our commerce been more advan-tageous to us? When have times been more prosperous than since the democratic party got control of the legislation of the country Gentlemen say we are going to have a change now—
Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. When did we have more silver in the country?

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks the question, When was there ever so much silver? There never was more silver and gold in circulation than there is at this time. Never Notwithstanding, therefore, the lamentations of the gentleman from Michigan, equal to those of Jeremiah and the prophets; notwithstanding the lamentations that the gentleman and his friends have indulged in before the country during the last election, all business in this country is prosperous, and there never was a period of greater prosperity than now. Commerce is more extensive, exports are greater, business of every kind more remunerative than ever before.

Mr. HEILMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow me to ask

Mr. HEILMAN. Will the gentleman if all of these things Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.
Mr. HEILMAN. I wish to ask the gentleman if all of these things have not been brought about in spite of the democratic party?
Mr. SPRINGER. I will answer the gentleman. They have been brought about in spite of the legislation of the republican party for

Mr. HEILMAN. You are certainly mistaken.

Mr. SPRINGER. And by the economies and legislation of democratic Congresses, and by the bountiful gifts of Providence, in the cratic Congresses, and by the bountiful gifts of Providence, in the shape of good crops, a foreign demand for our products, and by foreign and domestic peace.

I want to call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that it was under republican rule and when their tariff law that they have boasted so much about was in full force and effect, and had been for a long time, in the year 1873, that the greatest crisis that ever happened to the commercial interests of this country, a crisis that prostrated and destroyed business interests of every kind, took place. At that time, Mr. Chairman, republican legislation and republican tariffs failed to save us from financial distress unexampled. save us from financial distress unexampled.

Mr. HEILMAN. Will the gentleman allow another question?
Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir.
Mr. HEILMAN. Was not this trouble that the gentleman talks about brought about by democratic legislation that plunged this country into a war costing hundreds of millions of dollars and destroying every interest almost that the country had?
Mr. SPRINGER. "Still harping on my daughter." Nothing can be said in reference to business in reference to exports in reference.

Mr. SPRINGER. "Still harping on my daughter." Nothing can be said in reference to business, in reference to exports, in reference to imports, in reference to tariff legislation of any kind, that some gentleman upon the other side does not get up in his seat and say "Did not that happen on account of the rebellion?" That seems to be an answer satisfactory to the gentleman for every injury that republican legislation has brought upon the country.

Mr. HEILMAN. You know better than that. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. The rebellion, Mr. Chairman, had been over more than eight years when the crash of 1873 took place, and both Houses of Congress had been for long years in possession and under the control of the republican party as also had been the Administration.

Mr. HAWK. I desire to ask the gentleman, my colleague, a question for information if he will permit me.

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. HAWK. I desire to know in what particular has the democratic party or has the democracy since they have been in power in Congress modified the tariff? The gentleman has referred to the blessings conferred upon the country through democratic legislation. Now, I would like to know that for my own benefit.

Mr. SPRINGER. I can refer the gentleman to one instance, at all events, where the tariff has been taken off of quinine, [laughter on the republican side,] so that my republican friends on the other side could get free quinine when they found themselves shaking with the

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him how much has been paid to England by our people for quinine since democratic legislation took the tariff off of it?

Mr. SPRINGER. I suppose the gentleman knows about as much on that subject as I do. I have no statistics on the subject before me and no means of informing him.

Mr. KEIFER. If the gentleman does not know I will state to him that we paid more for quinine since the duty was taken off than we that we paid more for quinine since the duty was taken off than we did before, quinine being higher now than before the tariff was taken off, and not a dime goes into the Treasury on account of it. Quinine is dearer to-day than it was before the tariff was taken off or for years before.

Mr. SPRINGER. Very well; that may be all very true, for the few persons engaged in the manufacture of quinine in this country, who have made vast fortunes out of it by reason of a protective tariff, are enabled to get up a corner in it and thus prevent dealers from getting it excepting by paying high rates to them. That is their way of showing the necessity of a protective tariff upon it. There is an argument which some persons pretend to maintain, which holds that the higher the tariff, or tax, the lower the price of the taxed commodity to the consumer, and the lower the tax the higher the price. I never, with my limited knowledge, could understand it. If any gentlemen on the other side believe that the reduction or abolition of the tax on quinine raised the price, I have no objection. It would follow that quinine would be higher without a protective tariff than with it. The quinine would be higher without a protective tariff than with it. The quinine would be higher without a protective tariff than with it. The manufacturer ought, therefore, to favor free trade in that article.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Quinine was cheaper until the war in Peru made bark higher.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have very little use for quinine and am not able to give further information to the gentleman on that subject.

Mr. HAWK. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question again? I desire to ask him in regard to the claim of the democratic party in reference to its tariff legislation of which he has spoken; I want to know what they have done in that regard.

Mr. SPRINGER. In what regard?

Mr. HAWK. In what respect have you modified the tariff?

Mr. SPRINGER. I have already stated that they have taken the duty off of quinine, but it is not expected that that would revolutionize the world. tionize the world.

ionize the world.

Mr. HAWK. I am simply asking my colleague for information, inasmuch as he has stated that the tariff cut a great figure in reference to the democratic legislation and democratic economy. I desire to know and I wish him to state in what respect they have modified it?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, if general debate is closed upon this bill, I propose now to ask that it be read by paragraphs for debate under the five-minute rule, if the gentleman from Illinois has yielded the floor.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have been holding the floor simply to answer the question of my colleague.

Mr. HAWK. The question I desired to ask was in view of the state-

Mr. HAWK. The question I desired to ask was in view of the statement made by my colleague, that, during the time that the republican party had control of the Government, it was the tariff legislation which precipitated our troubles in 1873, and that this crisis of 1873 was attributed largely to our tariff. Now, I desire to ask him what modifications of that tariff have been made since that time to remedy the evils of which he complains?

Mr. SPRINGER. My colleague is probably as well advised upon that subject as I am. I did not say that the tariff legislation of the republican party caused the crisis of 1873. I said that the crisis came when those laws were in full force and effect, and when the republican party had controlled the legislation of the country for thirteen years; that the republican party could not claim that their rule was necessary to prosperity; that our greatest distress came when that years; that the republican party could not claim that their rule was necessary to prosperity; that our greatest distress came when that party was in full control of all the departments of the Government. That is the point I made, and that is the truth of history. My colleague is as well advised in reference to that matter as I am myself.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I suppose that general debate has run as long as desired upon this bill. I now ask that the bill be read by sections, and as soon as the first section is read I will move that the committee rise with a view to adjournment. [Cries of "Oh, no; pass the bill to night."] I thought it was desired, perhaps, on the part of gentlemen that we should adjourn. I much prefer to pass the bill to night, if it can be done. I move, then, that the bill be now taken up and considered by sections.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment. No amendment was offered.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment. No amendment was offered.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I move that the committee now rise and report this bill to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Hill reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 6212). 6613) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House without amendment and to recommend that the bill be passed.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I call the previous question on the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered;

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time. The question was upon the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. On the passage of this bill the rule requires the vote to be taken by yeas and nays, and the Clerk will now call the roll. The question was taken; and there were—yeas 140, nays 2, not voting 149; as follows:

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to present, by request, a petition of citizens of Missouri and Kansas in regard to the Indian Territory. As the petition is short, I ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on Territories

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will be read at length. The petition was read, as follows:

ON THE STATE LINE OF KANSAS, December 13, 1880.

To the Members of Congress:

To the Members of Congress:

We respectfully represent that we are loyal citizens of the United States; that we have started on our way to the public lands in the Indian Territory; that when we reached the line of the Territory we found ourselves confronted by soldiers of the Army, who ordered us not to cross said line. We have, out of respect to our Government, obeyed said order; but we feel that a great wrong and outrage is being done us. We therefore respectfully petition you for such relief as will enable us to continue on our journey to settle the public lands, to build up homes, open schools and churches. We go actuated by no sentiment of lawlessness, but believe we in law and justice have the right to occupy these lands, as the Government has purchased these lands; and, in the words of the law, the Indian title is extinguished.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Territories.

mittee on Territories.

Mr. INGALLS. I would call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to the fact that petitions and bills on that subject have heretofore been referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I have no special preference as to the course that this paper shall take, but the subject is one that that committee has previously had under consideration and I think it is now before it.

eration and I think it is now before it.

Mr. HARRIS. It seems to me obvious that the petition ought to go to the Committee on Indian Affairs rather than the Committee on Territories; and I make that suggestion to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. I had not even read the petition; I presented it by request, as it is the right of the people to petition. I was requested to have it referred to the Committee on Territories, and I presumed that committee would have jurisdiction as it relates to the public lands in the Territory of the United States.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask what course has been taken with the petition?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was referred to the Committee on Territories at the request of the Senator from Missouri. Does the Senator from Kansas make any motion?

tor from Kansas make any motion

tor from Kansas make any motion?

Mr. INGALLS. The question, I think, is before the Senate. The only reason offered by the Senator from Missouri why the subject should go to the Committee on Territories was that the person handing him the petition requested that it might take that direction. I understand it to be the right of any citizen to petition the Senate or the House, but I do not understand that a petitioner has a right to control the action of the Senate as to the committee that shall have charge of the subject. I shall ask the opinion of the Senate, in view of the very great importance of this question that has arisen, whether it is not proper that the subject should go to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I therefore move, if it is not too late, that the petition be referred to that committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is first on the motion of the Senator from Missouri that the petition just read be referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. GARLAND. Let the petition be read again.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be again reported.
The Chief Clerk again read the petition.
Mr. GARLAND. The petition might very well go to one of three committees. I am not very clear in my mind as to which one it ought to be referred to. The Senator from Kansas is aware that we have had to be referred to. The Senator from Kansas is aware that we have had several difficulties about questions of this sort in reference to this particular country, as to what committee should take jurisdiction of them. The proper disposition to make of the petition, in my judgment, is this: there is a bill pending in the Senate, reported by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Vest] from the Committee on Territories, involving everything that is presented by this petition. The petition should probably lie upon the table, to be called up when that bill is to be acted upon by the Senate. I speak in reference to this matter with perfect indifference, because I have no object in wishing the petition to go to the Committee on Territories. I never heard of the petition before it was sent to the desk by the Senator from Missouri. I do not intend to interfere in this matter one way or the souri. I do not intend to interfere in this matter one way or the other, because last session we had something of an unpleasant en-counter upon the question of referring a petition to the Committee on the Judiciary or the Committee on Territories. I am indifferent as to what committee this petition goes; but I make the statement that there is already a bill pending before the Senate involving every question, and more too, that is embodied in the petition.

Mr. INGALLS. I have no objection to the petition lying on the

Mr. HOAR. I present the petition of Esek Saunders, an eminent manufacturer in Worcester County, Massachusetts, and also a num-ber of other manufacturers in that State; also the petition of Edmund ber of other manufacturers in that State; also the petition of Edmund White, treasurer of the Boston Manufacturing Company; of the American Watch Company; the China, Webster, and Pembroke Mills, and agents representing the Dudley Mills, the Ætna Mills, and a good many others; also the petition of the Merrimac Manufacturing Company, by C. H. Dalton, its treasurer, the large manufacturing companies in Lowell, representing many millions of manufacturing and commercial capital, all asking for a national bankrupt law. I desire to say, in the hearing of the Judiciary Committee, that so far as the public sentiment of the business men of New England is concerned, who are engaged in commerce and in manufactures, it is. I believe. who are engaged in commerce and in manufactures, it is, I believe, substantially unanimous in the desire that a just and well-considered bankrupt law is of great public necessity and will much advantage business and the credit of the whole country.

There were objections to the details of the bankrupt law which

There were objections to the details of the bankrupt law which was repealed two years ago, which led to a great division of sentiment in regard to the expediency of retaining that law upon the statute book; but I believe there is no division whatever of sentiment in the community which I represent in regard to the desirableness of a bankrupt law containing substantially the arrangements of the bill drafted by Judge Lowell of the United States circuit court. That is an extremely lenient law to the debtor, and provides against the great expense which, under the other bankrupt law, ate up the estates without any benefit either to the debtor or creditor.

I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on the Judicioner.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4646) for the relief of the heirs of Cornelius Boyle, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HARRIS. The Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. No. 1748) to compensate the trustees which was referred the bill (S. No. 1748) to compensate the trustees of the Louise Home for certain improvements and for damages to real estate, have considered the same and arrived at the conclusion that the claim was meritorious; but pending its consideration I received a note from Mr. W. W. Corcoran saying that, while he regarded the claim as perfectly just and proper, it was repugnant to his feelings, as the founder of that charity, to have Congress asked even to refund the moneys that he had so expended, and he asked me to have the bill withdrawn, and to also withdraw the papers in order that they might be returned to the trustees. I ask that the bill may be indefinitely postponed, at the request of Mr. Corcoran, and also ask leave to withdraw the papers in order that they may be returned.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reports back the bill named by him with the recommendation that the further consideration of it be indefinitely postponed, and that the petition and accompanying it be indefinitely postponed, and that the petition and accompanying papers, with the bill, be withdrawn and returned. If there be no papers, with the bill, be withdrawn and returned. If there be no objection it is so ordered.

Mr. BUTLER, from the Select Committee on the Yorktown Centennial Celebration, to whom the subject was referred, reported a joint resolution (S. R. No. 137) to create a commission for the performance of certain duties under the act of Congress providing for the erection of a monument at Yorktown and the proposed centennial celebration; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 136) declaring certain unocto introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 130) declaring certain undercupied lands in the Indian Territory, to which the Indian title has been extinguished, subject to settlement under the homestead and pre-emption laws; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL. I introduce this joint resolution by request, and as the matter is probably before the Senate in the shape of a bill, reported from a committee, I ask that it lie on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will lie on the table.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

Mr. FERRY. Additional papers having come to the Committee on Finance in the matter of the bill (S. No. 436) for the relief of Charles Clinton, reported by me adversely from that committee March 16, 1880, I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Fi-

The motion was agreed to.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. KERNAN, it was Ordered. That the papers in the case of Eugene C. Johnson be taken from the files of the Senate and be returned to the petitioner.

COMMITTEE ON CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. VEST submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Vice-President is hereby authorized to fill by appointment the vacancies existing in the special committee to examine the different branches of the civil service; and that said committee be authorized to send for persons and papers and to employ a stenographer, if deemed necessary.

PROVIDENCE CUSTOM-HOUSE LOT.

Mr. BURNSIDE. At the last session of Congress the Senate passed a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase land adjacent to the custom-house in the city of Providence, Rhode Island. In that bill the description of the land intended to be purchased was left out. I introduced the identical bill at this session of Congress, and it was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. That bill contains a provise to provide for the purchase of this additional ground, but does not change the amount; in fact, it is the identical bill passed before, with the single exception that the United States gets just so much more land by the purchase. The bill has been reported favorably by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and I ask the Senate, in order to perfect the previous bill, to take this bill up for consideration this morning.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the Calendar.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I hope the Senator from Missouri will not insist

Mr. BURNSIDE. I hope the Senator from Missouri will not insist upon the regular order. It will take but a moment to consider this bill. It is the identical bill that passed last year, with a slight correction. I beg to ask the Senator from Missouri, if he will give me his attention for one moment, not to interpose an objection. The bill that I speak of is the identical bill that was passed at the last session. There was a clause left out which provided for the purchase of the wharf lot on the square opposite this lot, and this bill simply perfects the bill which was formerly passed. It provides for the purchase of this additional land, but does not change the amount. It simply corrects a mistake made in the introduction of the original bill, and gives the United States, if the bill becomes a law, more land than would be purchased under the original bill. I beg the Senator to withdraw his objection for a moment in order that this bill may pass through and go to the other House to take the place of the other bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. I withdraw the objection.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1888) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase land adjacent to the custom-house in the city of Providence, Rhode Island.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

Mr. McPHERSON. I desire to call up for consideration Senate bill No. 1206.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have the Calendar, Mr. President.
Mr. WITHERS. I call for the regular order.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded, which is the consideration of the Calendar of General Orders under the An-the consideration of the Calendar of General Orders under the Anthony rule.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I ask to take up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution of the House of Representatives in reference to adjournment for the holidays was rejected. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania calls up the motion of the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. INGALIS,] entered on Friday last, to reconsider the vote by which the Senate disagreed to the resolution of the House of Representatives relative to a recess.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the resolution be read, so that we shall know precisely what it is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Sanate concurring.) That when the two Houses of Congress adjourn on Wednesday, the 22d instant, it shall be to meet on Wednesday, the 5th day of January next.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senate reconsider the vote by which it disagreed to this resolution?

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I voted against this resolution the other day when it was under discussion; but I have since become satisfied that I was laboring under one of those childish delusions which are apt to affect a juvenile Senator, and I withdraw further opposition so far as I am concerned, and will vote to help everybody opposition so far as I am concerned, and will vote to help everybody out of the city as rapidly as possible.

Mr. THURMAN. I was confined by sickness to my house when the matter was under consideration before the Senate, and therefore could not attend, and my vote is not recorded. As I am very much opposed to the resolution as it came from the House, and want to oppose it by my vote, I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to reconsider.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORRILL. I voted for the resolution before simply on the ground that I believe there will not be a quorum present during the holidays, as I understand there was not a quorum present in the other House on Saturday on the last vote taken on the passage of a bill. I shall be in the city and I have no objection to being in the Senate every day, but I do not believe there is going to be a quorum present every day, but I do not believe there is going to be a quorum present in either House.

Mr. WHYTE. I was engaged, under the permission of the Senate, in the room of the District of Columbia Committee on the municipal in the room of the District of Columbia Committee on the municipal code of the District at the time that, the resolution was last up, and therefore my vote is not recorded on the subject. I agree with the Senator from Vermont that an attempt to hold Congress tegether without the usual Christmas holidays will be a folly. More than that, I am one of those who believe that the country is not hurt a great deal when Congress does adjourn, and therefore I propose to vote in favor of the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. The Christmas season is one which, by the customs of a very large part of the Christian world, is devoted to religious observances and to family gatherings. It has been the custom of the Congress of the United States for many years to recognize this desire, which amounts to a religious feeling in so many minds, to have families united at their homes at that season, where it is possible. Containly any Seaster who moved to adjoin the Seaster in its have families united at their homes at that season, where it is possible. Certainly any Senator who moved to adjourn the Senate in its busiest season last year to attend a horse-race will respect this feeling on the part of those who entertain it for the Christmas season. Mr. THURMAN rose.

Mr. RANSOM, (to Mr. THURMAN.) You did not do that.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not know who did it, nor do I care who did it. If the Senator from Massachusetts pretends to insinuate that there is any want of respect for Christmas Day on the part of any Senator here, he is in a lamentable state of ignorance indeed about the feelings of his brother Senators. I do not suppose there is a Senator here who would object to adjourning over Christmas. Nobody does that; nor is there one here who will object to adjourning over New Year's Day; but I cannot believe that it is necessary for us to adjeurn for two weeks, and that at the risk of having an extra session of Congress, in order to pay respect to any day whatever. I am willing to pay respect to the day mentioned by the Senator from Massachusetts, and I am willing to adjourn over for the other holiday, the first day of the year, and that is about as far as I am willing to go. We have plenty of work to do and very little time to do it in, and if we do not want an extra session of Congress I think we had better not throw away two weeks of our time.

we do not want an extra session of Congress I think we had better not throw away two weeks of our time.

Mr. WITHERS. I am in favor of the recess. I voted for the resolution the other day, but the majority of the Senate having apparently a spasmodic attack of industry voted it down; but in the course of the session of that day they voted to adjourn over Saturday, thereby entirely destroying the force of the argument that it was indispensable that we should work every day which we could have in order to dispose of the business of the Senate.

Mr. THURMAN. Will my friend allow me to interrupt him right there?

there?

Mr. WITHERS. Certainly.

Mr. THURMAN. It is one thing to adjourn over for two weeks and go off to New York, Baltimore, Philadelphia, or Boston, and it is another thing to adjourn over from Friday to Monday and spend your time at work in committee, or in the Departments, or wherever you have work to do, or in the early part of the session when Senators have to look around for their accommodations for the winter. I have have to look around for their accommodations for the winter. I have always believed we gained by adjourning over from Friday to Monday, because it gave us more time to do that work which was necessary in committee or the Departments or what our own private affairs required. But that is one thing, and a two weeks' holiday is another. Mr. WITHERS. It is very true, as the Senator from Ohio has stated, that they are two different things; but unfortunately for the argument which was made here successfully on Friday that it was imperatively necessary that we should devote our whole time and attention every day to the end of the session in order to make an impression upon our already large Calendar, the subsequent vote of the Senate agreeing to adjourn over on Saturday, in my judgment, entirely neutralized the effect of that argument.

If it were necessary that we should have meetings of the commit-these in order to prepare business for this body, I would say that the argument of the Senator from Ohio was perfectly logical; but inasmuch as we have already a far greater amount of business upon the Calendar than it is possible to dispose of, I think the idea that it is necessary in order to enable committees to report business is a falla-

I myself have favored the proposition to adjourn because I believe that we shall transact just as much public business if we take the usual Christmas recess as if we refuse to do so, from the fact that we shall in all probability be left without a quorum. Several of my friends, I know, who voted against the proposition to adjourn the other day have gone home; others expect to do so; and I myself had rather meet the responsibility at once and vote in favor of the reso-

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the gentlemen who are anxious for this holiday will give me any assurance that upon reconsideration they will propose an amendment to take a recess for one week only, I shall be glad to aid them. It is usual always to take a holiday during Christ-mas week. The boys and the negroes in old slave times expected always one full week of holiday, and I do not see why "grave and reverend seigniors" should demand more than the servants and the always one full week of holiday, and I do not see why "grave and reverend seigniors" should demand more than the servants and the boys. If any gentleman will give me an assurance that he intends to move an amendment to take one week's holiday, say from next Friday until Monday week, I would vote for the reconsideration. Unless some gentleman will give me that assurance, I shall vote against the reconsideration. With that assurance I shall vote for it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator from Kentucky will allow me I will say that I am about half on his side and that of the Senator from Ohio, although I have found by several years' experience that it did not amount to anything, but still I believe in the theory. Therefore if this vote is reconsidered I shall move, if nobody else does, to make the adjournment begin on Thursday, which is two days before Christmas, in order to allow gentlemen time to get home to their Christmas festivities, and to have the session begin again on Monday, the 3d of January, Saturday being the first day and Sunday the second, so that Monday is the first working day.

Mr. BLAINE. We cannot get back.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We can get back from Christmas I think without any serious difficulty unless we go too far.

Mr. BLAINE. This is the eighteenth winter that I have personally witnessed this exact form of discussion. It always runs about the same length, it has about the same fervor and the same vote one way, to be backed out of the next day; and it always ends in precisely the same length, it has about the same lervor and the same vote one way, to be backed out of the next day; and it always ends in precisely the same way as this will end. I am so situated that a vacation is of little consequence to me, for I do not want to leave the city; at least I am under no obligation to leave. I am living here and it is just as easy for me to attend the Capitol daily as not; but I know that it is perfectly impossible to devote the Christmas holidays to work. It has become a part of the common law of Congress to have a holiday

As to what the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIAMS] says, how can any one guarantee to him that upon a reconsideration any action will be taken? He has the right to make a motion to amend; that is all he can ask. We cannot pledge in advance what will be done is all he can ask. We cannot pledge in advance what will be done on a reconsideration.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will take the Senator's statement.

Mr. MAXEY. I have voted ever since I have been in the Senate against these long recesses and against the Thursday adjournments to Monday. It is especially important, it seems to me, that during the short session where we have, as we all know, more work upon the Calendar than we can do by occupying all reasonable time, that we should devote the great body of that time to business. I am willing to adjourn for Christmas Day and for New Year's Day, but the long adjournment proposed is unnecessary and wholly disadvantageous in my judgment to the public business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate reconsider the vote by which the resolution was rejected? upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRIS, (when his name was called.) Upon this question I was paired with the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. Paddock,] but my colleague, [Mr. Balley,] who agrees with me upon this question, is necessarily absent this morning, and I will transfer the pair of the Senator from Nebraska and make it with my colleague. I will therefore record my wate "ner". fore record my vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced-yeas 31, nays 29; as follows:

Allison, Anthony, Baldwin, Bayard, Blaine, Blair.	Burnside, Cameron of Pa., Cameron of Wis., Davis of Illinois, Dawes, Edmunds,	Hoar, Johnston, Kellogg, Kirkwood, Logan, McMillan.	Y	Platt, Ransom, Saunders Teller, Whyte,

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs, Will the Senate gree to the resolution?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I move to amend the resolution by striking out the words "Wednesday, the 22d," and inserting "Thursday, the 23d," and by striking out "Wednesday, the 5th," and inserting "Monday, the 3d," so as to read:

That when the two Houses of Congress adjourn on Thursday, the 23d instant, it all be to meet on Monday, the 3d day of January next.

shall be to meet on Monday, the 3d day of January next.

Mr. HOAR. I appeal to the Senator from Vermont to make the day of reassembling Tuesday instead of Monday. If he makes it Monday, there will be hardly anybody here, and it will require traveling on Sunday. I move to amend by substituting "Tuesday, the 4th," for "Monday, the 3d" day of January next.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.]

Mr. HOAR. I hope that will be agreed to by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. McDONALD. Congress always meets on Monday in regular session, and there is never any difficulty in meeting on that day. I do not see why we cannot meet on that day after our recess without any trouble. I hope the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts will not be agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. It has been said by some Senators, and especially by will not be agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. It has been said by some Senators, and especially by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. Thurman,] that there was entire willingness to have the New Year's Day holiday respected. It is a legal holiday, I think. Now, to be here on Monday will require the leaving home of many Senators before that time and traveling on New Year's Day, or else traveling on Sunday. As to the case of the session beginning on Monday, that is at the end of the long summer interval when Senators like to get here a few days before, and are in the city by Saturday night; but it cuts off the New Year's holiday altogether to compel Senators to be back by Monday morning. I hope my proposition or suggestion will be assented to.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, it has been anneunced here twice by Senators that there is no quorum left in the House. How are you going to have this change concurred in? The House was not unanimous on this resolution. Any one gentleman can step it in the House who is opposed to the recess, if you send it back with an amendment. The Senators who desire a recess and who find it necessary to have one, will secure it by voting to concur in the House resolution; otherwise they put it in the power of a single member of the House to stop the matter by an objection.

whise they part to the flower of a single member of the flower to stop the matter by an objection.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. No Senator here knows better than the Senator from Maine that we ought not to refer to the other end of the Capitol for effect upon the Senate.

of the Capitol for effect upon the Senate.

Mr. BLAINE. I was not the first to do it. I was correcting a misapprehension which two other Senators had made; and that is always parliamentary. In showing the effect of the vote of the Senate in view of what others had indiscreetly stated, I was wholly within the rules, I beg my honorable friend to observe.

Mr. BAYARD. I hope the Senate will take this recess and for the time proposed by the House of Representatives. The question is a practical question and to be considered fairly. The object is not to delay public business but to enable the members of this body to take part in the general holiday of thanksgiving and of good feeling which comes around at Christmas time. Therefore in voting for this resolution why not secure the result that the co-ordinate branch of Congress has already reached and without jeoparding the passage of Congress has already reached and without jeoparding the passage of the resolution to which in some shape or form the Senate seems now to have given a consent.

There are many gentlemen in this body whose homes lie distant from Washington, and the object of adjourning in advance of Christmas Day is to allow them an opportunity to reach their homes, and we should allow them time to return. I would not try to transact public business when I thought the Senate was thin because of the absence of gentlemen who, anticipating the holidays, had gone home in time to enjoy them and who were not able to return by the day fixed. It is a practical fact that whatever day you fix for adjournment there will be a sensible diminution of the attendance of members of this body for several days before that time. It is also a fact that whatever day you fix for the reconvention of the Senate there will be many Senators absent on that day if you fix it at such a period that they cannot conveniently return after the termination of the legal holiday. Therefore it is, treating this question as a matter of practical sense, that I do not think there will be twenty-four hours of legislative service subtracted from the public use by amending this resolution of the House; and desiring that the Christmas holidays should always be respected in this country, I propose to vote for the time proposed by the House

Mr. SAUNDERS. I am as anxious as any Senator here to get along with the business we have before us, but I have observed with the Senator from Maine for a number of years that when one House proposes such an adjournment the other opposes it for a while, and finally in every case the holiday has been granted. If we give a holiday at all we ought to give it so as to accommodate the members of Congress. all we ought to give it so as to accommodate the members of Congress. Senators and Representatives who live as far off as I do, if we do not adjourn so as to get away on Wednesday, cannot reach home by Friday. Unless I leave here myself on Wednesday evening I cannot get home by Saturday. If we are to have a holiday at all for the purpose of accommodating the members, it seems to me we ought to adjourn as early as Wednesday, even if we meet at an earlier day than is spoken of; but I think myself it is better to take the resolution as it was passed by the House, and therefore I shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Mr. President, we have always taken a recess for the Christmas holidays, and, like the Senator from Maine, I am in favor of the resolution as it came from the House. The Senator from Vermont proposes to amend this resolution in two particulars, and they certainly are unimportant. He makes the day of adjournment one day further off, Thursday, although it is very immaterial to him, because he lives here, whether it is Thursday or Wednesday. New England geutlemen can get home if you adjourn on Thursday, day. New England gentlemen can get home if you adjourn on Thursday, in time for Christmas Day, but those of us who live in the West cannot do it. The Senator from lowa cannot get to his home in time, neither can I; but I do not propose to go home, and I can be here on the 3d day of January. I am giving a recess for the benefit of my brethren who live in the West and do want to go home, and there are plenty of them who want to go home. Now, sir, if they are to enjoy their Christmas holidays you ought to adjourn on Wednesday, and, as the Senator from Massachusetts has very well said, New Year's Day is recognized as a holiday throughout the whole country; it is a legal holiday and almost everyhody who is at home on Christmas wants to holiday, and almost everybody who is at home on Christmas wants to be at home on New Year's Day, and gentlemen cannot even by traveling on Sunday from my country get here on Monday, the 3d of January, and cui bono? What particular object is there in shortening the time a day or two when everybody can get here by Wednesday, the 5th of January?

I am not of the opinion of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Beck] that this recess is to cause an extra session of Congress. I believe, for one, that there is too much legislation, a great deal too much legis lation, and that there are very few important measures that can be got through at this short session of Congress. If we pass the appropriation bills and take the sense of Congress upon a funding bill, there will be no necessity for an extra session of Congress, and I should suppose that the incoming Administration would not be over-anxious to have a special session of Congress.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I believe that I may plead as an excuse for troubling the Senate with any remarks on this question, that it is the first time I have ever done it. I do not remember ever before to have spoken on this important question of a recess for the holidays. My friend from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] makes the very best argument that could be made against a long recess. He says that for two or three days before the recess commences there is such inattendance in the two Houses that nothing can be done, that it takes two or three days after the recess ends before you can get a working quorum of both Houses. Then if we take a recessof two weeks, and gentlemen are in the habit of running away before it commences and of not coming back for two or three days after it ends, it is in effect of not coming back for two or three days after it ends, it is in effect giving up three weeks of this session.

Now, a word in respect to what was said by the Senator from Massachusetts about not getting back here. Why, Mr. President, next Saturday is Christmas Day, and any one can observe that day and observe the next day, Sunday, and then he can have Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of next week to get back here. Here is a whole week to get back; and then he can be here on New Year's Day, and we all know that whatever the recess may be a large majority of the Senate and of the House, too, will be here on New Year's Day. They prefer to spend New Year's Day in Washington to spending it elsewhere. It is a gayer day here, a brighter day, and there is more observance of it, more amusement than anywhere and there is more observance of it, more amusement than anywhere else on this continent; and they will be back here, and will be back in good season, so as to enjoy their New Year's Day in the capital.

Mr. President, I think that what we ought to do would be to adjourn over from Thursday of this week until next Monday or Tuesday, and toward the close of next week adjourn over New Year's Day, Saturday of next week. Thus we could save nearly two weeks of the work of this session.

I for one am very apprehensive that things are drifting so as to make a pretext for an extra session of Congress, and I for one do not want it. I do not think there is any necessity for it, and I do not think it ought to be done.

As to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont, I believe that it saves three days. If the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts is adopted we only save two days. We might as well take the resolution as it came from the House as to take either one of the amendments. You cannot give a vacation to gratify every member. You cannot give a recess that will allow a man from the Pacific coast to go home, or will allow our friends from Texas to go home, or will allow even my friend from Iowa to go home; he does not want to go; he is afraid of getting snowed up. Therefore there is no necessity for making it two weeks in order that people may get around their own firesides, as gentlemen poetically say. One half the Senate cannot get around their own firesides except here in the city of Washington.

Mr. President. I think the best way to dispose of the matter before

Mr. President, I think the best way to dispose of the matter before us is to lay the resolution on the table. I make that motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio moves to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator withdraw the motion?

Mr. THURMAN. I withdraw it if the Senator wishes to be heard.
Mr. DAWES. I do not feel as if I could allow this important question to go, upon which the country is so much aroused from one end to the other, without clearly defining my own position upon it before the vote is taken. It is an annual discussion, in which I am always greatly interested. This question of the length of the holiday recess is a great quickener of the legislative conscience. It is an oppor-tunity for us all to relieve ourselves of great shortcomings in our attention upon our duties here, and I have observed while I have been in Congress—I feel it myself, and so I suppose it is others feel it—that just in proportion as we feel that we have enjoyed too much leisure during the ordinary legislative days, we ought to make up for it by a strong protest against the holiday recess; and if we put it clearly before the country that, so far as we are concerned, we are opposed to the holiday recess, or at least that we will do what we can to save certainly a day at each end of it, we shall satisfy a conscience which sometimes tells us we are off too much during the ordinary course of

During my time here there have been known to be two occasions, and only two, upon which this spasm has so taken possession of us all, and our consciences therefore have pricked us so much that we must make atonement, and hence refused to have a recess. This has must make atonement, and hence refused to have a recess. This has occurred two years in twenty-four; and during those years we have marched up the hill and then marched down again, and the Record will show that not one of those days has any legislative business been done, either because there was no quorum, or because there was no disposition to do business. So it will be now; and while it is proper that we should make this sacrifice, feeling as I do for one that I had kept away in the few days that have transpired before the holiday recess altogether too much from these legislative Halls, yet I would like to satisfy the country by an opposition to this resolution. But it will not do any good. The country does not expect that there will be legislation during the holidays. It expects that there will be the recess which always has taken place; and it is wise that it should take place. The only question is whether we will cut it off at both ends so that gentlemen can neither go home before nor come back take place. The only question is whether we will cut it off at both ends so that gentlemen can neither go home before nor come back after. I am in an unfortunate position myself, and I wish to submit my case to the Senate. I live on railreads that observe the Sabbath, and it is utterly impossible for me to get out of my town or into it, as the Senator from Maine [Mr. Blaine] suggests, on Sunday. If I am unfortunate enough to be caught out of my town on Sunday I am gone, and if I am there, whatever may be the demands of this Senate, I cannot get out of it. I suggest, therefore, that the country will be satisfied if our friends will let us have time to get home before Christmas and time to get back after New Year's, and when we come back we will devote ourselves to our duties here and let outside attractions go as far as we can

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 6614), making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending Jane 30, 1882, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

REPRINTING OF A REPORT.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, at the last session of the Senate, Mr. Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, at the last session of the Senate, Mr. Pryor, then a Senator from the State of Alabama, presented a report from the Committee on Claims in a case to which he had given great attention, and I think the report was the first report made by him. By an accident at the printer's that report is printed as having been made by me, and it will pass into the bound documents of the Senate, so that I shall have appropriated and have the benefit, as far as reputation is concerned, of his labors. I am quite sure that gentleman, whose industry and learning and intelligence we all valued and respected so much, would desire to have the record of his brief legislative service preserved, and therefore I have prepared a resolution lative service preserved, and therefore I have prepared a resolution that the printed copies of that report be destroyed and that the report be reprinted correctly. The report is a brief one, and it involves an expense of only two or three dollars to make the correction. I move the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved. That the printed copies of the Senato report No. 255, presented to the second session of the Forty-sixth Congress by Mr. Pryor, then Senator from Alabama, on the petition of W. W. Busby, now in the document-room, be destroyed and the said report reprinted.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 6614) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

FUNDING OF DISTRICT CERTIFICATES.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of Senate bill No. 1681, being a bill to provide for funding the 8 per cent. improvement certificates of the District of Columbia.

Mr. McDONALD. I should like to make a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know if it is not a privileged question to call up a motion to reconsider ?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not treated as such under the rules of the Senate. A motion to reconsider the Chair always recognizes under the head of "concurrent and other resolutions."

Mr. McDONALD. But a previous motion entered to reconsider a bill or a vote by which any measure has been for the time disposed of by the Senate?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If it be a bill, whenever the Calendar of bills is reached that order will be recognized.

Mr. McDONALD. Is not a motion to reconsider a privileged ques-

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1681) to provide for funding the 8 per cent. improvement certificates of the District of Columbia.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

to insert:

That the Treasurer of the United States, as exoficio commissioner of the sinking fund of the District of Columbia, is hereby authorized and required to cause bonds of the District of Columbia to be prepared in sums of fifty and five hundred dollars, bearing date August 1, 1874, payable fifty years after date, bearing interest at the rate of 3.65 per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually, to be signed by said Treasurer as exoficio sinking-fund commissioner, and countersigned by the comptroller of said District, and sealed as the said Treasurer may direct, which bonds shall be exempt from taxation by Federal, State, or municipal authority, engraved or printed at the expense of the District of Columbia, and in form not inconsistent herewith. And the faith of the United States is hereby pledged that the United States will, by proper proportional appropriations, and by causing to be levied upon the property within said District such taxes as will provide the revenues necessary to pay the interest on said bonds as the same may become due and payable, and create a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof at maturity. Said bonds shall be numbered consecutively, beginning with the number next to the last bond that was issued under the seventh section of the act approved June 20, 1874, entitled "An act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," and shall be registered in the office of the comptroller of said District, and in the office of the Register of the Treasury of the United States.

And the Treasurer of the United States, as exoficio sinking-fund commissioner of the District of Columbia, is hereby anthorized to exchange said bonds at par, after detaching the coupons from the same up to the date of such exchange, for like sums of the 8 per cent. certificates of said District and the accrued interest thereon, issued under act of the Legislative Assembly of said District, approved May 29, 1873, and shall cause the said certificates upon redemption to be duly can

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that a brief report submitted by myself, explaining the facts in this case, be read as the explanation of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. HAR-RIS, May 17, 1880:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. No. 1681) to provide for funding the 8 per cent. improvement certificates of the District of Columbia, has had the same under consideration, and submits the following reof Columbia, has had the same under consideration, and submits the following report:

That it appears from the report of the commissioners of the District that under the act of the Legislative Assembly, approved May 29, 1873, the board of public works issued certificates of indebtedness to the amount of $2,000,000, dated July 1, 1873, bearing interest at the rate of $8 per cent. per annum, and payable in equal amounts in one, two, three, four, and five years from their date.

The interest was paid upon all of these certificates up to July 1, 1874, but no interest has been paid since that time. That $1,328,700 of these certificates have been received in payment of special assessments, and canceled, which leaves a balance outstanding of $671,300, with the interest which has accrued since July 1, 1874, amounting to about $220,000, making the aggregate of about $291,300. These certificates were issued by the board of public works to pay for certain street and avenue improvements, and the act that authorized their issue was a part of the general system of improvements inaugurated by the board of public works.

By act of June 20, 1874, Congress adopted the policy of funding the large unfunded debt, which the very liberal, not to say reckless, policy of the board of public works had fixed upon the District of Columbia, in fifty-year bonds, bearing interest at the rate of 3.65 per cent. per annum. And much the greater part of that debt has been so funded, and the committee can see no reason why these certificates should be placed on any higher ground than other evidences of indobtedness created by the same board in carrying out the same system of public works.

The committee therefore recommends that these certificates be funded in 3.65 bonds, to be issued bearing the same data and payable at the same time and on the same conditions in all respects as the 3.65 bonds heretofore issued; to accomplish which the committee reports the bill back with an amendment, and recommends that it pass as amended.

Mr. HARRIS. Since th

Mr. HARRIS. Since this substitute was reported by the Commit-Mr. HARRIS. Since this substitute was reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia, a bill has passed and become a law authorizing the issue of 3.65 bonds to settle certain claims. I therefore desire to amend that provision of the substitute which provides for numbering the bonds consecutively from the bonds last issued under the act of 1874. I propose to strike out, in line 25, the word "ninth" before "section;" in line 26, the word "sixteenth" after "June;" in the same line, to strike out "seventy-four" and insert "eighty;" and then in line 27, after the word "act," to strike out "for the government of the District of Columbia and for other purposes," and insert the following, which refers to the last set: 2 poses" and insert the following, which refers to the last act:

To provide for the settlement of outstanding claims against the District of Combia and conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear the same and for other purposes:

So as to make the clause read:

Said bonds shall be numbered consecutively, beginning with the number next to the last bond that was issued under the ninth section of the act approved June 16, 1880, entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of the outstanding claims against the District of Columbia, and conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear the same, and for other purposes," and shall be registered in the office of the comptroller of said District and in the office of the Register of the Treasury of the United States.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out "and sixty-five hundredths," where it occurs after "three," so that the rate of interest on these bonds shall be 3 per cent. As provided by this bill, these bonds are in every essential respect the bonds of the United States; our faith is pledged for their redemption, and one-half the sum is paid out of the public Treasury and the other half by taxation. These 3.65 bonds were for a long time below par. They are now, I think, 2 or 3 per cent. above par, or at least 1 per cent. above par, including accrued interest

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me? Believing as Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me? Believing as I do that a 3 per cent, bond running the length of time the bill provides for this bond to run will command par, I have no objection to the amendment. As representing the time I cannot accept it; but I believe 3 per cent, bonds will sell for par. I believe the 3.65 per cent, bonds will sell for more than par at this time. They have sold so I know within the last few days for a premium. I have no objection myself and am quite satisfied to have the amendment suggested by the Senator from Iowa adopted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. May I inquire of the Senator from Tennessee what is the rate of interest now fixed for these bonds?

Mr. HARRIS. Three and sixty-five hundredths per cent. interest in the bill

The VICE-PRESIDENT. And it has been made 3 per cent. by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engressed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS TO SOLDIERS OF MEXICAN WAR.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I move that the bill to pension the soldiers of the Mexican war be made the special order for the 8th of January.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky asks that the bill pensioning the soldiers of the Mexican war be made the special order for the 8th day of January next. That motion requires a two-thirds vote.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 281) granting a pension to Francis B. McNamara; A bill (H. R. No. 709) for the relief of William S. Burgess and others others;

A bill (H. R. No. 788) for the relief of James J. Ferris;

Mr. KERNAN. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 5384. I think it will only require to be read to secure its immediate passage.

ABBIE N. CONDRON.

Mr. BAYARD. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 1669.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1669) for the relief of Abbie N. Condron. It provides for the payment to Abbie N. Condron, widow of George M. Condron, of $438.32, in full payment for three months' services of George M. Condron as chaplain of the First Regiment of Volunteers of the State of Delaware in the year 1861.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE SURPLUS-REVENUE DEPOSITS.

THE SURPLUS-REVENUE DEPOSITS.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Senate to consider the bill (S. No. 877) to relieve the Treasurer of the United States from the amount now charged to him and deposited with the several States.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. What committee reported that bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. INGALLS. Is it accompanied by a report? It deals with a pretty large sum. Unless there is some explanation, it is hardly advisable to consider it now.

Mr. DAVIS. of West Virginia. In answer to the Senator from Kan-

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. In answer to the Senator from Kan-

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. In answer to the Senator from Kansas, I will say that this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Appropriations, and I will say to my friend, further, that the special committee of which he and I were members considered it to some extent, though they did not report it.

In 1837, the Senator will recollect, there was deposited with the States, in round figures, $28,000,000 of surplus revenue under what was known as the Calhoun-Clay bill. That amount has remained upon the books of the Treasurer ever since, and has been treated as cash in all the statements from that day to this. It is not necessary to say that we have had two or three trying times in the Government, and it has never been called for from the States, and perhaps it never was intended to be called for. I hold in my hand a communication from the Treasurer of the United States, making a general statement of the cash in the Treasury, and on the page before me this $28,000,000 is named five times, and has to be deducted each time and an explanation made that it is not in the Treasury but deposited with the States. States.

States.

The Treasury Department, so far as I know, for a long time has wished to get it off the Treasury books. It is one of the things, though not the main one, perhaps, that have confused to a considerable extent the accounts of the Treasury Department. For instance, the Treasurer makes a statement of the cash in the Treasury; the Register makes a statement of the same date. One of these two gentlemen counts the twenty-eight millions in round numbers; the other does not. That makes confusion at once. As I stated, each and every time the cash is said to be in the Treasury this must be explained and deducted from the Treasurer's accounts to give the true amount. This bill is intended to wipe it out entirely and let it remain with the States where it is; in other words, to make it a donation. It is practivally that now, but it remains nominally on the books, producpractically that now, but it remains nominally on the books, producing confusion.

I shall be glad to answer any question any Senator may wish to propound

Mr. INGALLS. Is there any communication from the Secretary of

Mr. INGALLS. Is there any communication from the Secretary of the Treasury on the subject embodying the suggestion the Senator from West Virginia has made?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I am not sure that the Secretary has made any communication, for he was not asked to do so, but I will say to the Senator that in frequent conversations the Secretary has desired it and wished it, and not only the Secretary, but other officers of the Treasury during our investigations. Here is a letter from the Assistant Register of the Treasury which reviews the matter, and I believe states that it would be very convenient and be an advantage to the Treasury to have it wiped out. I do not know that there is a recommendation from the Secretary of the Treasury; he was never asked for it. This account has remained on the books and created confusion for the last forty years.

Mr. GARLAND. The Secretary of the Treasury has recommended

this measure

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. My impression was that there was a letter from the Secretary, but I have it not before me.
Mr. GARLAND. He has recommended it in his annual report.
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It has been recommended by several Secretaries in their reports. The whole question is, shall this The VICE-PRESIDENT. An amendment of the committee will be reported.

The CHEF CLERK. The amendment reported from the Committee on Appropriations was, at the end of the bill to add:

And all laws or parts of laws authorizing a call upon the States to repay said money be, and they are hereby, repealed.

Mr. McMILLAN. Was this bill taken up by unanimous consent?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It has been taken up in the regular

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair asked if there was objection and heard none. It is before the Senate regularly.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. We are not under the Anthony rule

Mr. MORRILL. I hope my friend from Minnesota will not interfere with this bill. It is manifestly all right; and if it had no other effect than to relieve the mind of the Senator from West Virginia, I should be in favor of its passage.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. As to the mind of the Senator from West Virginia, the Senator from Vermont need not make himself uneasy about that. The matter referred to may not disturb his mind as much as it has that of the Senator from West Virginia; but I can say to the Senator that it has a much more powerful effect than that on his mind or mine either, and I ask nothing on that score. I think this is right in itself and ought to be done.

Mr. MORRILL. I think it is right.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask the Senator from West Virginia if this is

Mr. MCRRILL. I think it is right.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask the Senator from West Virginia if this is merely a question of book-keeping, if it merely affects the condition of the accounts or books of the Treasury, or does it appropriate or dispose of money not already disposed of ?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The money has been disposed of for forty years and the States have had the benefit of it for forty years, and it has confused the Treasury accounts to a considerable extent. I hold in my hand now a statement from the Treasurer, and on the first page I open this item is paged five times and it has to be defirst page I open this item is named five times, and it has to be deducted five times and an explanation given that the money is not in the Treasury. I turn over the next page and it three times occurs on that page.

Mr. McMILLAN. Then I understand from the Senator from West Virginia that this bill makes no legislative disposition of this fund;

Virginia that this bill makes no legislative disposition of this fund; that it has already been disposed of.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Yes, sir; I wish the Senator to understand that it is already with the States. The only effect of the bill will be to cause it to be dropped from the Treasury books.

Mr. INGALLS. I object to the amendment. I should like to read the sections of the statutes intended to be repealed by this amendment, if I can find them.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will say to the Senator that there is a letter from the Assistant Register of the Treasury making an explanation of it, the Register not being present at the time. That letter had better be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, REGISTER'S OFFICE, November 25, 1879.

Six: In compliance with your verbal request, I have the nonor to make the following statement respecting the amount of public money on deposit with certain of the States.

The thirteenth and fourteenth sections of the lact of Congress approved June 23, 1836, (volume 5, page 55, Statutes at Large,) provided as follows:

"Sec. 13. And be it further enacted, That the money which shall be in the Treasury of the United States on the 1st day of Jannary, 1837, reserving the sum of $5,000,000, shall be deposited with such of the several States, in proportion to their respective representation in the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, as shall, by law, authorize their treasurers, or other compent authorities, to receive the same on the terms hereinafter specified; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall deliver the same to such treasurers or other competent authorities, on receiving certificates of deposit therefor, signed by such competent authorities, on receiving certificates of deposit therefor, signed by such competent authorities, in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary aforesaid; which certificates shall express the usual and legal obligations, and pleage the faith of the State for the safe-keeping and repayment thereof, and shall pleage the faith of the States receiving the same to pay the said moneys, and every part thereof, from time to time, whenever the same shall be required by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the purpose of defraying any wants of the public Treasury, beyond the amount of the $5,000,000 aforesaid: Provided, That if any State declines to receive its proportion of the surplus aforesaid, on the terms before named, the same shall be deposited with the other States, agreeing to accept the same on deposit, in the proportion aforesaid: And provided further, That when said money, or any part thereof, shall be called for, in ratable proportions, within one year, as nearly as conveniently may be, from the different States with which the same is deposited, and shall part on the 1st day of January, 1837, or as soon thereafter as may be; one quarter part on the 1st day of April, one quarter part on the 1st day of July, and one quarter part on the 1st day of October—all in the same year.".

In compliance with these provisions of law the sum of $28,101,644.91 was deposited, in three installments, with the States as follows:

By the act of Congress approved October 2, 1837, the transfer of the fourth installment was postponed until the 1st day of January, 1839, (volume 5, page 201, Statutes at Large,) and, as at that time the surplus in the Treasury had been used for payment of appropriations made by law, no further deposit was made.

The last named act provided also that the three first installments should remain on deposit with the States until otherwise directed by Congress.

No subsequent direction having been made by Congress, the money still remains with the States.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. P. TITCOMB.

W. P. TITCOMB, Assistant Register.

Hon. H. G. Davis, Chairman Select Committee on Treasury Accounts, United States Senate.

Mr. KERNAN. I have examined the law of 1836, and it is as stated in the letter just read. There were three installments paid over to the States; and I believe no one pretends that we ever shall or should call on the States to pay the money back under a law. In the State of New York the principal has been invested as part of our school fund, and the income has been annually used for school pur-poses. As I understand this bill, it is to prevent this item being kept on the books of the Treasury as though it was money belonging to the Government. I think there is no probability of Congress calling it back from the States now, particularly as we are passing laws for aiding schools. I am in favor of the bill, unless there be some objection that I cannot see, to relieve the Treasury from having on its books what really was deposited with the States in 1836 and treated as though it was never to be recalled.

as though it was never to be recalled.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, this bill revives the memories of one of the historic struggles of this country; and it appears to me that to pass the bill in this manner without consideration is unworthy of the importance of the subject. It appears by reading the thirteenth section of the chapter regulating the deposits of the public money that it was not in any sense whatever a gift to the States with which that it was not in any sense whatever a gift to the States with which it was deposited, but that there was an express reservation of power on the part of the Government to recall it, and an implied contract on the part of the States to repay it in case it should ever be called for. Now, no reasons are advanced why this bill should be passed except that this account is continued on the books of the Treasury, and that it is inconvenient to the system of book-keeping that this $25,000,000 should be regarded as money in the Treasury of the United States. With all due respect to the Senator from West Virginia, that is no reason at all. This money was not given to the States; it is to-day a part of the assets of this Government, and I want to submit this further consideration, that if there is to be a final disposition of the surplus revenues of 1836, the States that have been admitted to the Union since that time are entitled to their proportionate share of the Union since that time are entitled to their proportionate share of that money. If this had been a donation to the States that were then in the Union, it would be different; but it was not. The reservation of power was made in the bill itself, and I submit that it is a gross injustice to the States which have been subsequently admitted that this donation should now be made without their receiving their proportionate share of these funds.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It seems to me that the Senator from Kansas cannot regard this money in 1837 in any other sense than a gift by the nation to the States at that time. While the power was reserved by the General Government to call for it and a pledge given on the part of the States that if so called for it would be refunded, everypart of the States that if so called for it would be refunded, every-body familiar with the history of that affair knows that the money was taken by the States, and by many of the States, perhaps most of them, incorporated with their school funds. It has therefore become a part, virtually, of the free-school fund of the several States in this Union, and I am sure there are not ten members of the Senate who would disturb the school funds of the respective States to which this money was denoted in 1836. In my own State it was appropriated money was donated in 1836. In my own State it was appropriated exclusively—I believe every dollar of it—to the school fund, and has exclusively—I believe every dollar of it—to the school fund, and has been sedulously guarded and preserved as part of the school fund of the State. No exigency that has come upon the State has ever caused us to resort to that fund. Now, I am sure that the Senator from Kansas would not, unless there was a very great exigency on the part of the Government, ask for the repayment of that fund which had been thus sacredly appropriated to the education of children forty-four years ago. So far as the new States are concerned that have come in since that time, they have had public lands donated to them in large amounts for school purposes and for railroad purposes, and other purposes, while the old States had none of the lands given to them for educational purposes.

I cannot think the Senator is serious in making his objection on the ground that it would be inequitable to the new States. The only object and purpose of this bill is to relieve the Treasury accounts of the necessity of constantly carrying on the books of the Treasury these items. I think that the amendment reported by the committee is perfectly proper, that we shall at once settle the question and say that the laws which prescribe the conditions on which the fund that the laws which prescribe the conditions on which the fund donated to the States may be recalled shall be wiped out, because I am sure we never shall have a Senate or House of Representatives that would propose such a thing unless in a case of such extreme exigency that none of us would dare to resist. The Government did not do it during the war, and I am sure nobody will hereafter ever make such a proposition. I therefore am in favor of the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. INGALIS. Mr. Describert the Control of the sure of the sure of the committee.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the Senator from Delaware says that the States which have been since admitted into the Union have received lands and donations for educational and other purposes. That is very true; but it is also true that a considerable number of the States named in this bill also received donations of land for educational purposes when they were admitted into the Union. I know it was the case with regard to Arkansas; I think it was the case with regard to Indiana, although I am not positive. In fact I believe that all the States that were admitted out of what was known as the Northwest Territory received large and ample donations of land for educational purposes; but I can see no reason and no justice and no equity in saying that this money shall now finally be disposed of in the nature of a gift, at this particular time, to these several States, unless the other States in the Union shall also receive their proportionate share of the benefits of the fund. There certainly has been no argument advanced in favor of it, and if it is possible for me to object to this bill at this time, I shall be very glad to do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. An objection does not throw the bill over. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TELLER. Why does not one objection send the bill over?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Because it has been entertained by the Senate by unanimous consent, and discussed for nearly an hour.

Mr. TELLER. It is not under the Anthony rule, then?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not; it was not taken up until a little before two o'clock.

little before two o'clock.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me that this is a very summary manner to dispose of a bill involving so many important questions as a bill of this kind, and involving so much money.

Mr. INGALLS. Only $23,000,000!

Mr. TELLER. It is true, as suggested, it is only $28,000,000, usually regarded as a pretty large sum of money. I suppose some interest has accumulated on it since 1836, and I had an estimate made of the amount that would be due now if the Government had charged 4 per amount that would be due now if the Government had charged 4 per eent, but I cannot put my hand on it.

Mr. ANTHONY. But the Government did not charge 4 per cent.

Mr. TELLER. Very well, the Government did not charge 4 per cent., I will admit. If the Government had charged 4 per cent. upon this money, which has been in the hands of the States since 1836, it would now amount to $134,000,000.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to ask the Sepator if there was any provision in the law which authorized the Government to collect interest on that amount?

Mr. TELLER. I do not know that there is any such provision. I do not know that the Government could collect interest, and I am not certain that the Government can collect anything at all. I am not certain that the Government can collect anything at all. I am very certain the Government never will. I have looked over this list, and I find that there are twenty-eight States that are beneficiaries under this bill. My experience has taught me that twenty-eight interested States are pretty sure to find votes in the Senate and in the House sufficient to pass a bill like this. I do not think there is any doubt about it at all. But when there was a bill here that was in the special interest of a few of the Western States, and when we were asking the mere letter of the law, as we thought, the payment of 5 per cent. on the sales of the public lands, pretty much every Senator who voted for it was charged by Senators representing the States that derive the greatest benefit from this bill with being moved entirely by a desire to appropriate a portion of the public Treasury entirely by a desire to appropriate a portion of the public Treasury that did not belong to us. I will not make any such insinuation in reference to Senators who vote for this bill. All there is about it is that here are $28,000,000 that go to these States, and I have not the slightest doubt but what the bill will be passed and the States relieved from any charge or probability of ever paying the principal or interest. I would not say a word about it now if it were not for the fact that when the Western States and the new States that have never had any benefit from this fund, or in fact from any other fund, come here to get that which is rightfully their due, they are met by the cry that they are making a raid upon the public Treasury.

Mr. President, some of the States have derived some benefit from public lands. The State of Colorado has not, and while Colorado has been four years a State in the Union, there has been every session before the Committee on Education and Labor a bill to enable that State to take its agricultural college lands. The State has gone to work and built an agricultural college without a dollar from the Government, paid $25,000 last year from the treasury of the State toward the support and building of this public institution, and yet we have never been able, not having any representative on that committee, to get a report from the committee on that question, and I doubt very much whether we ever shall get a report. We are told that we can take our share from the offered lands. There is no offered land that is worth a dollar a square mile that we can get.

I think it would be fair to divide this fund between all the States, but I repeat again I have not any idea that it is going to be done. I do not suppose the new States will come in for any part or parcel of it, or get any interest in it whatever.

it, or get any interest in it whatever.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, these funds were donated before the State of Colorado or the State of Kansas had an existence. It is not the first time in the history of humanity when men have been reminded that they have raised up children who have rebelled against them. We have raised all these Western States; we have treated them very kindly, as kindly as we could; we have given them public lands for educational purposes, and in some instances for railroad pur-poses, and I think it is captious now for the representatives of those new States which have been treated so kindly by the older States to rise and object to an equity so proper in every sense of the term. My friends, however, I think are simply desiring to make some objection to this because they have been thwarted in some of their purposes heretofore.

Mr. TELLER. Some of our raids on the Treasury! Mr. President, I will answer the question asked by the Senator. This was not donated to the States, and has not been yet. We object to its being donated now. This money was deposited with the States, and I believe then there was a very respectable portion of both branches of Congress who denied the power of the Government to donate it, and it was deposited with the States to be called for whenever the Government should see fit to call for it. Practically, it might have been a donation; but it was not a donation in form. It is now to be.

Mr. GARLAND. This matter was before the Senate in January last, and I thought then and still think the committee had a report of the Secretary of the Treasury recommending the adoption of this measure.

After this deposit was made, in 1837 Congress passed an act that the States should be called on before this money should be collected. There never has been a demand by the Government on these States for this money up to this day, now more than forty years. One peculiar fact that I wish to call the attention of the Senate to is this: that with every one of the States with which this money was deposited the General Government has had money transactions of different sorts arising from different grants, in which the character of creditor and debtor was frequently transferred from one to the other, and in no instance I believe (and certainly it is so as far as the State I represent is concerned) has any mention ever been made in the settlement of accounts of this fund.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator if he supposes that makes any difference with the fund, because the party owing it fails to put it in his account. I know a great many people who do business in that way

Mr. GARLAND. I will state a proposition directly which the Sena tor will recognize, and show that it does make a difference. The State of Arkansas, for example, has transacted business with the General Government in the relation of both debtor and creditor to the extent of thousands and thousands of dollars since that time, arising from swamp lands and other matters which it is unnecessary now to detail; and no indication of this item has ever been made, and no reference to it. It has slept quietly, and has not been disturbed in the statements of the accounts at any time. Now, a period of forty years in individual transactions would raise an absolute estoppel as against the party claiming; and if it has not that effect against the Government it must at least raise this moral consideration, that if the Government by her course of conduct has induced the States to believe that she never would call upon them for this money she will be bound, as a matter of course, by that conduct which she has practiced toward these States, and say, in good faith, that she never intends to call for the money. Then, what is the practical question? This is not a debt; the law never did exactly define the capacity in which the States held this money; it has been repeated a million of times in these forty years in the accounts that have been stated by the Treasury Department in its general financial statements.

Mr. TELLER. Stated as a debt against the States.
Mr. GARLAND. Not particularly as a debt. Here has been a course of conduct for forty years, and the Treasury Department has frequently submitted to us that this matter was in the way of the proper keeping of its accounts. A call has never been made and never even been suggested under the act of 1837. Then why not relieve the States? I am not affected by this sensitiveness in regard to what the States? I am not affected by this sensitiveness in regard to what are called raids on the Treasury, mentioned by the Senator from Colorado, because my section embraces now in its wide domain the old flag and the most liberal appropriations that can possibly be made for the development of this country.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words in regard to this matter, but am not prepared to do so now, it having come up unexpectedly to me.

A proposition of this kind was before the Senate and attracted my notice at the last session: but different from this: it was merely to notice at the last session; but different from this; it was merely to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury so to correct his books that he would not be compelled to carry from year to year this amount as money in the Treasury, or as an asset to be collected into the Treasury. As the bill stands now, however, it is a proposition to donate to certain States of the Union—"donate" is the word I use, because it expresses the precise meaning—to give to certain States of this Union the sum of over $28,000,000. Well, that may be right; it may be that that money ought to be given to those States, and yet I have not heard any very good reasons offered to the Senate why it should

Mr. EATON. It belongs to them.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I do not so understand it. I suppose all the money in the Treasury on the same principle belongs to the States, and we ought to divide it out and fill up the Treasury again in some

Mr. JONES, of Florida. We have not had any surplus revenue for some time.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Yes, we are having a surplus revenue of forty or fifty millions every year now and we are not dividing it among the States. I am sorry the matter has been so suddenly brought to the attention of the Senate. I wish, however, specially to call the attention of Senators to the actual condition of this matter before

At the last session of Congress a bill was offered and discussed before the Senate and postponed indefinitely, and stands now upon a motion to reconsider, the object of which was not to donate, but to pay to certain States in this Union certain sums of money which they claimed to be their due under a clear and specific contract between those States and the General Government. When that bill was pend-ing before the Senate there was a great deal of opposition to it from some of the Senators representing the States to be benefited by this bill, and, as I thought at the time, some remarks were made touching the matter that had better have been left unmade. Let me compare the two propositions for a moment. The State of New York will have donated to it, if this bill pass, $4,014,520.71. That was placed in her treasury from the Treasury of the United States some years ago and to be repaid. It never has been repaid, never has been called

Mr. KERNAN. It was only to be repaid if called for by act of

Congres

Congress.

Mr. TELLER. No, by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator from Colorado is mistaken. The act of 1837 said it should be by act of Congress and not by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I have tried to find the act of Congress, but have not laid my hand on it. But here is a proposition to give to the State of New York $4,014,520.71 and to other States other amounts. Iowa claimed at the last session of Congress that the Government of the United States owed her certain sums of money as a just debt. the United States owed her certain sums of money as a just debt, fairly and honestly and equitably due to her, and it was alleged against her that the matter had lain too long; and it was also alleged that the United States Government had donated lands in the State of the United States Government had donated lands in the State of Iowa for the purpose of building railroads, and that therefore the State of Iowa should not claim what was her due. There were various other reasons of that kind assigned, and it was alleged that it was an attempt to rob the Treasury of the United States of money at a time when the Treasury needed it. Now the old States, the wealthy States of this Union, have $28,000,000 that ought to be paid into the Treasury of the United States to enable the Government to discharge its indebtedness. It was said at that time, I remember very distinctly—and I felt unpleasant under the assertion—that there was a combination of the States to be benefited by that bill by massing their claims together to secure a united vote of Senators in favor of the payment of them. If it were not in my judgment improper to have said that at that time, I should be tempted to say at this time that here is precisely a combination of the same kind, an attempted massing of influence to carry through here a claim of $28,000,000; but as I thought it was improper at that time to be said as against the bill I was favoring, I do not feel disposed to say it now against this bill. But, Mr. President, my main purpose in rising at this time is to give notice of my intention to move as an amendment to this bill, when notice of my intention to move as an amendment to this bill, when the time shall come that it may be considered, the bill to which I have alluded as pending at the last session of the Senate.

Mr. McDONALD. Senate bill No. 19, I suppose the Senator refers to? Mr. KIRKWOOD. Yes, sir. I propose when the proper time comes to offer that as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. McDONALD. The substance of it?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. The substance of Senate bill No 19, pending at the last session of the Senate. I must insist, if it is proper for me to do so, that this measure shall not be pressed to a vote to-day, because the last session of the Senate. I must insist, if it is proper for me to do so, that this measure shall not be pressed to a vote to-day, because I did not expect it to come up, and am not prepared to say in regard to it that which I desire to say before the vote is taken.

Mr. McDONALD. I hope the Senator will offer his amendment now. Mr. KIRKWOOD. There is an amendment pending, I understand. The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the

The amendment was concurred in.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still open to amendment in the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. I think I heard the Senator from West Virginia say that this money was to be recalled from the States only by an act of Congress

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Yes, sir.
Mr. INGALLS. In order to ascertain precisely what the intent of the act was, I will rehearse the language of section 13:

Which certificates

That is, the certificates to be delivered by the States upon the receipt

Which certificates shall express the usual and legal obligations, and pledge the faith of the State for the safe-keeping and repayment thereof, and shall pledge the faith of the States receiving the same, to pay the said moneys, and every part thereof, from time to time, whenever the same shall be required by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the purpose of defraying any wants of the public Treasury, beyond the amount of the five millions aforesaid.

Does the Senator still think it required an act of Congress to recall this money

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. If the Senator will refer to the subsequent act, passed October 2, 1837, he will find that the fourth installment that was then intended to be deposited with the States was stopped by that act, and it also required an act of Congress before anything should be called for from the States.

Mr. CONKLING. Has the Senator that act before him?
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have not. The Treasury Department refers to it in its letter.

Mr. KERNAN. I have the law, volume 5, page 201:

That the transfer of the fourth installment of depoeits directed to be made with the States under the thirteenth section of the act of June 23, 1836, be, and the same is hereby, postponed till the 1st day of January, 1839: Provided, That the three first installments under the said act shall remain on deposit with the States until otherwise directed by Congress.

That is the act of October 2, 1837. That is the entire act.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have a suggestion to make. I have heard the remarks of the Senator from Iowa, that he did not desire a vote this afternoon; he had not expected this measure to come up. I suggest that it go over, in order to allow him to make the remarks he wants to make upon it. My colleague suggests that the Senator from Iowa offer his amendment first, which I will do and then I will ask the Senate to let the matter go over for the Senator's convenience.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will say to my friend from Indiana that this is the second time this bill has been before the Senate, and each time there have been request that it will be second to the senate.

and that this is the second time this bill has been before the Senate, and each time there has been a request that it go over. He will recollect that at the last session it was debated for half a day probably and then went over. I see no reason why it should go over this evening. Notice has been given of calling it up. It has been on the Calendar for a year. It is not unusual for a bill to go over the first time it is taken up; but when it is called up the second time it is not usual to ask that it should go over to another time. I must say that I think we ought to dispose of it, if we can, this legislative day. If we cannot, of course that is another onestion.

we ought to dispose of it, it we can, this legislative day. If we can not, of course that is another question.

Mr. VOORHEES. I should be very reluctant to insist upon a vote on a question when a Senator was asking time to discuss it.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I offer the following amendment, to come in as additional sections:

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I offer the following amendment, to come in as additional sections:

Sec. — That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to ascertain the amount of public lands entered by the location of military scrip and land warrants in the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Arkansas, Louisiana, Alabama, Mississippi, Florida, Oregon, Nevada, and Colorado, whose enabling acts of admission into the Union contain a stipulation for the payment of 5 per cent, on the sales of the public lands therein. And after making such investigation, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to certify the amount so found to the Secretary of the Treasury; and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to such States 5 per cent, on the amount of lands located by military scrip and land warrants, estimating said lands at the rate of $1.25 per acre: Provided, That the Secretary of the Interior shall exclude from his estimate and certificate all lands so entered upon which the said 5 per cent, has been paid.

SEC. — That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay the amounts allowed as herein provided, by issuing and delivering to the governors of the States named, or their duly anthorized agents. United States certificates of indebtedness, said certificates to be of the denomination of one hundred, five hundred, and one thousand dollars each, as the Secretary may direct, to be made and issued by the said Secretary, in such form, and signed and attested and registered as he shall direct, each certificate to run twenty years from its date, to draw interest, payable semi-annally, at the rate of 3.65 per cent, per annum, and to be payable, both principal and interest, when due, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, on the presentation of the same. And whatever may be necessary to carry out the purp

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I will merely explain that the effect of the amendment would be to kill the bill. That is as plain as any thing can be; and I hope the Senate will vote it down. I think that is enough to say about it.

Mr. THURMAN. The amendment of the Senator from Iowa is intended to kill the bill. Nevertheless it is in order in this body. The obvious object is to kill the bill by placing upon it the most incongruous matter. That is entirely in order under the rules of the Senate and of the British Parliament. So the amendment is in order. I agree it has no connection with the bill whatsoever, not the least I agree it has no connection with the bill whatsoever, not the least in the wide world. It brings in a new subject which ought not to be introduced in the same bill. If the amendment proposed by the Sen-ator from Iowa is a meritorious amendment, it ought to stand upon its own merits, and not be ingrafted on this bill.

I do not propose to say anything upon the amendment, but I propose to repeat very briefly my objections to the bill itself. I say repeat them, because when this bill was before the Senate on a former occasion I stated them briefly, and I can do so again. The principle of this bill in effect is that the General Government may raise money of this bill in effect is that the General Government may raise money to give to the States. If the naked proposition were made to the Senate that we should raise all the revenue necessary to carry on the State governments and dole it out to the States from year to year, I think Senators would hesitate a good deal before they would agree to any such proposition. There is certainly nothing in the Constitution of the United States that contemplates any such thing. There is certainly nothing that would be more inconsistent with the independence and the dignity of the States; and there is certainly nothing that would be worse, looking at it in the point of economy. One of the greatest safeguards the people have against excessive taxation of the greatest safeguards the people have against excessive taxation is that those who levy the taxes are in the midst of the people, right under the eye of the people. That secures economy to a great extent in the State governments. The State Legislature sits in the State, surrounded by the people who are to be taxed. All their acts are carefully scrutinized and watched. Therefore there is some security that the taxes levied in the States will not be more than the people can bear. But if the Federal Government is to raise the taxes by which the State government is to be carried on, if it is to be done by which the State government is to be carried on, if it is to be done by several hundred gentlemen here in Washington, thousands of miles away from some of the States, then there is no security that the people will not be taxed beyond a suitable amount.

I say this is precisely that thing in principle. The General Government had certain surplus moneys, as they were called, in its Treasury. Very soon it found that it had no surplus at all and had to borrow money to carry on the General Government. Very soon this that was called a surplus having disappeared by being deposited with the States, called a surplus having disappeared by being deposited with the States, we were compelled, and at a very great sacrifice too, to borrow money in order to carry on the Federal Government. But Congress saw fit at one time to deposit this money with the States. It was a debt due by the States with whom it was deposited. It is a debt due to day by them just as much as any that they owe, just as much as any debt that any individual owes. I for one must say, with my old-fashioned notions of the Constitution, that we have no more right to give up that indultdness than we have to give any $28,000,000 now in the that indebtedness than we have to give any $28,000,000 now in the Treasury to the States. Here are $22,000,000 due by the States to the Federal Government, and it is proposed by one stroke of the pen to strike out that indebtedness, to give it up. In principle it is precisely the same thing as if you were to take $28,000,000 now in the Treasury the same thing as if you were to take $22,000,000 now in the Treasury and distribute it among the States as a gracious gift. I do not believe in it at all; I do not believe in the principle; I do not believe in the constitutionality of any such thing; and no mere convenience of bookkeeping in the Treasury shall make me ever vote for a thing that is so repugnant to my ideas of the fundamental law.

Sir, I confess I am a little surprised at what I see. Last week the Senate saw fit to give up the proceeds of the public lands to be distributed among the States, and voted to dole out a little sum of $30,000 or $40,000 around among the States for the purposes of edgestion.

tributed among the States, and voted to dole out a little sum of $30,000 or $40,000 around among the States for the purposes of education, which is very little more than half as much as is raised in my single county in the State of Ohio for school purposes. The Senate saw fit to give up the proceeds of the public lands. Now it is proposed to give up $28,000,000 more. We owe $2,000,000,000 in round numbers, $1,600,000,000 of which are bearing interest. As it seems to me, with all humility be it spoken, the obvious plain duty and good policy of the United States is to pay off that debt as fast as it can be paid. Nearly or quite $700,000,000 of it matures next year. Every dollar of that maturing debt could be paid in ten years without oppressing the people of the United States; but it is proposed to extend the time thirty or forty years; and in order to make a further extension necessary we are to give away the revenue from the public lands and sponge out $28,000,000 that are due to us by States which are able to pay. I know my State is able to pay the two million and odd dollars deposited with her. It is proposed to sponge all that out, to increase our appropriations every year, make the burden of the Government heavier appropriations every year, make the burden of the Government heavier from year to year, and borrow money. What is to be the end of it? The end of it is to make the national debt irreducible, to make it what the British consols are, annuities, perpetual annuities, irredeemable annuities

That is what our legislation tends to in respect of our public debt. That is what our legislation tends to in respect of our public debt. With great wisdom, as I think, we have been paying off that debt for some years past. We might pay off the remaining seven hundred millions that mature next year in ten years, I venture to say, and not oppress the people with any more taxation than has been imposed upon them in the last ten years. But if we are to give away one day the proceeds of the public lands, sponge out $23,000,000 that are due to us the next day, increase expenditures the third day, and so go on, the time will be when this debt of ours will be simply what the British debt is, a system of irredeemable annuities. I do not want to see it. I of course shall not live to see it, but those who come after me will live to see it if this policy is perpetuated. They will live to see it, and they will live to see what I believe to be the greatest curse under which a nation can suffer—an irredeemable great public

I shall vote against this bill because its principle is all wrong.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, it is impossible to listen to the honorable Senator from Ohio and not be impressed by his reasoning; but, as often occurs in such instances, the fallacy is in the foundation, in the premises. The honorable Senator from Ohio cautions us to observe and appreciate the impropriety in law and in reason of having taxes raised by the Government of the United States and allotted or distributed among the States. I think no member of the Senate will be found wanting in any of the repugnance with which the Senator would regard such a proposition. Again he cautions the senate will be found wanting in any of the repugnance with which the Senator would regard such a proposition. Again, he cautions the Senate to remember that we have no right, and that, had we the right, in our circumstances now would be found insuperable objection, to make a present to solvent responsible and prosperous States of $-3,000,000. There is a statement to which everybody will defer, and if it has any application to this case its weight in the argument would be almost immeasurable.

But let us turn from these hypothetical and abstract propositions of the Senator, and see exactly the plain thing which we confront. In 1837, with an overflow in the Treasury and with other circumstances which it would be beside the purpose to stop now to enumerate, the General Government proposed to deposit with the States, not share and share alike, but in the ratio of representation, which was the population, and which again was the basis on which direct taxes are to be imposed if imposed at all, a certain sum of money derived in the manner which has been repeatedly stated in the debate. In making that deposit—and I ask the attention of the honorable Senator from Ohio to the fact—it was expressly provided that at any time, forthwith, immediately, always, if or when the Government wanted this money or any part of it returned, it might by summary requisition of one of its Departments, make demand, which should be answered. The only bridle put on the option was this:

When said money, or any part thereof, shall be wanted by the said Secretary.

When said money, or any part thereof, shall be wanted by the said Secretary, to meet appropriations by law, the same shall be called for, in ratable proportions, within one year, as nearly as conveniently may be, from the different States, with which the same is deposited, and shall not be called for, in sums exceeding $10,000, from any one State, in any one month, without previous notice of thirty days, for every additional sum of $20,000, which may at any time be required.

It was therefore a call loan; I will state it so; that is as strongly as the honorable Senator can state it; and at the option of the Government, at any and every moment, it was subject to its requisition. What followed? Later on, and not much later on, Congress interposed again by an act taking away the call feature of this loan, and posed again by an act taking away the call feature of this loan, and saying that neither then nor at any time should it be called for unless Congress interposing by act should so provide. What followed that? And here I wish I could hear the honorable Senator from Ohio, with that accuracy of diction and especially of legal diction for which he is so well known in the Senate, define an estoppel, that something known to the law after which he whom it binds is never again free to assert that which might once have been asserted. Could again free to assert that which might once have been asserted. Could I hear the honorable Senator state clearly the very essence of the doctrine of estoppel I should hear him lay down a principle which must be overridden in order to apply the argument which he has made to this transaction.

Let me see what warrant I have for saying that. I have spoken of what occurred in the year 1837. Time went on. The honorable Senator reminds us that a time soon came when there was a deficit in ator reminds us that a time soon came when there was a dencit in public revenue and when the Government went into the market as a borrower of money. The Senator says, and I agree with him, that still up to that time there was certainly a technical right, and I am not disposed to deny a substantial and unimpaired right, to call for the repayment of this money. On the contrary, exercising its option, the United States proceeded to borrow and by other and different modes to possess itself of the sums which might have been derived by a call of this lane.

modes to possess itself of the sums which might have been derived by a call of this loan.

Years went on. These items appeared in the public statements, not as some Senator inquired, being answered in the negative, as a debt against the States, but confessedly, obviously, as no debt at all against the States. It was matter of public notoriety; it was all part of the public history of the country. After the lapse of some years and after repeated acts on the part of the Government, which it would consume too much time to narrate, acting as they supposed upon the intention of the Government what did the States do in this regard? They proceeded not only to appropriate and apply this deregard? They proceeded not only to appropriate and apply this deposited money but to interweave it and mingle it with their State funds until it became insusceptible of partition as a specific fund. It was incorporated in the school fund; it was treated otherwise as the money of the State. It was put, in the language of the old cases, the money of the State. It was put, in the language of the old cases, in the crucible and melted up as one common possession. The United States stood by, seeing all this done; the United States did not interpose, did not speak, did not assert its right, but by repeated references not only in the public accounts but in acts of Congress, by recitations not only in the debates of both Houses, but by solemn recitals in acts of Congress, directly and indirectly too, the Government assumed not only but asserted over and over again that instead of being as technically it began, a call loan subject to the instantaneous requisition of the Government all the time, the transaction had passed on, the nature of it had changed, the States had acted upon an assumption that no liability was ever to be enforced, and the United States had acquiesced.

Am I wrong in supposing, I ask the honorable Senator, this to be the very genius of an estoppel, that by the action or omission of one party the other party has been led to do that which he would not have done but for such action or omission, and that in respect of which he will be damnified if the other party is permitted to go back and assert what he might once have asserted, but which by holding his peace or by affirmative acquiescence he has forever lost his right to assert? Is not that an estoppel? Is not this the very case to which it applies? The State of New York creates a school fund. The honorable Senator has stated with what liberality and munificence, and orable Senator has stated with what liberality and munificence, and I do not doubt it, in the county in which he lives taxes are raised to carry on public education. So they are in the State of New York. The fund is not only vast but astounding when looked at in the total, and still more so when looked at under its special names and in its special parts. The people of that State have gone as far as they thought they could go in imposing burdens upon themselves to maintain a system of public schools open to all, and they have created funds composed as well of what they themselves could thus render and spare as of their share of this deposit. They have put the two things together; they have disbursed the interest; they have grounded their system in that way, made their outlays and arrangements in their system in that way, made their outlays and arrangements in that way. The Government all the time had the most conspicuous that way. The Government all the time had the most conspicuous notice of the three kinds, actual, constructive, and presumptive, over and over again, and instead of saying by hint or intimation of any sort, "the States are mistaken, they have ventured too far in sup-posing that it is designed never to recall this money," instead of merely holding the peace of the Government and allowing the depositaries to proceed at their peril, as I have said once before, over and over again and in many ways, not only by the statement in the public accounts, not only by the lapse of time and silence, not only by no end of instances in debates and reports of departmental officers, but by legislative declarations and recitals, they have said that they never intended to call for this money. And when a vast war broke out, when the resources of the country were taxed to the uttermost, when a drag-net was spread over every object of taxation, when the highest tariff that could be borne was adopted, when, in the language of a democratic national platform applied to another subject, the resources of statesmanship had been exhausted in order to replenish the national exchequer, the jaded ingenuity of no late brother anxious to establish a reputation for invention ever suggested the idea that these States were to be called upon to make restitution of this long by-gone

Now it is proposed that in place of having this piece of superfluons book-keeping appear on the books of the Treasury, in place of hav-ing it appear and disappear and reappear and be reported and printed and formulated over and over again, that idle ceremony shall cease and it shall be left where it has been and where it is, and where, as I understand the law, it would be if the question were submitted to a court between individuals, where the original creditor would have the fullest and the most technical right. Now we propose to say that as the tree has fallen so it shall lie, and the clerks and printers shall no longer be employed to recite and recite again an utterly meaning-

Therefore, I submit that the argument of the honorable Senator, although no fault is to be found with it, although it will prove any case to which it applies, does not prove his side of this case, because there is too little connection between what he so ably states as a theory and the principle and the instance before us.

The honorable Senator shrinks apparently as he bends his eye upon the future and witnesses in his time or in a far hereafter a cessation of the reduction of the public debt. I think the honorable Senator might readily find a mantle which would cover that phantom of might readily find a mantie which would cover that phantom of fright. I think the past has sufficiently demonstrated that the people of the country, the resources of the country, and, above all, the integrity of the country, are able and determined to pay the public debt, every honest dollar of it even to the uttermost. In my humble opinion a worse step in that regard could not be taken than any which would look like treating with levity, much more with disregard, any of the obligations of good faith which have grown up, although they may have been suffered by inadvertence to grow up, between the United States and its citizens, or any portion of them.

Were I the holder of any portion of the public funds, I should consider my security appreciated by any and every act of Congress showing that Congress sets its face like flint against a deviation, even the slightest, from that understanding which other parties had a right to receive and to act upon. Judge Story has said somewhere that a promise is to be construed as the promisor supposed the promisee understood it. Apply that to this case. Has there been for more than a quarter of a century the shadow of a doubt how the United States and those representing the United States understood that the States comprehended and received this transaction? I think Therefore, as well in respect of the well-being of the public orditor and the certainty of the payment of the public debt as on other grounds, I am for this bill, and against the position of the honorable Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I have only one observation to make in regard to this bill, which may be in the least degree worthy of the attention of the Senate. The act which it recalls was an act of great public folly growing out of some extreme views that prevailed at that day as to the limitations upon the power of the Federal Government to use its resources for the general improvement of the country, and when the Congress of that day found a sum that might have been very beneficially employed, a surplus on their hands, they had to resort finally to this extreme mode of distributing it among the States. We have now reached the forty-fifth year since that was done, and I submit to the honorable Senator from Ohio that it would not only violate the conclusions of the last thirty or forty years if there was an attempt made to collect the money, but it would violate the principles of common justice, and for the reason that I shall state.

At the time the distribution was made the States of this Union numbered twenty-six. States that were then very small have been called into being; States that were then old have not kept up anything into being; States that were then old have not kept up anything like relative progress. Take the three northern New England States, Maine, New Hampshire, and Vermont. They would be called upon for two and a quarter million dollars; Michigan would be called upon for two and a quarter million dollars; Michigan would be called upon for $200,000; but the people from Maine, Vermont, and New Hampshire have moved out to Michigan and built up that State. In my own State of Maine the great folly was committed of dividing the deposit per capita among the people. The distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. Grover] would be called upon to refund what he got. As I was not then a resident or citizen of the State, I got nothing. The senior Senator from Maine, my colleague, [Mr. HAMLIN,] got his share. The division of that fund in Maine probably illustrated in the extremest point of view the folly of the distribution. Now, when a half or a third of the population of Maine that then existed has absolutely left and gone to people other States and build up the resources and develop the growth of other States, it is proposed to come back upon a subsequent generation, a generation and a half of time havupon a subsequent generation, a generation and a half of time having elapsed, when these men have gone West and gone South, and gone to the Pacific coast and called into being twelve States that did not then exist, when they have increased Illinois from a State of less population than Maine until it is the fourth, if not the third, in the Union. All these States have grown up very largely from the emigration from the East. The whole relations of the Union within that time having utterly changed, it is proposed to come back now at the end of a generation and a half and say to those who were lucky enough, or unlucky enough, to receive this deposit that it must be refunded. My friend from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] looks up and smiles at me. He inhabits a State which was then an Indian reservation. A very large number of the people who have built up that great and prosperous commonwealth, himself conspicuous among them, derived all the benefit that was obtained from the distribution of the fund among the States in which they then resided, and if the money is to be paid back, it ought not to be paid back by the mere parties to the

Mr. INGALLS. I have made no such suggestion. Mr. BLAINE. But the Senator from Ohio did.

Mr. BLAINE. But the Senator from Ohio did.
Mr. THURMAN. I did not catch the Senator's last word.
Mr. BLAINE. I understand the honorable Senator suggests that the money should be treated as a live debt against the States.
Mr. THURMAN. I have expressed myself very clearly, I think, and if I have not I shall do so when the Senator gets through.
Mr. BLAINE. That is what I understood. If it has degenerated ar. Thurman. I have expressed myself very clearly, I think, and if I have not I shall do so when the Senator gets through.

Mr. BLAINE. That is what I understood. If it has degenerated into a mere question of how book-keeping shall apply, how books shall be kept, of course it is not worth while spending any time upon it; but if you are to keep the idea in view of its being ultimately collected, then I say let it be collected on equitable principles, and not upon principles that would do the rankest possible injustice to the old States of the Union. Now, as to its being carried over as a fancied asset of the Federal Government, from one liscal year to another, for another generation and a half, or for three or four generations, I submit that that might just as well come to an end. I think my honorable friend from West Virginia, who conceived such extraordinary notions about the way the Treasury books were kept, and thought that two or three hundred million dollars were all awry, got started wrong by this mode of book-keeping. I think his expensive and extensive investigation had its origin considerably in the book-keeping that arose from this particular account.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I agree with the Senator as to the disposition of this account; yet he has no warrant for making that statement.

statement.

Mr. BLAINE. I am making an inference.
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. On the contrary, this is one of the things that are plain, and this account ought to be wiped out. There are a good many others that may not be so plain.

Mr. BLAINE. I am very glad to hear the Senator say that this ought to be wiped out, and I hope there will be no hesitatien in wiping it out. As to any intimation at all that it is an equitable debt due from the twenty-six States that receive it, that I utterly

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Who owes it?

Mr. BLAINE. Nobody owes it.
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I agree with the Senator in that.
Mr. BLAINE. Nobody owes it; and I should like to know where the honorable Senator from Iowa himself, who has been a distinguished citizen of three States, would locate his accountability for it. There is no way of settling it at all except to wipe it out; let it

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I am very much afraid my friend from Maine will get into bad odor with the bondholders, for he has mooted the most dangerous subject that ever was started in this world in regard to the public debt. Nor has it been done for the first time. About the beginning of this century or a little before, a Frenchman, wonderfully distinguished for the brilliancy of his intellect and the profoundness of his thought, when France was convulsed, just before the breaking out of the French revolution, by her debt and her enormous taxes, broached the idea—no, not broached it, but asserted it roundly and broadly—that no generation had a right to impose a it roundly and broadly—that no generation had a right to impose a debt upon a subsequent generation; and so strongly did he reason that he almost captured one of the most distinguished men to whom America ever gave birth, Thomas Jefferson, who came very near sanctioning that doctrine by the weight of his great name. If the Senator from Maine who speaks about this thing being a debt of a prior generation proposes to apply that doctrine, when and how will the two thousand millions of debt now due by the United States be paid? That is a very dangerous doctrine indeed, and the last one to apply. I hope there never will be a time when any respectable man in I hope there never will be a time when any respectable man in this country will not be willing to pay the public debt to the last farthing as fast as we are able to pay it. There is no large body of people in the United States who are not in favor of it, and I do not think the Senator will live long enough (certainly I shall not) to find the doctions of the exemption of the property of the prope senator will five long enough (certainly I shall not) to find the dec-trine of the exemption of subsequent generations pleaded in bar of the payment of the public debt.

Mr. President, there is something further upon this subject. The Senator says Michigan has grown great by emigration from Maine, Vermont, and New Hampshire, and so on, and therefore it would be very hard upon those three States to make them pay what they owe; that you cought to follow the emigrants from those States their chilthat you ought to follow the emigrants from those States, their children and their grand-children, and collect from them, and not collect from the neonle who now inhabit those old States. To say nothing from the people who now inhabit those old States. To say nothing of the impossibility of such a scheme as that, to say nothing about the adoption of such an idea being simply naked repudiation, let me say to the Senator, that Michigan has done more for the emigrants from Maine, and Vermont, and New Hampshire than their own States ever did for them; that every Western State which received into her bosom these emigrants, your brothers, your fathers, your children, has given them homes, and comfort, and consideration, and fortune, has done more for them than ever was done by their own native

Mr. President, I have no idea that anything that I may say will make Congress call in this debt. I have not the least idea of it in the world. I do not expect that it ever will be called in, and it will not be called in because there will always be enough people in Congress to vote down the proposition, and because there will always be interests enough to take money out of the Treasury of the United States in order that a public debt may be made and perpetuated; but nevertheless it is a debt due by these States to the United States.

I must say, with the greatest respect for my friend from New York, IMT CONKLING I that he never was in greater error in the world than [Mr. CONKLING,] that he never was in greater error in the world than when he talked about there being an estoppel. Sir, one single sentence is an answer to him. No constitutional government ever was estopped or ever in the nature of things can be estopped to demand obedience to the requisitions of its fundamental law. If the fundamental law of the United States, its Constitution, forbids our raising money to give it to the States, if it forbids our raising money to distribute to the States, and yet if under the guise not of a gift but of a deposit we give them that money and then undertake to say afterward that we are estopped to reclaim our money, the answer is that the Constitution does not authorize us to give it to you and we cannot be estopped to obey the Constitution.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the honorable Senator indulge me in an

Mr. CONKLING. Will the honorable Senator induling the infan inquiry?

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. I want to ask a simple question to test the Senator's position. Suppose Congress to-day by a bill called "to improve rivers and harbors," if you please, appropriates money to build a plank road, or a grist-mill, or anything else which the Senator and I would sure was entirely beyond the purview of the Constitution. plank road, or a grist-mill, or anything else which the Senator and I would agree was entirely beyond the purview of the Constitution, but the money is appropriated and expended and twenty or thirty years afterward the question comes up, would the honorable Senator say that because the original act was unconstitutional the Government could turn around and reclaim this money and collect it, and then vindicate it by his proposition that it could not be estopped by denying obedience to the fundamental law?

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator puts a case which would create no debt at all; that is the answer. But does anybody deny that here was a debt? The Senator most happily called it "a call loan." So it was a call loan until when? It is a call loan to this day. What is the difference between the first act and the second act on this subject? Simply this, that according to the first act it might be called ject? Simply this, that according to the first act it might be called by an officer of the Government, the Secretary of the Treasury; by the act as it now stands on the statute-book it can only be called by the Government itself, by an act of Congress. The creditors are the same, the debtors are the same, and the right to call is precisely the same. The only difference between the legislation is that a mere executive officer of the Government once had the right to call and now he has not, but the Government itself must make the demand.

Mr. BLAINE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question at that point, if it does not interrupt him?

Mr. THURMAN. Yes, sir. ject? Simply this, that according to the first act it might be called

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator says the debtors are the same. I want to ask him whether the debt was not incurred by the entire population of the United States at that time exactly in equal proportions?

Mr. THURMAN. No, sir; it was not.

Mr. BLAINE. Was it not given exactly according to the basis of representation, and did not every State, representing the entire nation, I suppose then having a population of about sixteen million, have share and share alike? So that if the debtors were the same were they not the whole people of the United States?

Mr.THURMAN. No, sir; it was not the whole people of the United States then, for not a dollar of it was given to any one of the Territories. It was all given to the States. There were Territories then that had more population in them than some of the States, and they got not a dollar. The real truth of it is that the fact to which the Senator alludes is one that makes against his whole argument. Here have been eleven States admitted into the Union since this money was deposited, and there are ten Territories besides—all the Pacific States, all the States made out of Territory acquired from Mexico, and other all the States made out of Territory acquired from Mexico, and other States beside them in the great Northwest. All of them have been admitted. Here is a debt due to the United States. They have their right to a portion of that debt, just as much as Maine or Ohio has, but yet it is all to be given up; they get none of it whatever. Although they may have been citizens, millions of them, and helped to defray the expenses of the Government then, although they may have gone into the Mexican war and helped to gain that mighty territory which was gained at the close of that war, although they may have helped to preserve the Union by their arms and their treasure in the helped to preserve the Union by their arms and their treasure in the last war, not one dollar of this money do they get. It is all to be sponged out, it is all to be wiped out, forsooth.

Mr. President, I say that really there is no equity in it whatsoever, and if the Government would do, as I humbly conceive, what justice and good policy require, it would demand of these States to pay up. The Senator from New York was pleased to draw a very striking picture of the wants of this country in the late war of the rebellion; he described the Government as seeking for money in all the nooks and crapping in which it could now in order to get money to cover and crannies into which it could pry in order to get money to carry on the war, but never then thinking of demanding this money of these States. No, sir, it did not demand the money of these States, because nearly half the States that received the money were in rebellion. It could not call for this money from the original States when those States that were in rebellion could not be called upon at all until they were conquered. Of course it did not demand it, but the fact remains were conquered. Of course it did not demand it, but the rect remains just as I stated, just as the Senator from New York admits, that this money was a call loan. It was subject to the call of the Secretary of the Treasury. That was afterward changed so that it was subject to the call of the Congress of the United States, and pray where is there any estoppel of this debt? The statute of limitations does not run against the Government. "No time runs against the king;" no estoppel runs against the Government to forbid it setting up the Constitution of the load and demanding the return of the money. But, sir, I do not want to take up more time. Certainly I shall never live to see this money called back, but I will not vote for a bill which sanctions such a principle as this. That is my objection to this bill. I never expect the money to be paid back. I know that in justice it ought to be, but I never expect it at all. But a bill that sanctions the idea that the General Government can raise the money with which the State governments are to be carried on, that the General Government can raise $28,000,000, or something like that, and deposit it round about and then give it up, that the money in the Treasury is at the absolute control of Congress to give it without consideration to whom it pleases—a bill that rests on such a principle as that I never can vote for, although no good whatever can come of its defeat except the vindication of a principle.

M. GARLAND, I may that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the consideratio

Mr. GARLAND. I move that the Senate proceed to the considera-tion of executive business.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. It is understood that this bill is the unfinished business for to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill under consideration is necessarily the unfinished business if the Senate shall pass from it at this time. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-three minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 20, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. Harrison, D. D.
The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair finds upon examination that the previous question was not prevailing upon the passage of the bill making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service, on which a quorum did not vote on Saturday. The Chair therefore, as required. by the rules, will now call the States and Territories in alphabetical order for bills and joint resolutions for printing and reference; and under this call joint and concurrent resolutions and memorials of State and territorial Legislatures can be presented and appropriately referred; and on this call resolutions of inquiry directed to heads of the Executive Departments are in order for reference to the appropriate committee, which latter resolutions shall be reported to the House within one week.

LANDS IN THE INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. DUNN introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 350) relating to lands in the Indian Territory; which was read a first and second

Mr. DUNN. I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. HASKELL. I suggest that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER. This relates to public lands of the United States.

Mr. CONGER. But they are in the Indian Territory.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman introducing the joint resolution desires it should go to the Committee on the Public Lands. The gentleman introducing the joint resolution desires it should go to the Committee on the Public Lands. tleman from Kansas and the gentleman from Michigan wish it to go to the Committee on Indian Affairs. It is for the House to decide.

Mr. BLOUNT. Let the joint resolution be read.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, dc., That the lands in the Indian Territory to which the Indian title has been extinguished, and which are unoccupied by Indians, are public lands of the United States and are hereby declared subject to settlement under the preemption and homestead laws.

Mr. CONGER. It is well understood——
The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order under the rule.
Mr. CONGER. Not on the question of reference ?
The SPEAKER. The Chair has allowed it to some extent heretofore, but he directs attention to the rule which expressly says that the question of reference shall be decided "without debate." Mr. CONGER. I suppose an objection will prevent the resolution coming in?

The SPEAKER. It will not, for it comes in under the rules. The House can vote on the question of reference.

Mr. FINLEY. I wish to inquire of the Chair whether under the rule this joint resolution must not go the Committee on the Public

The SPEAKER. There is a doubt where it should go.

Mr. CONGER. If I may be allowed to make one remark—
The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman, if no one

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman, if no one objects.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to say that the title of the Indians to these lands in the Indian Territory has been extinguished by an arrangement with the Indians to make places for other Indians, not for whites, not for settlement. The law prevents any white people settling there; and this is one of the methods by which it is attempted to get possession of that Territory for white settlers. I think the resolution should go the committee that has charge of the rights of Indians in that Territory.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment to refer the joint resolution to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The question being put, there were—ayes 39, noes 41.

Mr. CONGER. I consider this so important a matter that I would like to have the sense of the House fully tested upon it, and must therefore raise the question of a want of a quorum.

The SPEAKER. What vote will the gentleman have on it? By tellers, or by yeas and nays?

Ine SPEARER. What vote will the gentleman have on it? By tellers, or by yeas and nays?

Mr. CONGER. We may as well have it by yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; there being 25 in the affirmative, more than one-fifth of the last vote.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 114, nays 68, not voting 109; as follows:

No. 6713) to prevent the solicitation, collection, contribution, disbursement, and use of money or objects of value for elections or any political purposes, by officers in the service of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, on last Saturday when the vote was taken upon the passage of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, no quorum voted. It is proper we should get that bill through promptly so that it may go to the Senate for reference and consideration. If we delay action there may not be a quorum present when the question is brought up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the rell be again called upon the passage of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill. The Chair hears no objection.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 194, nays 2, not voting 95; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

Mr. SAPP with Mr. CLARDY, on an political questions until intener notice.

Mr. KENNA with Mr. BURROWS, for to-day.

Mr. McKENZIE. I am paired with Mr. Hellman, but with the consent of his colleagues I have voted in order to make a quorum.

The vote way.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BOYNTON VS. LORING.

Mr. CALKINS. I rise to a question of privilege concerning the right of a member to his seat, and report from the Committee on Elections the following resolution:

Resolved, That GEORGE B. LORING is entitled to retain his seat in the Forty-sixth Congress as a member of the sixth congressional district of the State of Massachusetts, and that E. Moody Boynton is not entitled thereto.

I desire to ask, Mr. Speaker, in behalf of the minority of the committee, leave to submit their views between this and the time when the resolution shall be called up for action. And I now give notice that I shall call it up immediately after the holidays.

The SPEAKER. The report of the Committee on Elections is ordered to be printed and laid over to be called up at the time indicated by the gentlement from Indiana.

ordered to be printed and laid over to be called up at the time indicated by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. WEAVER. The views of the minority also to be printed.

The SPEAKER. Are they ready?

Mr. WEAVER. They are not ready to put in now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection to the suggestion that the views of the minority shall also be ordered to be printed with the report of the committee. with the report of the committee.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This being the third Monday of the month, the Chair directs the Clerk to read the rule under which the business next in order will be conducted.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XXVIII.

No standing rule or order of the House shall be rescinded or changed without one day's notice of the motion therefor, and no rule shall be suspended except by a vote of two-thirds of the members present, nor shall the Speaker entertain a motion to suspend the rules except on the first and third Mondays of each month after the call of States and Territories shall have been completed, preference being given on the first Monday to individuals and on the third Monday to committees, and during the last six days of a session.

2. All motions to suspend the rules shall, before being submitted to the House, be seconded by a majority by tellers, if demanded.

3. When a motion to suspend the rules has been seconded, it shall be in order, before the final vote is taken thereon, to debate the proposition to be voted upon for thirty minutes, one-half of such time to be given to debate in favor of, and one-half to debate in opposition to, such proposition, and the same right of debate shall be allowed whenever the previous question has been ordered on any proposition on which there has been no debate.

The SPEAKER. This is the third Monday, when, according to the rule just read, committees of the House are entitled to recognition for motions to suspend the rules. The Chair has given a good deal of reflection as to the manner in which he should discharge this duty of reflection as to the manner in which he should discharge this duty under the rule without discrimination among the committees of the House, and he has come to the conclusion as the result of his best judgment, that in the recognition of committees the Chair will call them in the order in which they appear in the rules. By this proceeding each committee will have an opportunity of one recognition for suspension of the rules before any other committee can have two opportunities for recognitions. The Chair thinks it is the most equitable mode to adopt. He therefore calls the Committee on Elections first. Of course these recognitions must be accompanied by the statement on the part of the gentleman moving to suspend the rules that his committee did actually by vote direct such motion to be made.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to ask, for information, whether a committee may direct one of its members to move to suspend the rules and pass a bill which did not come from that committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not suppose that any committee of this House would undertake to interfere with another committee which had a bill under consideration in that way.

Mr. SPRINGER. But there are many bills that might properly go to several committees, and one of these committees might desire to take cognizance of a subject that was not really before it, although it might have under the rules authority to do so. Or one committee might desire to pass a measure which another committee would op-

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the suspension of the rules in accordance with the view expressed by this rule, which has been read, should only relate to business actually in charge of a committee and which had directed a motion to be made to suspend the rules.

Mr. SPRINGER. Such committees as have charge of a subject-matter which is properly before them by reference?

The SPEAKER. The Chair takes it for granted that the reference of a subject to a committee without controversy or by order of the House is an expression of the judgment of the House as to the authority of that committee to take cognizance of the subject.

Mr. SAMFORD. Do I understand that it is the intention of the Speaker that there shall be but one recognition of each committee until all the other committees are called?

The SPEAKER. That was the statement the Chair made, so that each committee would have an opportunity for recognition.

Mr. SAMFORD. For the introduction of but one motion to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. After the committees were all ealled the Chair would then call the committees again and give the committees in this way what the Chair believes to be an equal chance to introduce

Mr. SAMFORD. Then if the Chair goes all through with the call of committees in this form he will begin again at the beginning of the list and call them in their regular order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will go to the first committee on the list, or else begin the call at the committee where the call left off if it be not completed.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think the next time the call is made that it will be proper to begin where the call was left off, or with the last committee called, for this reason: that the order in which the Speaker proposes to call the committees to-day is different from the order in which they have heretofore been called, and committees which have business or may desire to report might not have been aware of this change so as to avail themselves of the call this morning, and could not know, of course, that the Chair was going to adopt a different system of calling than has heretofore prevailed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair could not very well anticipate the judgment of the House would approve his suggestion upon this mat-It is his desire now to submit the suggestion to the approval of the House

Mr. FINLEY. But committees may have matters to report, but are not prepared to report at this time by reason of the new plan suggested by the Speaker, or they may not be ready to report now.

The SPEAKER. That would be their own omission.

Mr. FINLEY. It is, then, the Speaker's intention to call the committees in the order in which they stand upon the list to-day, each committee for one recognition?

The SPEAKER. It is, with the consent of the House; and the Chair, after having gone over the committees, could then, if the House should so direct him, begin again and call those committees which have not had an opportunity of reporting in view of the fact, as claimed, that they have not had notice of this new order, and are not prepared to report.

Mr. SPRINGER. The Chair having gone through with the list of committees, would not the Chair on the second call take only those committees which have not had an opportunity to report, not having notice of this new method?

Mr. CONGER. That would give more time for the other committees to prepare their business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is willing to adopt any course that the House directs

Mr. CONGER. I think the rule as proposed is a very just one. If committees are not prepared now, they can be by the time the next call is had.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will then submit the question to the The SPEAKER. The Chair will then submit the question to the House, that in case a committee to-day is not ready, in view of the fact that they have not had previous notice of the purpose of the Chair in making recognitions in manner as proposed, whether under the first call of the committees the committees which do not to-day claim the privilege shall have at the next call the preference or prior opportunity of motions to suspend the rules, rather than committees which have been called to-day and exercised the privilege?

Mr. BUCKNER. As I understand this is not any new proposition.

The rule gives the right to the committees, and the Speaker is simply fixing an equitable method of reaching them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is trying to avoid anything like discrimination between the various committees of the House. [Cries of "Regular order!"] The Chair will submit the question to the

Mr. CONGER. But, Mr. Speaker, if there was any matter of such importance before any committee prior to to-day, they would have been called upon to have it ready, and it cannot be important enough to take precedence of others even under this rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit to the House whether it is the wish of the House that committees called to-day, which are not ready to exercise the privilege under the proposed practice, shall have the right on the third Monday of next month to be called in preference to those who had the opportunity to-day and exercised

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I think that ought not to be given, for the reason that if the committees are not ready now they may be ready between this and the time that the next call is had, and therefore it would do injustice to those who are now ready if they were compelled to delay.

Mr. WHITE. That is proper. I suggest that we go on in the old form to-day, and then on the next call of committees proceed under

The SPEAKER. The Chair will act in obedience to the order of the House, whatever that may be.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the Chair be kind enough to state the question again ? The SPEAKER. The Chair will proceed to-day to call the committees in the order in which they stand in the rule. The complaint is made that the committees were not notified of this new plan which the Chair desires to have adopted, and therefore they have not had in their committees an opportunity of selecting matters of business upon which they wanted to enter motions to suspend the rules, and that by calling them to-day they would be cut off. The suggestion is this: Is it the judgment of the House that the Chair shall on the third Monday of the next month call such committees as do not exercise that right a day when called?

cise that right to-day when called?

Mr. FORT. Would it not be best to wait until the next third Monday comes before that question is submitted?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it might as well be settled

The question being submitted to the House, it was decided in the negative.

The SPEAKER. The House having decided in the negative, the Chair will follow the practice as suggested.

Mr. SPRINGER. Now let me ask whether it would be necessary for a vote to be had in committee authorizing the motion to suspend the rules to be made, or whether it would be sufficient to obtain informally the authority of the majority of the members of the committee? The SPEAKER. The rule gives preference on the third Monday to committees. The Chair thinks a statement by the member asking on behalf of a committee the suspension of the rules should be accompanied by the statement that he has the authority of his committee for that purpose.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. It would not be proper for the Chair to go behind this statement of a member as to his authority.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is always willing to take a member's

Mr. SPARKS. This point is involved: whether a member desiring an opportunity to move a suspension of the reles can go about among the members of his committee, and having got the sanction of a majority shall then be recognized; or whether it should be the action of the committee sitting as a committee. The latter is my view of the matter.

the matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman's view is correct. It should be the action of the committee in regular session.

Mr. SPRINGER. It was my desire that that should be announced from the chair, so that there might be no misunderstanding.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is not the action of a committee when a gentleman goes round among its members and gets their opinions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated he thinks it should be the action of the committee sitting as a committee.

FUNDING BILL.

The call of committees was then proceeded with. The Committee on Ways and Means having been called,
Mr. FERNANDO WOOD said: Instead of asking now a suspension of the rules, I give notice that to-morrow morning, after the regular order has been dispensed with, I shall ask the House to go on with the funding bill and continue its consideration till its final passage before the vacation.

Mr. MILLS. I hope the gentleman will not do that to-morrow, because the Senate having concurred in the resolution for the holiday adjournment, a great many members will be leaving.

STAMPS ON BANK-CHECKS.

The Committee on Banking and Currency having been called, Mr. PRICE said: I am authorized by the Committee on Banking and Currency to move to suspend the rules so as to take the House bill No. 5897 from the House Calendar and put it on its passage.

Mr. MILLS. I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. This is a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. MILLS. I make the point of order that that bill does not come legitimately from the gentleman's committee.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 5897) repealing section 3418 of the Revised Statutes, in reference to stamps on bank-checks.

Be it enacted, &c., That section 3418 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same is hereby, repealed, and that from and after the passage of this act no stamp shall be necessary upon any check such as is named in said section 3418.

Mr. MILLS. I make the point of order that that bill does not come legitimately from the Committee on Banking and Currency. Under the practice announced by the Speaker to-day each committee of this House having jurisdiction of the subject-matters committed to that committee have the privilege of coming before the House by their organized action and presenting a bill to be acted on under a suspension of the privilege. sion of the rules.

sion of the rules.

Mr. PRICE. If the gentleman will hear the report read I think he will change his opinion.

Mr. MILLS. No report can convince me that the Committee on Banking and Currency are charged with the consideration of questions dealing with taxation. I know the rules commit the whole subject of taxation to the Committee on Ways and Means, and I know the Committee on Banking and Currency have no higher right to come into this House and propose to deal with anything connected with the fiscal administration of this Government than the Committee on Agriculture have a right to ask a reduction of duty on agricultural implements, or than the Committee on Military Affairs have the right to ask a reduction of duty on ordnance. And I might run the parallel through the whole of the committees of this House. It is a usurpation of authority on the part of the Committee on Banking and Currency to come here and ask this House without any sort of argument to deal with the question of taxes, when they well know themselves rency to come here and ask this House without any sort of argument to deal with the question of taxes, when they well know themselves they have nothing to do with that question and cannot legitimately know anything about it; I mean, of course, as a committee they are not charged with the fiscal administration of this Government at all.

The question about how much money shall be in circulation or how much banks shall have on deposit, all the questions about the mode of conducting national banks, legitimately belong to that committee. But the question of how money is to be taken from the people of the United States to support the Government of the United States belongs to the Committee on Ways and Means, and you have no right to ask for the cutting off any part of that revenue without consultation with that committee.

Mr. PRICE. It is a sufficient answer to all the gentleman from tion with that committee.

Mr. PRICE. It is a sufficient answer to all the gentleman from Texas has said on the point of order to remark that this matter has been referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency by bill and petition. It has been considered by them and they have reported this bill, and I have been authorized to move a suspension of the rules in order to pass it. If the matter had not been referred to the committee by bill and petition, then the argument of the gentleman from Texas would have weight on the point of order; but having been properly brought before them, under the rules of the House they have jurisdiction of the matter so referred.

Mr. MILLS. The reference of the bill to your committee—

The SPEAKER. Did this bill come in on petition, or by a bill read in place f in place f

Mr. PRICE. Both by bill and by petition, and was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency; the bill being read by its title.
The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to have the report read for his information, before he considers the point of order.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Banking and Currency, to whom was referred the bill in reference to repeal of the law requiring a two-cent stamp on checks drawn on banks, erence to repeal or the law requiring a two-cent stamp on checks drawn on banks, report:

That petitions for the passage of such a bill, presented to the House and referred to said committee, or gently demand this action. This two-cent stamp is one of the few remaining taxes denominated a "war tax," and is paid, not by the bank, but by every person who deposits his or her money for safe-keeping in a bank. This will be a relief to all classes of persons. As the law now stands, money may be deposited in a bank for safe-keeping without cost to the depositor, but cannot be withdrawn without paying this tax, under a heavy penalty. Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no doubt that under the rules of the House this bill should have been referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. Does the bill come from the Committee on Banking and Currency based only on petition?

Mr. PRICE. It comes in on a petition and on a bill read twice by its title and referred to the committee.

The SPEAKER. That fact does not appear of record, as the Chair is informed by the journal clerk.

Mr. PRICE. Well, I state that fact.

Mr. MILLS. This bill could not have been properly referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. PRICE. It was so referred.

Mr. MILLS. It may have been referred, but improperly.

Mr. PRICE. At the time no question was raised as to the reference

At the time no question was raised as to the reference Mr. PRICE. of the bill.

Mr. MILLS. My friend remembers the fearful contest raised in this House about referring a bill to the Committee on Agriculture. Mr. PRICE. Yes; and it looks like we were to have a "fearful contest" now about a bill that has been referred.

Mr. MILLS. And your side of the House compelled the bill to be brought back and referred to the appropriate committee.

Mr. CALKINS. I submit that when the House has passed upon the reference of a bill, that reference stands until it is reversed by the action of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is trying to find out the history of the case in that connection. This bill is not reported as a substitute—

Mr. PRICE. Not at all; it is the very bill which was presented under the rules of the House, read twice, and referred to the Commit-under the rules of the House, read twice, and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. MILLS. And improperly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised by the journal clerk that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] is mistaken in that respect.

Mr. PRICE. I do not see how that can be, for I presented the bill myself and had it referred to the Committee on Banking and Currence.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read from the Journal.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. PRICE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported a bill (H. R. No. 5897) repealing section 3418 of Revised Statutes in reference to stamps on bank-checks, accompanied by a report (No. 1126) in writing thereon; which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PRICE. But the introduction of the bill was prior to that.

The SPEAKER. Can the gentleman from Iowa remember the date of the original introduction of the bill in open House?

Mr. PRICE. I could not state that without reference to the record. The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised by the journal clerk that this bill got its first status in the House on the day it was reported

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised by the journal clerk that this bill got its first status in the House on the day it was reported from the committee and placed on the House Calendar.

Mr. PRICE. My recollection is that I introduced the bill myself, it was read twice, and on my motion referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency; and the committee considered it and instructed me to report it back to the House with a favorable report, as shown by the Journal which has just been read.

Mr. CONGER. The question has heretofore been raised and decided by a full House that where a bill containing subject-matter belonging to one committee under our rules has by inadvertence, design, or in any other manner been referred to the wrong committee, this House will take it from that committee and send it where it properly belongs under the rules.

The SPEAKER. It is for the House to do that.

Mr. CONGER. It is not to be wondered at if the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE,] his Quaker reputation for candor and sincerity being known all over the House, had introduced such a bill, that no man should suspect that he was endeavoring to give his committee the control of a subject-matter that did not belong to it at all.

On a former occasion we took from a committee that had obtained the possession of a subject-matter the bill so referred to them and referred it to another committee. Suppose that this bill has gone through all the forms, but illegally and improperly; suppose the House did receive this report from the committee and did place the bill on their Calendar. It does not now belong to that committee, for it is on the Calendar of the House and beyond the control of any committee whatever. If that committee did wrong once in taking possession of this subject-matter, and if the House inadvertently permitted that to be done, the subject has now gone where the committee has no control of it as a committee any more than has any individual member of this House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, if his attention had been directed to tee has no control of it as a committee any more than has any individual member of this House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, if his attention had been directed to the point at the time this bill was originally introduced, would have ruled that this subject belonged to the Committee on Ways and Means. But there having been no objection to this bill going to the Committee on Banking and Currency, it is now for the House to correct in some way that reference, if it should deem it necessary.

Mr. MILLS. From the report of the Committee on Banking and Currency it seems this bill was brought in upon a petition.

Mr. CALKINS. It occurs to me that the way out of this difficulty is to vote down the motion to suspend the rules, and then make a motion to refer the bill to the proper committee.

Mr. MILLS. I hope the Committee on Banking and Currency will let this bill go to the proper committee.

Mr. BLOUNT. I raise the question whether the fact that this bill has been reported back to the House and placed on the Calendar does not deprive the Committee on Banking and Currency of the right to not deprive the Committee on Banking and Currency of the right to bring it up at this time and ask a suspension of the rules. Mr. HUBBELL. It is not now the committee's bill, it belongs to the Hous

Mr. MILLS. No committee but one having jurisdiction of the subject-matter can bring a bill before the House and ask to have it

Mr. BLOUNT. The question is not which committee is entitled to report the bill. It is now on the Calendar, and out of the hands of any committee.

Mr. PRICE. It appears to me, Mr. Speaker, that this matter is very plain. If this were the original introduction of the bill and the question of reference were raised, then this discussion would be in order, and it would be entirely competent for the House to determine where it would send the bill. But the House has had this bill before it once and has referred it to the Committee on Banking and Currency, has received the bill back upon the report of that committee, and has placed it on the Calendar.

Now I submit (and I think the Chair will agree with me) that it is The bill belongs to the House, but under the call of the Committee on Banking and Currency I rise in my place and say I am authorized by that committee to take that bill from the Calendar and ask a suspenthat committee to take that bill from the Calendar and ask a suspension of the rules to put it on its passage. It does not belong to the Committee on Banking and Currency any longer; it belongs to the House. I ask to take it from the House Calendar and put it on its passage under the rules of the House. The point where the objection of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] would properly lie has passed. Any gentleman on this floor could have made the same motion I made if authorized by the Committee on Banking and Currency

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. My friend on my right has anticipated the remark I was going to make. The question whether this bill was rightfully or wrongfully before the Committee on Banking and Currency was concluded by the action of the House. That Committee has acted on the bill, and it has gone upon the Calendar. While now the bill is within the control of the House, yet by courtesy and universal custom any proposed action upon that bill is under the control of the Committee on Banking and Currency. They come in now and propose to suspend the rules to put it on its passage, and I hold under the rules that is the only action that can be taken. You can under the rules that is the only action that can be taken. You cannot move to refer the bill to any other committee. All the action that can be taken under the rules now is to vote on the bill. If it be voted down the motion to refer may be in order, but it is not in order now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that this bill was reported back from the Committee on Banking and Currency as a bill reported on petition, and not as an original bill—

Mr. PRICE. A report upon petition and bill, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is this the original bill as introduced by the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. PRICE. I say it is the original bill, word for word and letter

The SPEAKER. The Chair is without remedy in the matter so far as his power extends. The bill is on the Calendar of the House.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Is it contended that because a bill is on the Calendar of the House the mode of conducting its passage is not under the control of the committee which reported it? If bills reported by the various committees and placed upon the Calendar are not to be taken charge of by the committees that respectively reported them—if the committee that reported a bill is by placing it apon the Calendar ousted of control over the bill, in what condition will be the business of the House? As the Chair remarked awhile ago very sensibly, in reply to one gentleman, certainly no committee of the House would undertake to control a bill reported by another committee. If a bill which has been reported is not to be controlled afterward by the committee reporting it, what committee is to have control of it

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that if this is the bill originally introduced and referred to the Banking and Currency Committee, and reported from that committee and placed on the House

Calender, then said committee should have control of it until the House otherwise directs.

Mr. WARNER. But is it in order for that committee to call it up out of its order from the House Calendar?

The SPEAKER. Under a suspension of the rules that can be done. This action requires a two-thirds vote; and the question is first on

Mr. FORT. I desire to ask a question which may refer as well to other bills which may come up hereafter. This bill having been reported by the Committee on Banking and Currency, and being now on the Calendar, has or has not that committee lost jurisdiction of the bill?

The SPEAKER. When a committee properly reports a bill on a subject over which it has jurisdiction, the control of that bill, no matter where it may go in the House, ought to belong, the Chair thinks, to the committee that reported it. The gentleman from Texas demands a vote on seconding the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. McLANE. I understand the gentleman from Texas to make a point of order which, in my judgment, has no reference at all to the original report. I understood the gentleman from Michigan to make substantially the same point. The question now before the House is not whether these petitions were originally properly referred. They tion. The point of order made by the gentleman from Texas is that now, to-day, on a call of committees for motions to suspend the rules, no committee can make that motion except upon a subject over which it has jurisdiction. And although the point was not made originally when the bill and petition were referred, it is perfectly competent to make that point now, when the motion is made to suspend the rules. As I understood the gentleman from Texas, the point he made was that the Committee on Banking and Currency could not, under the rules of this House authorizing a committee to move for suspension of the rules on a certain Monday, make such motion in reference to a revenue bill. That point, I think, is very well taken. It is an entirely new question. In think, is very well taken. It is an entirely new question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the suggestions and argument of the gentleman from Maryland should weigh with the judgment of the House.

Mr. McLANE. The supposition cited by the gentleman from Virginia has no application at all. It might and may be the custom of the House. It is not the rule of the House, but it is the custom of the House for committees who report bills to keep them in charge. But this is now a question of rule, and it must transcend the question of custom; and it is not competent for any member of this House to move to suspend the rules and take up a revenue bill for consideration. No committee except the Committee on Ways and Means can authorize a member thereof to make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland will remember the Chair made special inquiry of the gentleman from Iowa whether this was the actual bill which he himself had introduced into the House was the actual bill which he himself had introduced into the House and had referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. He stated that it was. The Chair thinks it was not a proper reference. Since then the Committee on Banking and Currency reported the bill back to the House. Thus the former action of the House was confirmed. The House referred the bill to the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The Chair is of opinion that under the circumstances stated the control of the bill is with the committee reporting it, and that the remedy sought by the gentleman from Texas is not now with the Chair, but with the House.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, this question is confused by going back

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, this question is confused by going back to the original status of this bill. The original introduction of this bill into this House has nothing on the face of the earth to do with defining its privileged character under the rules. Suppose a committee had originated a bill which had never been introduced into the House at all, and had instructed one of its members to come in and take the benefit of the rule and ask the rules be suspended and the bill passed. It has nothing to do with any prior introduction at all. The privileged character of the bill is taken from the fact that the committee having jurisdiction of the subject comes here and asks for a suspension of the rules to pass it. It does not go back to any prior question at all. Whether the control of this bill was originally with or without jurisdiction does not make a particle of difference. But the question for the Chair to decide here is, has the committee having charge of the subject-matter, and therefore having jurisdiction of it, asked this House to suspend the rules and pass the bill? I charge that bill has no sort of authority in this House from any part charge that bill has no sort of authority in this House from any part it has taken, so far as its reference and report are concerned. The thing that gives that bill significance before the House and makes it within the rules is, has it the indorsement of the committee to which the rules committed the subject? There is all there is of it.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I demand the regular order.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I want to recall to my friend from Texas just one fact. He supposes the case of a committee taking charge of a bill which has not been referred to it—a committee wrongfully taking charge of a bill of which it has no invisidation. Very well: a bill which has not been referred to it—a committee wrongfully taking charge of a bill of which it has no jurisdiction. Very well; when that bill is reported to the House, if the committee reporting it has no jurisdiction under the rules over the subject, it is then competent for any member to move that the bill be referred to the appropriate committee; in other words, to give the bill the proper reference to the appropriate committee, instead of allowing it to be sent to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, there to be placed on the Calendar for action. If the House, however, by negligence permits that bill to go to the Calendar under the rules of the House, it loses its remedy, and the committee which may have jurisdiction in the matter under the rules loses all right to it. In other words, the House has decided the question for itself.

Mr. SPARKS. But suppose the committee originates the bill.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Very well; suppose a committee originates a bill and reports it to the House, and the House sends it to the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, nobody interposing, no member or committee objecting, con-

Union, nobody interposing, no member or committee objecting, consent is then given, and, therefore, by vote of the House, the bill is properly and regularly upon the Calendar under the rules.

Mr. CONVERSE. I have one word I desire to say on this subject. It seems to me it makes no difference whether this measure was prop-not whether these petitions were originally properly referred. They have been referred.

The SPEAKER. If it had originated on a petition, the Chair thinks he could properly have interposed.

Mr. McLANE. He stated that it originated on a bill and petition. The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa states that it originated on a bill referred and petition placed in the box at the desk.

Mr. McLANE. I take the statement of the gentleman as to the fact. He said the subject had been originated as well by bill as by petition. The point of order made by the gentleman from Texas has no reference to that original reference at all, whether by bill or by petithis rule for the Committee on Banking and Currency or not. The null does not limit a committee to the subjects properly under its charge. The rule authorizes one day in the month for each member of this House to make a motion to suspend the rules, and on another Monday authorizes each committee to make that motion. The rule does not limit the motion to any subject that may have come under the control of that committee at all. It is perfectly competent under this rule for the Committee on Banking and Currency to move to suspend the rules and pass a bill that came from the Committee on Ways and Means or from any other committee of the House. We must have a strict construction of this rule, and if the rule is wrong it ought to

Now, the other rule in relation to the suspension of the rules applies to the suspension of all rules, and applies as much to the suspension of this rule in relation to the reference of bills as it does to any other rule of the House. The proposition is to suspend all the rules of the House and to pass a bill; and the committee is authorized to make that motion, and a two-thirds vote in the House results in suspending all the rules, the rule in relation to the reference of the bills as well as any other and all other rules of the House Mr. SPRINGER. It was with a view to having this question settled that I raised this point when the Chair announced his decision this that I raised this point when the Chair announced his decision this morning in reference to the manner in which the committees would be called. Up to that time there was no practical question before the House on which a decision could be predicated. The Chair has decided that when a measure had been referred to a committee and that committee had taken jurisdiction of the matter, that the fact had thereby been adjudicated by the House, and the Chair would recognize the right of the committee thereafter to control the bill, whether it was on the Calendar or had come originally from the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair reaffirmed that decision but a few mo-

Mr. SPRINGER. And correctly so, in my judgment. Now, the point having been made before, when a similar question was before the House, without reference to any particular measure, the decision of the Chair then adds additional weight to the decision now made. But so far as the point which has been made by the gentleman from Ohio so far as the point which has been made by the gentleman from Ohio is concerned, that committees may move to suspend the rules not only upon questions which have been submitted to them but upon any other question, whether submitted to them or not, I think that carries the rule too far, and it was with a view to having a judgment thereupon of the Chair that I made the point I did. The Chair has, as I believe, decided properly both these questions, and I think the House should proceed now to consider the motion which is pending.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not believe that the improper reference of a petition through the petition-box at the desk should

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not believe that the improper reference of a petition through the petition-box at the desk should give to a committee the power to originate a bill on a subject which the rules of the House deny such committee the jurisdiction of. Therefore the Chair submitted the question to the gentleman from Iowa as to whether he had originally introduced this bill or not.

Mr. PRICE. And I replied that my distinct recollection was, and also the recollection of the chairman of the committee with whom I had conferred, that it had been so introduced.

Mr. CONGER. Is this proposed bill the same number as the other which was referred?

which was referred?

Mr. FORT. Yes, sir. The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that the number is the same.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word in reply to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CONVERSE.] The Chair recognizing a committee under this rule must recognize the committee with its proper subject-matter, else there is no rule. Now, the point here is that it is attempted to introduce matter belonging to another committee and seek to pass it under a suspension of the rules; matter which under all other rules of the House is properly to be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and no matter how it came to them or where it is now. I make the point that the Speaker in enforcing the rules of the House is bound to say when he recognizes any ing the rules of the House is bound to say when he recognizes any gentleman of any committee—is bound before he receives the motion to suspend the rules (for after that motion is adopted it of course vacates all the rules for the time being)—is bound to see that the rules of the House in regard to the subject-matter which the committee seeks to report upon give the authority which the committee attempts to exercise. In other words, that the subject-matter which the committee attempts to report is a subject which properly belongs to them under the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has generally avoided asking a member what subject he wanted to bring before the House under a suspension of the rules for manifest reasons.

Mr. CONGER. But there is no suspension of the rules until there has been a vote upon it. The gentleman from Ohio seems to be of the impression that the mere motion to suspend the rules vacates all

The SPEAKER. Of course that is an erroneous view. The mere motion to suspend the rules does not suspend the rules. After the motion to suspend the rules is made there is the second by tellers allowed, debate under the rule, and one motion to adjourn.

Mr. CONGER. The subject-matter of this bill which it is now proposed to pass here has been referred to the Committee on Ways and

The SPEAKER. The Chair repeats that in his opinion this subject belongs under the rules to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. CONGER. Now, as far as the Chair has any power of decision Mr. CONGER. Now, as far as the chair has any power of decision or of recognition in accordance with the rules upon that subject, the time to do it is when a motion is made to bring the subject-matter from a wrong committee and refer it to the committee it should properly have been referred to in the first instance, the committee having jurisdiction of the subject under the rules, and then he may decide that, although they reported it, it should be submitted to the House to determine whether it should not be appropriately referred.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman think that the Chair, after the House has received a bill and referred it to a committee, and that committee has reported it back and the House ordered it placed upon the Calendar—that the Chair should then have a right to displace it in an arbitrary way and say that it was not a proper subject for the consideration of that committee, and therefore that the bill should go to some other committee? Such action on the part of the Chair might lead to confusion.

Mr. CONGER. No, sir, I do not mean that. But I think the Chair pursued the right course the other day on an occasion similar to this, when the Chair stated that under the rules of course a certain bill was improperly referred, but he would submit the question to the House as to its reference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would prefer that the same course be taken now as to this bill.

taken now as to this bill.

Mr. CONGER. Very well. My point is if the Chair has failed to decide this question it should be submitted to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has expressed his willingness to submit the question to the House.

Mr. ACKLEN. I desire to say that the House has twice sanctioned the action taken in reference to this bill. In the first place, when it was introduced the House sanctioned the action by letting it be referred to the Committee on Ranking and Currency. When it was ferred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. When it was reported from that committee the House sanctioned the action taken When it was reported from that committee the House sanctioned the action taken by the committee by allowing it to be placed on the Calendar. And I submit now the remedy is to vote down the second, after which a motion to refer the bill to the proper committee would be in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that would be the most expeditious course. But the Chair is quite willing to submit this question to the House under the circumstances, which are entirely new.

Mr. DIBRELL. I ask the gentleman from Iowa to admit an amendment to the bill which would add to its strength.

Several members objected.

Several members objected.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is now willing to submit to the House the quesion whether this bill has been improperly referred, if consent is given.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I think the Chair cannot submit that question to the House. The only question that can be submitted is, Shall the rules be suspended and the bill passed? It is too late now to deal with the question of reference.

Mr. SAMFORD. When a gentleman moves to suspend the rules what rules does he move to suspend?

The SPEAKER. All rules are suspended if under the terms of the rules two-thirds so decide.

Mr. SAMFORD. Very well. One rule provides that certain sub-ject-matters shall be referred to certain committees which have jurisdiction over them. That is one of the rules. This motion is to suspend all rules and put the bill on its passage. The language permitting individuals to make the motion to suspend the rules is idenmitting individuals to make the motion to suspend the rules is identical with the language permitting committees to make the motion. Where is the limitation in regard to the subject-matters about which committees shall move to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. There is an equitable limitation.

Mr. SAMFORD. There is no limitation in the rules.

The SPEAKER. There is some limitation, however, in parliamentary law. The Chair will read the following paragraph from Wilson's Digest of Parliamentary Law:

Like a committee of the whole, a select committee is restrained from considering matters not specially referred to them by the House.

Mr. SAMFORD. But we may suspend the rules as to that. This motion is to suspend all rules including the rule which would require that subject-matter to go to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. There is objection to the Chair submitting the question of the propriety of the reference to the House. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Mills] demands that there shall be a second before the motion to suspend the rules is submitted to the House. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Texas, Mr. MILLS,

The House divided and the tellers reported—ayes 102, noes 45.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule fifteen minutes are allowed for debate on each side before the final vote is taken. [Cries of "Vote!" Vote!

Mr. MILLS. Let us have a vote by yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Clerk commenced to call the roll, and Mr. Acklen voted. Mr. McLANE, (who had been standing.) I rise to a question of privilege as well as a point of order.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. The gentleman cannot interrupt the

Mr. McLANE. I rose and addressed the Chair before the Clerk commenced to call the roll. I ask the Chair before a vote is taken on this motion to suspend the rules to submit to the House the question whether or not this improper reference shall be corrected. That question has not been put to the House; and I submit it is competent for a majority of the House now to correct that improper reference.

The House has already decided in the case referred to by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. Mills,] the case of the bill introduced by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Townshend,] and that a day after the reference, that at any time any improper reference could be cor-rected. This is the time to make that demand of the Chair before a vote is taken on a suspension of the rules upon this motion made on behalf of the Committee on Banking and Currency. I ask the Chair to submit to the House the question whether the reference is not wrong and should not now be corrected. It is proper for a majority of the House to decide that question before voting on the motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the House should at some time have the opportunity to correct an error of reference where it is manifestly wrong. The Chair some time ago proposed to submit that question, but there was objection. The difficulty now is that the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] did not make the point until after the commencement of the roll-call.

Mr. ACKLEN. If the Chair will permit me, I will state that the gentleman from Maryland rose to address the Chair before I answered to my name. I did not know when he rose that his intention was to address the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The question raised by the gentleman from Mary land is whether the House should now have an opportunity to correct an improper reference of this bill to the Committee on Banking and

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. The Chair made the same proposition before to submit that question to the House, and I objected. Nothing is now in order but the vote on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Virginia if he does not think it is proper and equitable at some time to allow the House to correct what has been improperly referred? If a majority declares it to be an improper reference, that same majority would be sufficient to prevent the bill passing by a two-thirds vote.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I will show how the submitting of that question operates to defeat the whole object of a suspension of the rules. The object is to give committees an opportunity to get a bill passed which in the ordinary routine of business could not be done. Therefore the motion is peremptary and cannot be interfored with

Therefore the motion is peremptory and cannot be interfered with. Therefore the motion is peremptory and cannot be interfered with. If you interfere with a motion to suspend the rules and pass a given bill, by moving to refer it to some committee, and then move to amend that motion by referring it to some other committee, you may have dilatory motions which would occupy the whole day.

The SPEAKER. This is a case in regard to which there should be no controversy. The bill was not properly before the Committee on Banking and Currency, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois. The House has already decided that question by a majority vote on seconding the praying question upon question by a majority vote on seconding the previous question upon the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill. That settles the question of what the House should now do, and the call of the roll has been commenced upon the suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] states that before any response was made he was on his feet to ask that a vote be taken upon the question of the proper reference.

Mr. SPRINGER. But the House has already decided that question by voting by tellers to second the motion to suspend the rules, and the House is now engaged in executing that order. By a majority vote the House has already seconded the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois. That is so.

Mr. SPRINGER. And it is now too late to raise the other question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, upon reflection, thinks it is too late, a name on the roll having been called.

Mr. SPRINGER. The only method of correcting an improper reference of a bill is by a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was so improperly referred, and that motion must be made within two days after the reference and cannot be made afterward. The House frequently refers bills to improper committees, and the reference is corrected by a reconsideration. Members must not complain that bills are improperly referred if they allow such references to be made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Mills] to control fifteen minutes. The rule provides that the gentleman who speaks against the proposition shall have fifteen

Mr. MILLS. Ido not think that I shall want to speak more than four

Mr. WARNER. I desire to address the House on this question.

The SPEAKER. If any gentleman desires to speak in favor of the proposition the Chair will now recognize him.

proposition the Chair will now recognize him.

Mr. PRICE. Can I take my time after the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. SPRINGER. Did not the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ACKLEN] respond to his name on the roll-call? I heard him respond to his name, and the response should be recorded.

Mr. ACKLEN. I have explained that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would not take advantage in that way so as to cut off debate against the terms of the rule, as the gentleman made it plain to the Chair that he desired to debate.

Mr. SPRINGER. The rule is that when the roll-call is commenced it must be completed without interruption.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] indicated some time ago his purpose to debate this proposition.

Mr. PRICE. I am perfectly willing to submit this question to the House without debate. If the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Mills] or any other gentleman opposed to the bill wishes to debate it, I am perfectly willing to listen to him, and, if I think it necessary, to reply to him in a few minutes.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] did not rise to debate this proposition until after the call of the roll had been commenced and a response had been given.

The SPEAKER. There was a great deal of confusion in the House at the time, and the Chair has never heretofore taken advantage of a member on like occasions to deprive such member of an opportunity to debate pending propositions, and will not do it now. The Chair therefore recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] to speak upon this proposition.

Mr. MILLS. Having opposed the passage by a suspension of the rules of the bill now under consideration, it is perhaps proper that I should give my reasons for it, and I hope that while I am doing so I may have the attention of the House.

Mr. STEVENSON. I desire to ask the gentleman one question.

What is it?

Mr. STEVENSON. What is the amount of revenue raised annually by this tax?

Mr. MILLS. You can ask the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, [Mr. Fernando Wood.] I think it is about $2,000,000.

Mr. WEAVER. It is over $2,000,000.

Mr. MILLS. I have the figures here from the Treasurer of the United States. For 1878 the receipts on account of bank-check stamps amounted to $1,835,269.44; for 1879, $1,924,604.16, and for 1880,

$2,270,421.40.

I have one or two very serious objections to the passage of this bill. One is as to the manner of passing it. This is a very grave subject, a subject given by the rules of the House to the Committee on Ways and Means. That committee is charged with the duty of preparing and reporting to this House such legislation as may be necessary in order to raise taxes, and to indicate from what subjects such taxes shall be raised, for the purpose of providing the means of carrying on the several departments of this Government. In this case a committee not charged with that business brings before this case a committee not charged with that business brings before this House and proposes to have passed without amendment or discussion a bill to remit the tax on the checks of bankers. This is my first objection.

My second objection is more serious. It is that while I am in favor of reducing taxes so far as they can properly be reduced, I think there of reducing taxes so far as they can properly be reduced, I think there are other subjects that commend themselves to the favorable consideration of the American Congress with far more force than the checks of the banking associations of the United States. Why is it that the committee having charge of this subject has not yet brought before this House some bill providing for removing the tax from clothing? We are here to-day, in this great legislative assembly of the American people, with a wintry snow falling all around us, with the cold wind blowing all over the northern part of this continent, while many a poor man is shivering because he has not enough clothing to wear. Yet who dares ask of this American Congress a reduction of the duty on woolen goods?

on woolen goods?

How much duty is now paid on woolen goods? One hundred per cent.

In the same way the shirts, the socks, the clothing, the blankets of our laboring people are taxed; yet the object of clandestinely smuggling the bill through the House in this manner is to shut out an other states of the source of the sour amendment which might take from the coffers of monopolies some of the ill-gotten gains that legislative robbery has given them. What answer shall I make to my constituents who have been complaining for years of the robbery by our tariff legislation, which, among other things, places 100 per cent. duty on iron—what answer shall I make to them when I go back home and they ask me why we have taken the bankers to our bosom and have removed the little taxation of $2,000,000 upon the great capital they have in their vaults, while we have refused to take off the duty upon the plows, the hoes, the spades, the harrows with which the people labor? What will my constituents say when I tell them that you have refused to take the duty off clothing and cotton and woolen goods; that while they are paying 65 and 70 per cent. duty upon sugar, one of the comforts of life—a branch of taxation which this House persistently refuses to reduce—yet when the banker asks to have some little taxation which he says is onerous taken off, this House is down on its knees to pass the preposition by a suspension of the rules? amendment which might take from the coffers of monopolies some of

I want this bill to come before the House in such a manner that, consistently with the character of American legislators, we may look into this general question of taxation and find the inspiration of our action somewhere else than in the smiles of the associated bankers of the country. I oppose any bill of this character passing here with the gags put upon the legislative authority, so that there is no oppor-tunity to offer an amendment, but we must take this or nothing.

These are my reasons for opposing this bill; and upon these reasons I will go before the constituency who have intrusted their rights to my keeping, and I shall have no fear of seeing a frown upon their faces.

Mr. PRICE obtained the floor.
Mr. WARNER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] desires to speak in favor of this bill; I wish to be heard in opposition.

Mr. FINLEY. Before the gentleman from Iowa proceeds, I wish to inquire whether under the rules I can offer an amendment to take off the tax of matches imposed by section 3435 of the Revised Statutes.

The SPEAKER. No amendment is in order at this stage.

Mr. WEAVER. I wish to be heard in opposition to the bill.

Mr. PRICE. I yield three minutes of my time to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BUCKNER,] chairman of the Committee on Bank-from Missouri, [Mr. BUCKNER,] chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. BUCKNER. Mr. Speaker, it is perhaps proper I should state (and I believe I can do so without any violation of the confidence of the committee-room) that at the last session of Congress I opposed action on this bill in the Committee on Banking and Currency for the reason that the committee had not jurisdiction of the subject, and for the additional reason that there were other methods in which I preferred to have taxation taken off. I did not believe this a proper subject for the action of our committee, and so stated. But I am decidedly in favor of the passage of this measure at this present sesdecidedly in favor of the passage of this measure at this present session. Why does my friend from Texas [Mr. Mills] oppose it? Because this bill does not remove the tax from other things that he mentions. When propositions to reduce taxation upon those shall come up in their order, I propose to vote for such reductions. I propose to vote for any proposition that will reduce taxation, internal or external. But because I cannot get all I want, shall I therefore refuse to join in repealing one of the most annoying and pestiferous tuse to join in repealing one of the most annoying and pestilerous taxes ever introduced into this country?

Sir, this is not a tax on bank capital. It is a tax on all who are required to do business at the banks. To say that this is a tax on bankers is to raise a clamor without any reason. In all our business transactions no one can draw a check upon any bank, State or national, without going to the trouble (I say nothing of the expense) of getting a two-cent stamp to put upon it. Without regard to the question of the amount, this is an annoying tax, not recommended by any corresponding benefit. It is not a tax on bankers. If any petition has come here from bankers calling for the removal of this tax, I am not aware of it. The bankers have asked that the tax on deposits be taken off; that is a matter in which banks and bankers are interested.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman will allow me to ask what proportion of the masses will be benefited by the repeal of this tax?

Mr. BUCKNER. It will benefit everybody who has any business with a bank, directly or indirectly.

Some gentleman asks why not take off the tax on matches. I have been in favor of removing that tax; I have regarded it as a tax on labor or productions which ought to be taken off. When I have on labor or productions which ought to be taken off. When I have the opportunity I will vote to take off the tax on matches; and now that this proposition is before us to remove the tax on bank-checks, I propose to vote for it.

Mr. STEVENSON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri the same question which I put a little while ago to the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. Mills.] What amount of revenue is annually raised by this tax?

Mr. BUCKNER. My recollection is that when the question came up last year in the committee and we were called on to act upon it we up last year in the committee and we were called on to act upon it, we found that the amount of the tax for the year before last was about found that the amount of the tax for the year before last was about $1,700,000. That is my impression. I may be mistaken.

Mr. STEVENSON. Now I will ask, further, whether the $2,000,000 taxation in round numbers derived from this source does not fall upon a portion of the people who are well able to pay this amount of tax for the support of the Government?

Mr. BUCKNER. I suppose so. The same may be true of almost every other tax.

Mr. BUČKNER. I suppose so. The same may be true of almost every other tax.

A MEMBER. How about the tax on matches?

Mr. BUCKNER. There is obvious reason, in my judgment, especially since the last election, why we should favor every proposition that may be presented for reduction of taxation. I have no idea that our friends on the other side are going to make any material or substantial reduction in the taxes of this country. The sentiment that whisky and tobacco must be taxed will always prevent the removal of taxation from these western productions as long as there is any possibility of getting revenue from them. Then, again, our friends on the other side are in favor of protection and will not support any proposition looking toward the reduction of the tariff to any great extent. Hence I have come to this conclusion, on which I shall act extent. Hence I have come to this conclusion, on which I shall act—to strike every head of taxation at which I may get a chance. I will vote in favor of any proposition brought before the House, come from vote in favor of any proposition brought before the House, come from what committee it may, which has for its purpose to reduce any tax now imposed. That is all I desire to say on this subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa yielded seven minutes to the gentleman from Missouri and he has occupied only five.

Mr. PRICE. I will yield, then, the remaining two minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY.]

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I care for less than two minutes. I observe each of the speakers against this measure has had more or less reference to tariff and protectionists and their unwillingness to revise duties. I know something of the feeling of manufacturers and of protectionists who are manufacturers, of those who are extreme in their protection doctrine and those who are extremely liberal also, and so far as I know them the great majority of the friends eral also, and so far as I know them the great majority of the friends of the doctrine of protection in this country desire a revision of the tariff. I think the votes in another branch of this Congress showed it. I think if we bring up that bill for a tariff commission the votes in this House will show the great majority of protectionists are ready for and desire a revision. I shall be agreeably disappointed if they do not disclose there are men who would like to perpetuate some of the anomalies and irregularities, not to say abuses, of the present tariff in order they might have a sore spot to point out in future campaigns. As a protectionist, as one who believes absolutely in the abstract justice and practical wisdom of a reasonable protection, I desire a revision of the tariff to correct its irregularities, or, if you please, its abuses. please, its abuses.

Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. PRICE. I yield now for one minute to the gentleman from Illinois

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. The gentleman says this is a tax on bankers' checks. That is a mistake; it is a tax on the checks of individuals. The great multitude of small dealers throughout the country and of small means, constantly drawing their checks, pay this tax. They do not grumble so much at the amount of the tax they pay as the great inconvenience which results as everybody knows. It was the great inconvenience which results as everybody knows. It was a war tax. The same kind of tax on promissory notes has been taken off long ago; and this would have been taken off long since if it had not been for the cry raised in years past like that now made by the gentleman from Texas and other members. I am ready to vote to take it off. I believe the people want it off because it is an onerous tax on them, not so much in the amount involved as in the great trouble it puts them to.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, there are but a few questions involved in this bill, and they are so simple and plain that it requires but little discussion in reference to them.

discussion in reference to them.

I do not propose to take charge of the constituents of the gentle-man from Texas and to protect them from the freezing and inclement weather by taking off this tax on bank checks. He is afraid somebody will freeze because these stamps are taken off of checks.

Now, the whole question in this matter is just here. One hundred to five hundred thousand people in the United States have their small or great earnings in banks. They put them there for safe-keeping. They put them there without its costing them anything, but they cannot draw out a dollar without first paying to the bank two cents on every check.

It is not as gentlemen have attempted to show; this tax on checks is not in favor of the banks. I would not expect any measure to pass that would favor national or any other banks; but this is in the interest of the depositors in the banks, who are unable to get their money out of the bank unless they first put a two-cent stamp on every money out of the bank unless they first put a two-cent stamp on every check they present, if to draw but fifty cents out of the bank.

I have stated under that report, Mr. Speaker, that this is asked for mainly because the men and women—and there are hundreds of thousands of women in these United States who have their money deposited in banks—cannot draw their money out of the banks in which they have deposited it until they have paid something for the privilege of so doing. They can put their money into these banks without paying anything for it; but to enable them to get their money out they are now compelled to pay a tax on every check they draw. It is in the interest of those whose money is deposited there, and not at all in the interest of the banks. The bankers sell their stamped checks to the people, but the tax goes into the hands of the Government. If the people do not buy the stamped checks, of course they cannot get their money out. If this bill should pass, they will be able to get their money out without paying anything, just as they now can put it into the banks without paying anything. It is, of course, not in the interest of the banks at all, as the banks get their money back. It will not do, therefore, to seek to make the impression upon the mind of this House that this bill is in the interest of the banks, for I again repeat that it is not in the interest of the sion upon the mind of this House that this bill is in the interest of the banks, for I again repeat that it is not in the interest of the banks, but altogether in the interest of the people who have their money deposited in the banks; the small depositors all over the country—in savings-banks, as suggested on my right and left, and in other banks. All these thousands of men, women, and children, from Maine to California, and from north to south, will be benefited by the passage of this bill, while the banks will not be benefited by it at all. The argument, therefore, on that basis is without foundation, and ought to have no force with the House.

This was one of the war taxes: it is a relic of the days of war, and tion, and ought to have no force with the House.

This was one of the war taxes; it is a relic of the days of war, and we want to get rid of everything of that kind which brings in the panorama of life anything unpleasant to the American people. [Laughter.] And this is another reason why we should get rid of this tax. It is in the interest of the poor people of the country. The rich men can pay the two cents without trouble. It is the poor man and the poor woman all over the country that is to be benefited by the removal of this tax; and the man who votes against this bill to-day records his vote against the poor man and the poor woman and in favor of the rich man who, as I have already said, is well able to pay the tax of two cents and does not feel it as a drain upon his resources.

mr. SCALES. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?
Mr. PRICE. Certainly.
Mr. SCALES. I wish to ask the gentleman if the deposits in a bank are not a source of profit to the bank, and if it is not therefore to the interest of the bank to have the taxes upon checks abolished so as to invite and increase deposits?

Mr. PRICE. My friend mistakes the case materially. That is not the question here at all. He has got hold of the wrong end of the argument. I think if the question was properly understood there would be no difficulty in getting it through the House. This is simply in reference to the tax upon checks, the two-cent stamp tax, which is paid by the customer himself and not by the bank.

Mr. SCALES. But does not the gentleman agree that the deposits are a source of profit to the bank?

are a source of profit to the bank?

Mr. PRICE. In this light not at all. It has no connection whatever with this question. If the depositor wants his money he has got to pay the two cents to draw it out, that is all. The check is no part of the profit of the bank, nor is the stamp upon it a source of profit, and that is just exactly where the gentleman does not understand the question. If the question were understood there would be, I am convinced, only one voice in reference to the passage of this

Mr. WARNER. Mr. Speaker, I am decidedly opposed to this bill. I am opposed to it, first, because there is probably no tax under our system of taxation which is so easily collected as this tax, and that is collected at so little cost as this two-cent stamp tax upon bank-checks. I am opposed to it, in the second place, for the reason that no class of our people are better able to pay a tax than those who are able to have money on deposit. I am opposed to it, in the third place, because we need the revenue. We have just appropriated the sum of $50,000,000 to pay pensions. We have also a maturing debt of $670,000,000 falling due, and we need all the tax we can possibly collect to apply to the payment of that debt, after meeting the ordinary expenses of the Government.

This, Mr. Speaker, is, in my judgment, the very last tax that ought to be taken off. I would like to see taxes reduced, were it not for the debt we have to pay, but there are many other taxes that should debt we have to pay, but there are many other taxes that should come down first. We have already taken off the income tax, and we are asked also to take off the tax on circulation and deposits which the banks hold and which they lend out for profit. The tax from bank-checks is one of the first in the list of this class of taxes, and then all of the taxes will be rolled off from the shoulders of those whose wealth is in money and money capital and who are best able to pay them, and left without reduction upon the people.

Mr. Speaker, there is scarcely an implement of industry in use in this whole country that is not now taxed in some form. There is scarcely a thing produced by the labor or ingenuity of our people or consumed by them that does not in some form hear a share of taxe. consumed by them that does not in some form bear a share of taxa-tion. Here is an instrument used for the transfer of money from person to person and from bank to bank on which a tax is easily colson to person and from bank to bank on which a tax is easily collected and which is well able to bear it, or which they who use this medium as a means of transfer of money are able to pay. There is another reason why I am opposed to the removal of this tax. A man who has a hundred thousand dollars in greenbacks, or a million dollars, for that matter, or any other sum, is now able to escape taxation and does practically escape it entirely on his ready money. This little tax on a check is the only tax he pays.

The law imposes a tax, it is true, upon bank deposits which are not in greenbacks, but greenbacks not being subject to taxation.

The law imposes a tax, it is true, upon bank deposits which are not in greenbacks, but greenbacks not being subject to taxation, hundreds of millions of money and deposits practically escape taxation. Deposits in banks on the day when taxes are assessed are counted as greenbacks, and consequently a large share of this money and banking capital under the control of depositors escapes taxation. Now it is proposed by this bill to take the tax off of bank-checks, thereby removing the last pittance of taxation from this class of people who are best able, as I have stated, to pay their taxes. I hope the House will refuse to do it. I hope the House will hesitate and consider this subject well before it commits itself to such a policy, and begin the reduction of taxes at this place—on a tax which is so lightly felt by those who bear it.

and begin the reduction of taxes at this place—on a tax which is so lightly felt by those who bear it.

Mr. PRICE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WARNER. I will be pleased to answer the gentleman.

Mr. PRICE. I wish to ask the gentleman if he has forgotten that the poor man and poor woman who want to get $1 out of the savings-bank where their little earnings are deposited have to pay two cents for the privilege, while the rich man who draws out his thousand or ten thousand dollars pays no more than that?

Mr. WARNER. Bankers pay this tax upon checks drawn upon one

Mr. WARNER. Bankers pay this tax upon checks drawn upon one another. Indeed a large part—at least a very considerable part—of the tax upon bank-checks is paid by bankers in the regular course of their business. The more money one has, or the more deposits and the oftener he makes transfers, the more tax he will pay, and this is not the way poor men do.

Mr. PRICE. You are mistaken about that; a very small portion

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the passage of this bill. The reduction of taxation at this time is a part of a scheme to make popular the system of funding the national debt. It is a delusion and a snare. From our present system of taxation the entire public debt can be paid in a very few years, but it will be found impossible to liquidate it from the revenues if taxes are cut down until the receipts are simply sufficient to meet the current expenses of the Government. The fund-holders desire this condition of things to ensue, for they will then have ample excuse for further funding

The tax sought to be repealed falls not upon the banks, it is said, but upon bank customers. Very well. In many instances this may be true, but it falls upon a class of people who are as able to bear it be true, but it falls upon a class of people who are as able to bear it as any other. All taxes fall upon the people in some shape or another, and this argument would repeal all tax laws. The tax upon distilled and fermented liquors is paid ultimately by parties least able to do so, and this is greatly true of all taxes, and yet they cannot be dispensed with until we find some way to pay the public debt. The great effort of this great debtor nation should be to so legislate and administer the laws as to make capital bear its just share of the public burdens. Let capital be the servant and not the master of the people. This bill, should it become a law, will reduce our receipts $2.000.000 annually. I hope it will not pass.

people. This bill, should it become a law, will reduce our receipts $2,000,000 annually. I hope it will not pass.

Mr. SCALES. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of reducing taxes on all subjects. Since I have been a member of Congress I have watched every opportunity to make this reduction, and have voted up to this time for every proposition which looked to this result; but so far I have only succeeded in aiding to reduce the tax on tobacco. That tax is now much too high and is to-day much more oppressive than the tax upon checks. Time and again have I with many others endeavored to reduce the tax on brandy and whisky. Its effect was demoralizing, and brought much evil upon the country. It is an industry recognized by the law and should not be indirectly prohibited by taxation. I am in favor of reducing the heavy tariff upon all by taxation. I am in favor of reducing the heavy tariff upon all woolen goods and thereby cheapen the articles of clothing which the people must wear, and so upon other articles now so heavily taxed which are essential to the comfort and well-being of our people. But all efforts in this direction have failed. There are many gentlemen in this House who are opposed to reduction of all taxes on industries, but who are always ready to favor a reduction upon capital. These out who are always ready to favor a reduction upon capital. These gentlemen are of course for this reduction. There are others here who are anxious to reduce taxes of every name and description and are not willing to let this opportunity fail. I sympathize in the views of these gentlemen and will gladly aid them upon a proper bill to reduce all taxes as far as practicable; but I cannot fail to remember that nearly every proposition to reduce taxes upon industries has failed and I believe will continue to fail if presented by themselves. If nearly every proposition to reduce taxes upon industries has failed and I believe will continue to fail if presented by themselves. If a bill is gotten up that will reduce or abolish this tax and at the same time reduce the other taxes so oppressive, I shall most gladly support it and use my best efforts to pass it. But we cannot hope to reduce other taxes except by a bill that will embrace all. Then the man who wants taxes upon banks and capital reduced alone will vote for other reductions, and thus by a combination of interests get votes enough to benefit all tax-payers

The SPEAKER. Three minutes of the time allowed for debate

Mr. SPRINGER. I shall vote for the passage of this bill for the reason that this is a vexatious tax which produces little revenue. It is paid by the depositors in banks of all kinds. This is not a measure for the relief of national banks or private or State bankers, but a bill for the purpose of removing a tax, I believe the only one of this kind that has survived the war; a vexatious stamp tax which produces little or no revenue.

I have received petitions from a large portion of the business communities which I represent praying for the abolition of this tax. These petitions come from the persons who deposit their money in the banks and are required to pay this tax before they can get it out. The bill is in the interest-of small dealers, who draw many checks for small amounts and have to pay the same amount of tax on each one of the small checks as large dealers have to pay on checks of thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars. It is an unequal tax, a most vexatious tax, and one that produces little revenue, and it should be abolished. abolished.

Mr. WEAVER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?
Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir.
Mr. WEAVER. Do not these petitions generally come from the bankers themselves

bankers themselves?

Mr. SPRINGER. No, sir. They come from the depositors and the business community generally, and this bill is in the interest of the great mass of the business men who have to pay taxes to get money from the banks which they put in for safe-keeping.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 130, nays 68, not voting 93; as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the House for the adjournment of the two Houses from Wednesday, December 22, 1880, to Wednesday, January 5, 1881.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 5384) granting permission to the Chamber of Commerce of New York to erect a statue on the subtreasury building in the city of New York.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

requested:

A bill (S. No. 1669) for the relief of Abbie N. Condron;
A bill (S. No. 1681) to provide for funding the 8 per cent. improvement certificates of the District of Columbia; and
A bill (S. No. 1888) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase land adjacent to the custom-house in the city of Providence, Rhode Island.

VISITORS TO NAVAL SCHOOL AT ANNAPOLIS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as visitors to the Naval School at Annapolis, Mr. Wellborn, Mr. Scoville, and Mr. Browne.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. COFFROTH, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 1776) granting a pension to Margaret S. Heintzel-

An act (S. No. 1814) to authorize the construction of a fixed bridge over the Saint Mary's River, and for other purposes.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 4429) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Fair Grounds Association."

POST-OFFICE OF THE HOUSE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Postmaster of the House, transmitting an inventory of public property in the post-office of the House; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts.

MONUMENTAL COLUMN AT YORKTOWN, VIRGINIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to a design for a monumental column at Yorktown, Virginia; which was referred to the Select Committee on the Yorktown Celebration.

CENTENNIAL MAP.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of an appropriation for publishing the centennial map of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

JOHN F. RUSSELL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the petition of John F. Russell, praying for an amendment of his military record; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LEGISLATIVE EXPENSES OF IDAHO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of the appropriation required to meet the expenses of the Legislature of Idaho; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report of the Superintendent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey for the year ending June 30, 1880; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

YERBA BUENA ISLAND.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to a bill to quiet title to land on Yerba Buena Island; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ROBERT AVERY.

Mr. VAN AERNAM asked and obtained unanimous consent for the withdrawal from the files of the House of the bill (H. R. No. 5756) for the relief of Robert Avery, with the accompanying papers, with the view of referring the same to the Secretary of the Treasury for report.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:
To Mr. VALENTINE, for three days, on important business;
To Mr. Horr, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family;
To Mr. Persons, until after the holidays; and
To Mr. McCoid, until the 10th of January next.
Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I desire to give notice that I shall hereafter object to granting any further leave of absence, so that we may not be left without a quorum for the transaction of business to-morrow and next day.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The next committee in order to move a suspension of the rules is the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Mr. BLAND. I am directed by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures to move to suspend the rules so as to take from the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union the bill (H. R. No. 6025) to establish an assay office in the city of Saint Louis, Missouri, and that the same be now passed.

Mr. WARNER. While the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures did authorize the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bland] to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill he has indicated, that committee this morning authorized its chairman to move to suspend the rules and pass another bill.

Mr. BLAND. My motion has the prior right.

Mr. WARNER. That is for the Chair to determine.

The SPEAKER. The committee should settle that matter for itself, and not throw the onus on the Chair.

Mr. BLAND. The committee gave me the first right.

Mr. CALKINS. What is the question before the House?

ASSAY OFFICE, SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI.

Mr. BLAND. By instruction of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, I now move that the rules be suspended so that House bill No. 6025, to establish an assay office in the city of Saint Louis, Missouri, be taken from the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and passed at this time.

Mr. CALKINS. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to establish an assay office at Saint Louis, in the State of Missouri; the said office to be conducted under the provisions of an act entitled "An act revising and amending the laws relative to the mints, assay offices, and coinage of the United States," approved February 12, 1873.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to set apart sufficient room for said assay office in the Government building in Saint Louis, now used for a post-office and custom-house, and provide the same with the necessary fixtures and apparatus, at a cost not exceeding $10,000, which sum is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The previous constitution was seconded and the main question ordered.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered upon the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules debate is in order for fifteen min-

The SPEAKER. Under the rules debate is in order for fifteen minutes for and fifteen minutes against the pending proposition.

Mr. BLAND. The old custom-house building in Saint Louis will be vacant in a short time, as the new one will be completed during the coming summer. The old building will either have to be sold at a great sacrifice or put to some public use.

The Director of the Mint, before the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, has stated that he has inspected and examined this building and finds it in every respect suitable for an assay office. He further stated that it would be a matter of economy on the part of the Government to operate an assay office at that point; that now silver bullion purchased for the purpose of coinage, especially at New Orleans, is often required to be transported from Saint Louis and other points to New York City, to be there assayed and then transported again to New Orleans for coinage. He also states that he can purchase silver bullion cheaper in Saint Louis than in New York, and there will be a saving to the Government both in the cost of transportation and in the price of silver bullion over and above the cost of the operation of an assay office at Saint Louis, by establishing an office at that point.

There will be no expense under this bill, except to provide machinery to put in the building which is now already there a building which is

There will be no expense under this bill, except to provide machinery to put in the building which is now already there, a building which will answer all the purposes of an assay office. Saint Louis is contiguous to all the great mining Territories and States, and bullion is now transported to Saint Louis and from there to New York City for now transported to Saint Louis and from there to New 10rk City and assay. The time may come when mints should be established in the West. Indeed, it is the great distributing point to-day for the silver dollars coined by the Government. As I have already said, this bill meets the approbation of the Director of the Mint. The bill was thoroughly considered by the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and unanimously recommended by them to the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask my friend whether that Committee has jurisdiction of this subject.

Mr. BLAND. Certainly, we have jurisdiction.

Mr. BLOUNT. Under what provision of the rules?

Mr. BLAND. By the rules all subjects relating to coinage, weights, and measures are referred to that committee.

Mr. BLOUNT. Building houses?

Mr. BLAND. This is not building a house. The house, as I have said, is already there, and will soon be useless to the Government unless some legislation of this kind be adopted. This is simply to put into that building, at an expense of $10,000, the machinery for an assay office. All such questions belong to our committee. As I said before the bill is recommended unanimously by the committee, beassay office. All such questions belong to our committee. As I said before, the bill is recommended unanimously by the committee, besides having the indorsement of the Director of the Mint.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will ask the gentleman whether in addition to the appropriation of $10,000 for machinery there will not necessarily be required employés, laborers, &c.?

Mr. BLAND. As a matter of course there will be required the usual appropriation of $10,000 for machinery there will be required the usual symployées to express on a seasy officer, but according to the test test and the seasy of the employés to carry on an assay office; but according to the statement of the Director of the Mint the Government, by the adoption of this measure, will save in the purchase and transportation of bullion more than will be necessary to establish this assay office and conduct it from year to year.

Mr. BLOUNT. Does the Director of the Mint recommend this?

have not examined his report.

Mr. BLAND. In his examination before the committee he stated that this assay office would be a great convenience to the Government, and that this bill ought to pass. [Cries of "Vote!"] The question being taken on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill there were avently need to be a great convenience.

pass the bill, there were—ayes 111, noes 4.
So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the motion was agreed to; and the bill was passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The Committee on Military Affairs being called, Mr. UPSON and Mr. BROWNE addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands, both these gentlemen represent the same committee. They had better adjust between themselves which shall occupy the floor.

Mr. SPARKS. Cannot both reports be acted upon? They are brief and can go through in a moment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair could not entertain two motions from the same committee without unanimous consent.

Mr. UPSON. I do not wish to antagonize my friend; but I believe the report in my charge has precedence as to age. My instruction from the committee dates back to June 1.

Mr. BROWNE. Under the well established rule of equity I am entitled to recognition because courts always give preference to the diligent. The gentleman says that he was instructed last June. My instructions are much more recent; and I have sought my opportunity at the very first moment.

The SPEAKER. Are the gentlemen unable to adjust this matter between themselves?

Mr. SPARKS. These are both unanimous reports, I believe, from our committee, but the gentleman from Texas is first in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair now understands that the gentleman from Indiana consents to yield the floor to the gentleman from

SAN ANTONIO ARSENAL.

Mr. UPSON. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to move that the rules be suspended so as to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the bill which I send to the desk,

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. No. 54) to enable the Secretary of War to purchase land to enlarge and protect the San Antonio arsenal.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, there is hereby appropriated the sum of $15,000, to enable the Secretary of War to purchase, inclose, and improve the following-described piece of land adjoining the United States arsenal grounds at San Antonio, Texas, namely: All that tract of ground bounded by Arsenal street, Lower Flores street, the United States arsenal, and the San Antonio River, with a frontage on Arsenal street of thirteen hundred and fifty feet, more or less, and on Lower Flores street of one hundred and twenty-five feet, more or less, and containing about three and one-half acres: Provided, That no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be expended until the requirements of section 355 of the Revised Statutes have been complied with. complied with.

The motion to suspend the rules was agreed to, (two-thirds voting in favor thereof,) and the bill was passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Speaker, I hope now under the circumstances the House will indulge me in asking a suspension of the rules in the little case which I desire to present. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] Mr. STONE. I call for the regular order.
Mr. BROWNE. This is the first time I have ever asked such a favor.

The SPEAKER. The next committee in order is the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PEDESTAL FOR FARRAGUT STATUE.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill which I send to the desk, and that it be passed with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 6593) to provide a suitable pedestal to the monument erected in honor of the late Admiral Farragut in Washington City.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $5,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated for the purpose of increasing the height of the pedestal to the monument erected in honor of the late Admiral Farragut in the city of Washington, and which sum shall be expended for said purpose under the orders and direction of the Secretary of the Navy.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Naval Affairs was read, as follows:

Add to the bill the following:

"The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to make use of such ordnance and other naval stores now on hand for the appropriate ornamentation of said pedestal as may be required."

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I desire that a brief report which accompanies the bill may be read. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]
Mr. WARNER. Let us hear the report.
The SPEAKER. The reading of the report being called for, it will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Ciefk read as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred H. R. No. 6593, entitled "A bill to provide a suitable pedestal to the monument erected in honor of the late Admiral Farragut in Washington City," submits the following report:

By a joint resolution approved June 22, 1874, Congress authorized the Secretary of the Navy " to contract with some suitable and skillful sculptor for a bronze statue of the late Admiral Farragut, as authorized by the joint resolution of April 16, 1872, to be disposed of as therein directed: Provided, That the selection of the sculptor or artist to execute the statue shall be made by the Secretary of the Navy, the General of the Army, and Mrs. Virginia L. Farragut, or a majority of them."

The joint resolution of April 16, 1872, had provided that a statue of Admiral Farragut should be erected in Farragut Square, in the city of Washington.

The commission appointed by the joint resolution of June 22, 1874, before quoted, having selected Miss Vinnie Ream as the "sculptor or artist to execute the statue," the then Secretary of the Navy, on the 28th of January, 1875, entered into a written contract with Miss Ream by which she agreed to execute and deliver and cause to be erected in Farragut Square aforesaid, within a reasonable time, a colossal statue ten feet in height of the late Admiral David G. Farragut, made of the best quality of bronze, and also a granite pedestal of suitable height, similar in style and equal in quality to that of the Scott statue in the Soldiers' Home in said District, both statue and pedestal to be finished to the reasonable satisfaction of the commissioners who made the award to Miss Ream, or the survivor or survivors of them."

This contract has been fully complied with on the part of Miss Ream, and the work has been accepted and paid for.

The pedestal is like that of the Scott statue at the Soldiers' Home, except that it is a few inches taller than that. The drawing after which the pedestal was cut was furnished Miss Ream by the Government.

The Scott statue stands upon a considerable elevation, while the Farragut statue is located in the center of a nearly level park.

It is now apparent to the most casual observer that the pedestal of the Farragut statue is much too small at its base and also several feet too low, and that in designing the pedestal the difference in location of the two statues was not sufficiently considered and that the Scott pedestal was too closely copied. Miss Ream is not at fault in this matter. The statue was her own design, and for his she was responsible. The pedestal is in compliance with the requirements of the Government, and for its defects the Government is alone at fault.

This defect can be cured by raising the pedestal about nine feet and placing under it a broad granite base, according to plans which have been prepared and are now ready.

now ready.

The cost of the proposed improvement will be $5,000.

The cost of the proposed improvement will be $5,000.

It has been determined to unveil the statue on the 4th of March next, if possible. The committee believes that the work should be done at once, and it therefore reports the bill back to the House with an amendment, and recommends its passage with the amendment.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, there were—ayes 146, noes 2.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill, with the proposed amendment, passed.

SALARIES OF POSTMASTERS.

The SPEAKER. The next committee in order is the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Mr. STONE. I am instructed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill which I send to the desk, and that it be passed. of the bill. There is a unanimous report from the committee in favor of the act of June 12, 1866.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 3981) authorizing and directing the Postmaster-General to readjust the salaries of certain postmasters in accordance with the provision of section 8 of the act of June 12, 1866.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to readjust the salaries of all postmasters and late postmasters of the third, fourth, and fifth classes, under the classification provided for in the act of July 1, 1864, whose salaries have not heretofore been readjusted under the terms of section 8 of the act of June 12, 1866, who made direct official application or sworn returns of receipts and business for readjustment of salary to the Postmaster-General, the First Assistant Postmaster-General, or the Third Assistant Postmaster-General, or who made quarterly returns in conformity to the then existing laws and regulations, showing that the salary allowed was 10 per cent. less than it would have been upon the basis of commissions under the act of 1854; such readjustments to be made in accordance with the mode presented in section 8 of the act of June 12, 1866, and to date from the beginning of the quarter succeeding that in which such application, sworn returns of receipts and business, or quarterly returns were made.

Mr. BLOUNT. I call for the reading of the report of the committee, and I hope we shall have order. This is a very important bill.

Mr. MILLS. Will there be any discussion on this bill?

Mr. BLOUNT. There ought to be.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to whom was referred H. R. No. 27, being a joint resolution to enable certain postmasters and late postmasters to institute certain proceedings in the Court of Claims, ask leave to make the following report, and recommend the passage of the accompanying bill as a substitute for said resolution:

Your committee adopt the following statement contained in the report of the Senate committee on this subject, namely:

"The act of Congress passed June 22, 1854, directed the Postmaster-General to allow to deputy postmasters, in lieu of the compensation before allowed, commissions on the postage collected at their respective offices, at varying rates, according to the sums collected.

"The act of July 1, 1864, instead of compensating them by commissions upon actual receipts, substituted a new system by which the receipts for two years preceding an adjustment of salaries were to be regarded as the basis, and, fixing the date of the act as the initial point, directed that a readjustment should be made every two years thereafter. But in special cases the Postmaster-General was authorized to make readjustments as much oftener as he should deem expedient, with the proviso, however, that changes in any salaries should not take effect until the next quarter succeeding the order of the Postmaster-General directing the change.

"The act of July In June 1866 amended the least recited on the valding a direction."

the next quarter succeeding the order of the Postmaster-teneral directing the change.

"The act of 12th June, 1866, amended the last-recited act by adding a direction that when the quarterly returns of any postmaster of the third, fourth, or fifth class should show that his salary was 10 per cent. less than it would have been on the basis of commissions under the act of 1854, the Postmaster-General should review and adjust the salary.

"In executing the provisions of the act of July 1, 1864, so far as the regular biennial adjustments were concerned, it was the practice of the Post-Office Department, by an order issued from the office of the First Assistant Postmaster-General, and addressed to all postmasters, to require from the latter a sworn statement of the revenues of their offices from the 1st of July to the 31st of December (inclusive) next preceding the date of the proposed readjustment.

"Upon these sworn statements the salary to be assigned to each officer was estimated and fixed, by an order bearing date June 1 of the current year, or one month prior to the date when the salary as adjusted was to take effect.

"In case of special readjustments the Department rules required that the attention of the Postmaster-General should be called to the case by direct application.

"Under the act of 1864, and also of 1866, letters of appointment were issued to newly appointed postmasters whose compensation was necessarily fixed at an arbitrary sum, by which they were notified that the compensation was fixed at a certain sum until the amount of business to be transacted and their receipts could be ascertained. They were instructed 'at the end of each quarter to make and forward to the Third Assistant Postmaster-General a statement under oath of the total value of postage-stamps canceled during the quarter and sold;' that 'their salaries would be readjusted at the proper time by the Postmaster-General, on the basis of the amount of business done as shown by the quarterly statement above required.

"In the period reaching from the year 1806 to the year 1872, when the whole system of compensation was modified, many new post-offices were established, and the rate of compensation was necessarily fixed, not upon the basis of receipts, but arbitrarily; in the same period the business of other offices belonging to the 'third,' 'fourth,' and 'fifth' classes increased.

"The Department, carrying out its practice and conforming to instructions given to the postmasters, did not readjust the salaries oftener than once in two years, except in cases to which its attention had been called by official letters, or by sworn returns made in accordance with its rules."

Section 2, act July 1, 1864, as amended by section 8, act June 12, 1866, is as follows:

to the postmaters, did not readjust the salaries oftener than once in two years, expert in cases to which its attention had been called by official letters, or by sworn refurms made in accordance with its rules."

Section 2, act July 1, 1964, as memoded by section 8, act June 12, 1866, is as follows:

"Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Postmaster-General shall review once in two years, and in special cases, upon satisfactory representation, as much oftener as he may deem expedient, and readjust, on the basis of the preceding section, the salary assigned by him to any office; but any change made in writing, and recorded in his journal, and notified to the Auditor for the Post-Office Department: Provided, That when the quarterly returns of any postmaster of the third, fourth, or fifth class show that the salary allowed is 10 per cent. less than it would be on a basis of commission under the act of 1554, fixing compensation, then the Postmaster-General shall review and readjust under the provisions of said section." (See 13 Statutes at Large, section 1, page 335, 14 Statutes at Large, section 8, page 35).

Giddings, a member of this committee in the Post-office Department, or for the committee in the Post-office of the Section 8, page 35).

Giddings, a member of this committee in the Post-office and provided with and executed the requirements of the original salary law, and also provided the means and a rule for a fair and reasonable use of the discretionary power as to special readjustments confided to him by that act. In October, 1894, he notified the them incumbents that they had a "right to apply for special readjustments under section 2 of said act," and applications made in pursuance thereof were "acted upon when the increase of the binsiness of an office was above to be 50 per cent." To make it the duty of the Court said, for readjustment of the facts as well as the provided of the post-office and prescribed the beans of a coline as above to be 50 per cent." Washington, D. C., February 10, 1879.

Six: I have the honor to acknowledge your letter of January 31, inclosing copy of Honse bill 5745, and to say, in reply, that under the act of July 1, 1864, post-masters were notified thereof by circular and requested to keep an account of canceled stamps and forward the same to the Department, which was done, and the first adjustment under the statute made to take effect October 1, 1864, for fourth and fifth class offices, and July 1 for first, second, and third classes. At the same time postmasters were advised of their right to apply for special readjustments under section 2 of said act, and many applications were received subsequently from time to time, and acted upon when the increase of business of an office was shown to be 50 per cent. This was the practice of the Department up to 1872, when favorable action was taken upon cases showing 20 per cent. of increase in business, as required under sections 82 and 84 of the code of June 8, 1872. Said 20 per cent. was the basis of all readjustments up to July 12, 1876, when, by section 10 of the act of that date, 50 per cent was made the basis.

The act of June 12, 1866, was not at any time made the basis of such readjustments, nor could it be stated whether applications for readjustments made the act of 1864 or 1866.

It will be seen from the above statements that the Postmaster-General, who acted under the law of 1866, construed it as requiring him to examine applications for readjustments of salaries, other than biennial, when the applications were made by postmasters, and that he did not regard it as his duty to take up cases out of the biennial order in the absence of such special application.

Very respectfully,

JAS. N. TYNER, First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Hon. D. C. Giddings,
Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads,
House of Representatives.

Mr. BLOUNT. I demand a second of the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. STONE. I demand tellers.

Mr. STONE and Mr. BLOUNT were appointed tellers. The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 100, noes 6.

Mr. BLOUNT. No quorum has voted.

EXPLANATION.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to ask on the part of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hawley] to withdraw his vote on the bank-check tax bill. Although his pair had expired, yet Mr. King left supposing the pair continued. The gentleman from Connecticut prefers not to vote rather than have the gentleman from Louisiana disappointed.

There was no objection, and the vote was ordered to be withdrawn.

PENSIONS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a letter from the Commissioner of Pensions relative to the necessity for increased appropriations for pensions; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

And then, on motion of Mr. WHITE, (at four o'clock and ten minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I present the petition of O. J. Walker and a large number of other business men, traders, and navigation men of the State of Vermont, and also of New York, praying Congress to provide means for the improvement of the navigation of a certain part of Lake Champlain known as "The Gut," between New York and Vermont, and Swanton Harbor, between two islands of Vermont, in order that the very considerable trade which passes through that space may be better accommodated against the rocks and shoals that now make navigation on that stormy sea somewhat difficult. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

they were under the laws of the United States prior to the passage of the general law of the Revised Statutes. By that revision of the statutes there were, without authority, and I suppose inadvertently, changes made in the rates of duty. The bill proposes to have those duties restored to the rate at which they stood prior to the enactment of the statute authorizing the adoption of the laws as revised. It is well known that the jurisdiction of the other branch of Congress over the question of revenue makes it impossible for us to successfully attempt an amendment of the revenue laws in this body; but in this case as it is the mere correction of an error in a statute it is this case, as it is the mere correction of an error in a statute, it is supposed that the object can be reached by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws; and therefore it is that I ask the change of

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to report back favorably and without amendment the bill (S. No. 1928) to provide for remitting the duties on the object of art awarded by the Berlin International Fishery Commission to Professor Spencer F. Baird, and I am unanimously instructed to ask for its present consideration sideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole,

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1945) to repeal all laws which impose taxes on the capital of and deposits with banks and bankers, and on bankchecks, &c.; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I desire to say one word, if the Senate will allow me, in regard to the bill. I know that bills of this character have to originate in the other House, but perhaps we have bills before us, or certainly will have, to which this will be an appropriate amendment. I desire, if the Senate will allow me, to make part of the RECORD a very short letter from the president of the Northern Bank of Kentucky, one of the best lawyers in Kentucky, which perhaps may influence those who know him, and I think it will. I do not care to read it, but if it may go into the RECORD without reading, I prefer it.

ing, I prefer it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The communication will be printed in the RECORD, if there be no objection, and the bill will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The letter referred to is as follows:

for the improvement of the navigation of a certain part of Lake Champlain known as "The Gut," between New York and Vermont, and Swanton Harbor, between two islands of Vermont, in order that the very considerable trade which passes through that space may be better accommodated against the rocks and shoals that now make navigation on that stormy sea somewhat difficult. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. GARLAND. The Committee on Territories have instructed me to report back the bill (H. R. No. 1760) amending section 1852 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with a recommendation that it pass. It is an important bill to the Territories and I am instructed by the committee to ask then present consideration of the bill, but it shall not ask it until we get through with the morning business.

Mr. BAYARD. The Committee on Finance have instructed me report back the bill (S. No. 1890) to provide for refunding of fees in all cases of void registration of trade-marks; which was inadvertently committed to them, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Patents.

The report was agreed to.

All banks are equally interested in the repeal of the tax on deposits and checks. It is a great benefit to the whole community that the surplus money of individuals should be kept in bank where it can be utilized by making money for loan more abundant and interest lower to the borrower from the greater abundance of money. If that money was kept in the pockets of the owners money would be more stringent and interest higher.

It is therefore a general benefit, and in no sense a subject of taxation, except when everything has to be taxed, as in a state of war.

I hope, therefore, that you will find it consistent with your duty to urge the repeal of the taxes indicated.

With the United States debt funded at a low rate of interest, it is not good policy to tax the people to pay off the principal. It is taking money which is worth 5 or 6 per cent, to the people from whom it is taken to pay a debt only bearing 3 per cent, not counting the cost and expense of collection, which will probably make 1 per cent. more.

The debt should always be diminishing, but it should be slowly.

SUPREME COURT.

Mr. WHYTE. I ask leave to introduce a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and before its reference I desire the indulgence of the Senate to make a very few remarks.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 138) proposing an amendment to the Constitution, relating to the Supreme Court of the United States; which was read the first time by its title.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read at

The joint resolution was read the second time at length, as follows: Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, (two-thirds of each House concurring therein.) That the following be proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, to be added as section 4 to the third article of the Constitution, which, when ratified by three-fourths of the Legislatures of the several States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the said Constitution, to wit:

"Sec. 2. The Supreme Court of the United States shall consist of a Chief-Justice of the United States and —— associate justices, any —— of whom shall constitute a quorum."

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, at this time, when the Committee on the Judiciary is considering the resolution offered by the Senator from Maine, in regard to the increase of the number of the judges of the Supreme Court to thirteen, it seems to me an opportune moment to present to the Senate this proposed constitutional amendment. The Constitution now provides for "one Supreme Court," and while guaranteeing the tenure of office to the judges during good behavior, and a certain salary, that instrument is silent as to the number of judges to compose the court.

The object of the convention was to secure the independence of the judiciary. In the seventy-eighth number of the Federalist, it is

The complete independence of the courts of justice is peculiarly essential in a limited constitution. By a limited constitution I understand one which contains certain specified exceptions to the legislative authority; such for instance, as it shall pass no bills of attainder, no expost facto laws, and the like. Limitations of this kind can be preserved in practice in no other way than through the medium of the courts of justice, whose duty it must be to declare all acts contrary to the manifest tenor of the Constitution void. Without this all the reservation of particular rights or privileges would amount to nothing. * * If, then, the courts of justice are to be considered as the bulwarks of a limited constitution against legislative encroachment, this consideration will afford a strong argument for permanent tenure of judicial offices, since nothing will contribute so much as this to that independent spirit in the judges which must be essential to the faithful performance of so ardnous a duty.

Moreover, if the fixing of the personal tenure of judicial office during "good behavior" and the security of a certain salary could contribute so much to the independence of the judge, how essential is it to the security of the collective body, the court, to have its number permanently established? The number was not fixed by the framers of the Constitution for manifest reasons.

At that experimental period it was scarcely possible to have done so, because of the plastic, formative state of the nation, and in view of the many unsettled questions concerning the extent of territory of which the Union would be constituted, the mode in which the powers conferred on it would operate practically, both in respect to foreign nations and in the relation of the General Government of the United States to the particular governments of the several States. foreign nations and in the relation of the General Government of the United States to the particular governments of the several States. Besides this, the desire to fix no more than was absolutely essential and the great difficulty of harmonizing the convention on any form of government, with other considerations which might be suggested, had their influence in leaving this matter an open question. It was left, wisely or unwisely, I will not say, to the discretion of Congress. It was at least a strange venture, for it was supposed, using the language of another, that—

The independence of the judiciary was the felicity of our Constitution. It was this principle which was to curb the fury of party on sudden changes. The first moments of power gained by a struggle are the most vindictive and intemperate. Raised above the storm, it was the judiciary which was to control the fiery zeal and to quell the fierce passions of a victorious faction.

If, then, in our frame of government the supreme judicial tribunal, the last resort on constitutional questions, is to be a check upon the National Legislature, what sort of check can there be when the power to be checked can by the increase of judges reverse the decision restraining the legislative encroachment?

straining the legislative encroachment?

The instability of the present method of fixing the number of judges is made manifest by a brief review of the course of legislation on the subject since the establishment of the court.

By the original act of 1789 the Supreme Court was to be composed of six judges; in 1801 an act was passed providing that the number should be reduced to five on the first vacancy, but this act was repealed

In 1802.

In 1807 an act was passed providing for an additional associate judge. By the act of 1837 the number of associate judges was increased to eight, and by act of 1863 to nine, and that act provided that the Supreme Court of the United States shall hereafter consist of a Chief-Justice and nine associate justices.

The act of 1866 reduced the number of the whole court from ten to cover while the act of 1869 fixed the court as consisting of a Chief-seven, while the act of 1869 fixed the court, as consisting of a Chief-Justice and eight associate judges.

With this changing composition of the court, the time may come when the confidence of the people in this great tribunal may be

In a popular government like ours care should be taken in every part of the system, not only to do right, but to satisfy the community that right is done.

Is it not important, then, to settle upon a number which will be permanent in its character and stand for at least a century to come?

Can it not be now done?

The extent of territory over which its jurisdiction now extends, is so great that any possible additions would not probably require any change.

Should it hereafter come to pass that Canada, Cuba, or Mexico should be annexed to our already vast domain, it would be time enough when that contingency occurs to provide for it.

The time is fast approaching when it will be a matter of impossibility for the judges of the Supreme Court to go upon their circuits. An imperative necessity is now upon us, by reason of the over-crowded docket of the Supreme Court and the great increase of busicrowded docket of the Supreme Court and the great increase of obsiness in all the Federal courts, to provide for some new arrangement of the judicial department; but this "one Supreme Court" of the Constitution should stand while the Republic lasts. It should be put beyond the power of any political party, holding the Legislative and Executive Departments of government, in any gust of faction, by doubling the court, to annihilate its independence and make it subservient to party. I have left the number blank in the proposed amendment, as much may be said both in favor of the present number or of the increase to thirteen. A recent reperusal of the papers in the Federalist bearing on the structure of the supreme and other federal courts, a review of the speeches of Mr. Bayard and others on the same subject in 1803, and the later speeches of Mr. Webster in 1826, in the House of Representatives, upon his proposition to add three associate judges to the Supreme Court, have given a tendency in my mind to the increase of the number of judges, but I shall defer to the better judgment of the Judiciary Committee in that regard, assured, however, that whatever may be the fate of the proposition of the Senator from Maine, this constitutional amendment will command the approval of every conservative law-loving citizen of the mand the approval of every conservative law-loving citizen of the United States

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. BECK (by request) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. No. 6529) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DEXTER E. CLAPP.

Mr. INGALLS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to transmit to the Sen ate copies of all papers in his office relative to the settlement of the accounts of Dexter E. Clapp, late agent of the Crow Indians, Montana Territory.

TERRITORIAL LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLIES.

Mr. GARLAND. I now ask for the consideration of House bill No. 1760, reported by me this morning from the Committee on Territories. By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 1760) amending section 1852 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. It proposes to make

SEC. 1852. The sessions of the Legislative Assemblies of the several Territories of the United States shall be limited to sixty days' duration.

Mr. GARLAND. There is a short House report accompanying the bill, which the committee adopt.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. Humphrey in the House of Representatives, March 10, 1880:

The Committee on Territories, to whom was referred bill H. R. No. 1760, beg leave to report the same back with a recommendation that the same do pass, for the following reasons, to wit:

1. Section 1846 of the Revised Statutes provides that biennial sessions only shall be held in the Territories.

2. Section 1852 limits the sessions to forty days.

Your committee believe that in view of the fact that biennial sessions are established, sixty days in each two years is as short a period as is consistent with justice and a due administration of affairs in each Territory. Some of these Territories contain nearly seventy thousand square miles of territory, nearly ten times the size of Massachusetts, or twice as large as the State of Ohio.

Your committee believe, therefore, that the public interests will be better conserved by the limit of sessions of said Territories to sixty days than forty, as under the existing law.

Mr. GARLAND. The report, short as it is, shows the necessity for the passage of this bill extending the time of the session of the Legislative Assemblies of the different Territories to sixty days, instead of forty. The Delegates from the Territories, nine in number, I believe, unanimously favor this proposition. They say it is a necessity for the reasons given in the short report which has been read. The necessity for acting upon the bill at this time is because some of those Legislative Assemblies are now in session and will about close their meeting by the time that Congress reassembles in January. Therefore I have asked the indulgence of the Senate to consider the bill at this time. bill at this time.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment and ordered to a third reading.

The bill was read the third time by its title.

Mr. HOAR. What is the purpose of the bill?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was just explained by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. GARLAND. It extends the length of session of the Legislative Assemblies of the different Territories to sixty days, instead of forty, as the law now is.

as the law now is.

Mr. HOAR. Then I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas to change the title by making the exact subject the title of the bill, "regulating the length of the meeting of the Territorial Legislatures." I think the practice of describing bills by simply referring to a section in the Revised Statutes is a very vicious one. The result is that there is no publicity given to a measure so that any suggestion which can be made by persons outside of Congress may be made. You might as well have no title at all as to have this fashion of giving titles merely by reference to the number of the section in the Revised Statutes which it is proposed to amend.

Mr. GARLAND. I concur in every word that has been said by the Senator from Massachusetts, but it is not practicable at this time to apply his suggestion to this case, because it would send the bill back to the House, and before the House could concur in the amendment the time would expire to which certain Legislative Assemblies now in session are limited.

Mr. HOAR. I shall not insist on it with reference to this bill, but I wish to call the attention of the honorable Senator who has so many bills in charge to the practice.

Mr. GARLAND. I am very glad that the Senator has called attention to it, and I concur with him fully.

The bill was passed.

DAUGHTERS OF RICHARD K. CALL, DECEASED.

Mr. HEREFORD. I ask the Senate to take up for present consideration Senate bill No. 1779, for the relief of Mrs. Ellen Call Long and eration Senate bill No. 1779, for the relief of Mrs. Ellen Call Long and Mrs. Mary K. Brevard.

The Chief Clerk read the bill; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Ellen Call Long and Mrs. Mary K. Brevard, the daughters and heirs at law of Richard K. Call, deceased, $8,563.37, being the amount of a verdict given in favor of Call in the district court of the United States for the district of Florida, on the 18th of January, 1847, in a suit wherein the United States were plaintiffs and Richard K. Call was defendant.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the report be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. Hereford May 20, 1880:

FORD May 20, 1880:

The Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the memorial and accompanying papers of Mrs. Ellen Call Long, of the State of Florida, report as follows:

R. K. Call was for many years, more than ten, receiver of public moneys at Tallahassee, Florida. He died in 1862.

Your committee received the following letter from the office of the Secretary of the Treasury; the letter is from F. B. Streeter, a former Solicitor of the Treasury, to the then Secretary of the Treasury, James Guthrie, which fully sets forth all the facts in the case:

Your committee received the following letter from the office of the Secretary of the Treasury, to the then Secretary of the Treasury, James Guthrie, which fully sets forth all the facts in the case:

"OFFICE OF THE SOLICITOR OF THE TREASURY, "February 19, 1856.

"Sir: The letter of R. K. Call, dated the 10th ultimo, referred to this office for a report on the matter to which it relates, has been duly received, and in compliance with your direction I have the honor to state that if appears from the dockets and fles of this office that suit was commenced in February, 1840, against Richard K. Call for the recovery of $5,907.33, alleged to be due from him as late receiver of public moneys at Tallahassee. This balance was subsequently reduced to $5,606.13. A separate suit was also commenced against his sureties. In defense General Call was tried at February term, 1842, of the district court of Tallahassee, and a verdic rendered in his favor for $7,923.72. In his report of this trial the district attorney states, in a letter dated 8th March, 1842, that 'the court allowed evidence to go to the Jury upon a claim for extra service in revising the decisions of the register and receiver of the land office at Tallahassee upon pre-emption claims, which the defendant insisted he was directed to perform by a letter of G. Graham, Commissioner of the General Land Office, directed to the register and receiver at Tallahassee, dated July 27, 1827. It was shown by the testimony that this revision occupied from two to three months, and for this service the jury allowed the sum of $12,500. I excepted to the opinion of the court in the admission of this testimony, contending that the revision of these decisions were included in the ordinary and special duties of his office prescribed by law, and were not extra official, also to the introduction of other letters specified in the copies of the bill of exceptions herewith inclosed. Upon the return of the vendict I entered a motion for a new trial, upon the ground that the verdict was aga

"Hon. James Guthrie, "Secretary of the Treasury.

"P. S.-I return the letter of General Call."

From the foregoing it appears that after a full and fair trial there was a verdict rendered against the United States in favor of said Call for $8,563.37.

A "transcript of the pleadings in the case and a copy of the instructions of the court to the jury "were sent to the Solicitor of the Treasury for his revision and further direction.

further direction.

Upon examination he says "he finds no possible question therein which can be carried to the Supreme Court."

Here we have the verdict of a jury finding in favor of said Call for $8,563.37. As between individuals this would be conclusive. Why not as between the United States and one of its citizens?

Your committee are aware that no valid judgment can be rendered against the United States upon a set-off as in this case, and that no execution can issue as against a private citizen. But can the Government afford to assume such a position as that?

It is true there is no evidence before the committee to sustain the items of the set-off. But it is not the verdict of a jury upon these items, rendered upon testimony taken in open court where the witnesses were subject to a strict cross-examination, of mere avail and more satisfactory and convincing than exparte affidavits?

Your committee think the results is recovered.

Your committee think the verdict is persuasive if not morally and equitably binding, and recommend the passage of the bill herewith reported.

Mr. HEREFORD. The letter of the Solicitor of the Treasury which has just been read by the Secretary, which was furnished to me as a sub-committee to whom this case was referred, contains all the facts. It appears that Mr. Call was receiver of public moneys at Tallahassee, in Florida, for a period of over ten years. There arose some controversy as to his accounts, and he invited a suit by the General Government against him so that the truth of the matter could be ascertained. ment against him so that the truth of the matter could be ascertained. There were two trials had and also a non-suit. Upon the first trial Mr. Call filed, as he did in the last suit, his set-off, and the jury brought in a verdict of $7,923.72 in favor of Mr. Call. The case was carried up and that finding was reversed. The case came back to the lower court, and when it was called again the district attorney of the United States not being ready to proceed took a non-suit, and then afterward instituted another suit. Upon the trial of that suit similar pleas to those in the first trial were filed and instructions given upon them to the jury. The jury brought in a verdict the last time for an increased amount in his favor, the sum of $8,563.37.

As it is said in the report of the committee, we know that under the law no judgment can be rendered against the United States upon a plea of set-off; but here is the verdict of a jury. Twelve men were a plea of set-off; but here is the verdict of a jury. Twelve men were impaneled and all the evidence was taken; the witnesses were subjected to a severe cross-examination; and after that on two occasions the jury gave a verdict saying that the General Government was indebted to Mr. Call in the sum at one time of over $7,000, and on the

It is true, as is also said in this report, that there is no evidence before the committee nor before this body to substantiate the various items. Mr. Call died in 1862. Consequently the evidence cannot now be furnished; but there is the verdict of the jury before when all the evidence was taken, and as between private individuals it would be conclusive and an end of the whole matter. Why should it not be as between the United States and one of its citizens?

There is stronger evidence in these two verdicts by a jury impan-eled in a Federal court than in any exparte testimony in the shape of affidavits that the Senate of the United States or a committee thereof could have before it. As the committee say, we do not think the General Government can take the ground that she does not owe the debt, and refuse to pay it, after she has sued one of her citizens and the verdict is not only found against the United States, but it is found that the United States owes this defendant.

This is all there is in the case, and I hope that the matter may be

This is all there is in the case, and I hope that the matter may be disposed of, and disposed of favorably. I hope it may be disposed of this morning, because one of the Senators from the State of Florida expects to leave pretty soon, and will be absent for some time, and desires action upon the bill during his presence. I hope it may be acted upon favorably, in view of the fact that we have the verdict of two juries finding in favor of the defendant, and the last time they increased their verdict by several hundred dollars over the first.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, this was not a unanimous report from the Committee on Claims. This is not the first time that this case has been before Congress. In 1873, in the Forty-second Congress, a bill precisely similar to this was introduced in the Senate and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and was reported adversely on February 5, 1873, by Mr. Frelinghuysen, then a member of the Judiciary Committee, and that bill was indefinitely postponed. I send to the Clerk's desk the report made by Mr. Frelinghuysen from the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate in 1873, and ask that the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate in 1873, and ask that

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred Senate bill No. 586, for the relief of Ellen Call Long, the only child and heir of Richard K. Long, deceased, respectfully report:

The petitioner, Ellen Call Long, asks Congress to pay her, as the representative of her father, $8.563.37, with interest from January 18, 1847, because a jury impaneled to try a sati instituted in the district court of the United States for Florida, by the United States, against said Richard K. Call, rendered a verdict that the said amount was due, at the date referred to, from the United States to said Call.

Mr. Call was receiver of public moneys at Tallahassee, Florida, for more than ten years. The Government claimed that he did not account for the public funds in his hands and his salary was suspended, and in 1840 the United States instituted a suit against Mr. Call in the superior court of Florida Territory, for $5,060.12. The defendant pleaded a set-off for $15,230, consisting of four items, to wit:

1. For extra services in adjudication of pre-emption land claims, 1,460 days,

3. Extra services in adjudication of land claims in addition to 50 cents al-	,

The account was presented to the proper accounting officer and disallowed; judgment was entered against the United States for $7,923.72. The judgment was, of course, revised and a new trial ordered. In the mean time Florida was admitted as a State, and the cause was again tried before the United States district court for the northern district of Florida. A new and different set-off was presented to the proper officer for $18,460, and disallowed, and then pleaded, of which set-off the jury allowed the following items:

The committee are of opinion that this claim should not be allowed for the following reasons:

1. There is no proof, documentary or otherwise, of any indebtedness of the United States to Mr. Call other than the said verdict, and the only effect the verdict can legally have is to satisfy the claim made by the Government, and not to create an indebtedness against the United States.

2. The effect that a verdict might have in establishing an equitable or moral claim against the United States is destroyed by the fact that the set-offs made and relied on in the two suits were essentially diverse the one from the other.

3. It does not appear when Mr. Call died, but it appears that he was living in December, 1860, and there is no evidence that for the thirteen years after the rendering of this verdict he made claim on the Department. And in a copy of a letter without date, sent by Miss Long with the petition, written by Mr. Call to Mr. Woodbury, Secretary of the Treasury, he makes no claim that the Government is indebted to him.

4. The claims which the United States are called upon to pay existed nearly half a century since, were at the time disallowed by the Department, and are now unsustained by any evidence.

The committee recommend that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. COCKRELLI. Under Rule 58 of the Senate—

Mr. COCKRELL. Under Rule 58 of the Senate-

Whenever a claim is presented to the Senate and referred to a committee, and the committee report that the claim ought not to be allowed, and the report shall have been agreed to by the Senate, it shall not be in order to move to take the papers from the files for the purpose of referring them at a subsequent session, unless the claimant shall present a memorial for that purpose, stating that new evidence has been discovered since the report, and setting forth the new evidence in the memorial.

That was not done in this case, as I understand. These proceedings were commenced, as this report shows, in 1840. A trial was had in a suit brought by the United States against Mr. Call, in a territorial court, in which he had stated an offset amounting to $15,250. A verdict upon that offset was rendered in his favor. An appeal was taken and the proceedings were set aside and a new trial ordered. Florida having been admitted as a State in the Union, the cause was heard before the United States district court for the northern district of Florida and then a new and entirely different set-off was heard before the United States district court for the northern district of Florida, and then a new and entirely different set-off was pleaded to the claim of the United States, not embracing the items pleaded in the first set-off. Upon that set-off, as the jury had done in the first case, so the jury in the last case found that there was a certain amount, $5,563.37, due from the Government to him after allowing the amount of the claim of the Government, $5,060.13. The jury in considering that offset allowed $13,623.50 and deducted the claim of the Government, $5,060.13, leaving the balance in favor of Mr. Call $8,563.37.

No judgment was ever rendered upon that finding of the jury; the finding of the jury was never sanctioned by the court; and finally, after a review of the proceedings by the attorney of the Department after a review of the proceedings by the attorney of the Department here in Washington that suit was stricken from the docket. The suit was dismissed. The proceedings had in it fell when it was dismissed as stricken from the docket. Mr. Call lived for thirteen years at least after this finding, a finding by the jury never sanctioned by the court and never made a judgment of the court.

Mr. HEREFORD. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him a moment? It ought to be stated in justice to the applicant in this case, that the Solicitor of the Treasury said that he found no error in the proceedings by which the case could be reversed by carrying it to a higher court.

to a higher court.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is true. When the proceedings were submitted to the proper attorney of the Government here, the Solicitor of the Treasury, he said he found no technical—

Mr. HEREFORD. No.
Mr. COCKRELL. Or other kind of objection that would enable that ease to be reversed in an appellate court.

Mr.CONKLING. What was there to go to the appellate court with? There was no judgment entered and could not be any on such a ver-

Mr. HEREFORD. The United States sued for a large amount of money, and there was a judgment against the United States.

Mr. CONKLING. There could not have been a judgment against

the United States

Mr. COCKRELL. The point I am making is that there never was a judgment of the court against the United States.

Mr. HEREFORD. There had been one just before in a similar proceeding. Then he took an appeal, and it was reversed.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator is speaking now about setting aside the first verdict.

Mr. EDMUNDS. A verdict is one thing, a judgment another.
Mr. COCKRELL. There never was a judgment in this case against the United States, and after the proceedings had been reviewed by the proper officers of the Treasury Department the suit itself was dismissed, and that ended all the proceedings that had been had in the case. Mr. Call lived thirteen years subsequently, and never made any claim against the Government, directly or indirectly. The case has been acted upon adversely by one of the leading committees of the Senate, no additional evidence has been filed, and I think there is no justice or equity in the claim as now made and presented to the Senate.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President, I have very little to say in addition to what has been said by the Senator who reported this bill. The Senator from Missouri referred to the fact that General Call the senator from missour referred to the fact that General Call in his life-time made no claim, and he makes none now; he is beyond the portals of human life. He is in his grave. The claim that is made here is made in behalf of his two surviving daughters, Mrs. Ellen Call Long and Mrs. Mary K. Brevard.

I had never inquired into the reasons of General Call's failure to who possesses the programment of the home of the contract of the contract

I had never inquired into the reasons of General Call's failure to make a claim to the Department after the rendition of the judgment in this case, but I think I understand it. In the first place, he was a very wealthy and a very patriotic man. During his life he had a large estate, all of which was swept away from his children by the fortunes of the war, which he did as much, I suppose, as any living man to avoid; but that has nothing to do with the question. He made this claim, however, against the Government in his life-time, as is shown by the papers in this case, and if ever there lived a man who would have been the farthest from making a claim that he believed to be dishonest, I think it was General Call. In order to ascertain who he was I will just read a few words of his own writing addressed to the people of Florida in December, 1860, because in a matter of this kind I say, Mr. President, that character has a good deal to do with it. We are not speaking of the claim of a man or of a family who come here and put forth an unsupported demand against the Government. General Call speaks of himself thus:

But I have a common interest, and from my long residence I am somewhat identi-Government. General Call speaks of himself thus:

But I have a common interest, and from my long residence I am somewhat identified with the history of Florida. Before the birth of most men now living I was a soldier in Florida. I was with Jackson in 1814, when he drove the fleet and army of Britain from the forts and bay of the peninsula. I was with him in 1818, when he conquered the Seminoles, and made the first trail of civilized man in the wilderness of Middle Florida, when he captured Saint Mark's, Pensacola, and Barraneas. I was with him in 1821, when, as the first American governor, and as the representative of his country, he took possession of West Florida in person, and of East Florida by his adjutant-general, the late Colonel Butler. I negotiated all the preliminary arrangements for that possession, and superintended the hoisting of the Stars and Stripes as the emblem of our national dominion. Since then Florida has been my home. Here are my children, and here is also all I have on earth.

That, I say, is a short account of who the man was. He was a very

of the Stars and Stripes as the emblem of our national dominion. Since then Florida has been my home. Here are my children, and here is also all I have on earth.

That, I say, is a short account of who the man was. He was a very distinguished character, and I do not think he would have preferred a claim against the Government of the United States that he did not believe was correct. Now, I will say, Mr. President, that at the time this case was tried the court that tried it was presided over by one of the most distinguished men that ever went to that country, Judge Bronson, originally from New York, an able lawyer; and while there is no pretense here for saying that a judgment could be formally rendered against the Government of the United States, I think it has been customary in many cases to permit set-offs like this to be pleaded. While no formal judgment can be entered against the Government, the plea of set-off was allowed and the jury found in its favor; and all the force that is claimed to have resulted from that verdict is a moral one. The whole case was investigated, inquired into, the reasonableness of this service was ascertained, as has been said by the Senator who reported this bill, from the testimony of witnesses under oath, and a jury under oath twice recorded their verdict in favor of the reasonableness of this demand.

Now, I say as a lawyer that while there is no just judgment against the Government, for none can be rendered against the Government except by its own consent, the question is whether this verdict thus recorded is not entitled to as much weight as cases which come before the Senate nearly every day supported by merely ex parte affidavits.

As to the other objection mentioned by the Senator from Missouri.

davits.

As to the other objection mentioned by the Senator from Missouri, that this bill was once postponed, every presumption must be in favor of the regularity of the proceeding. It is to be presumed at least that the Committee on Claims, of which the distinguished Senator is chairman, looked into those matters and presented its report upon a proper foundation.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is distinctly understood that it was not a

Mr. COCKRELL. It is distinctly understood that it was not a unanimous report of the committee. The minority do not always write out a minority report; they do not have time to write out a minority report; but there is practically a minority report in this case just as much as if it had been written out.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Claims I dissented from the report made in this case by the majority of the committee. The case has been stated very fully by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Missouri. The Senator from Florida says that in his opinion the verdict of the jury certifying that a certain amount of money was due by the Government to Mr. Call constitutes what he calls a moral obligation on the part of the Government to pay that amount. Now I will ask that Senator, or any other Senator who is able to explain the matter, how it happened that the offset, or counter-claim, or whatever it is called, pleaded by Mr. Call when the case was first tried in the Florida court, differed essentially from the offset that was pleaded when the case was tried the second time? The Committee on the Judiciary, which reported upon this claim in 1873, found that the effect the verdict might have in establishing an equitable or moral claim against the United States was destroyed by the fact that the set-offs made and relied on in the two suits were essentially diverse the one from the other. I agree with the Committee on the Judiciary in that statement, that the moral effect of the verdict is very much weakened, if not entirely destroyed, by the fact that the offset pleaded by Mr. Call when the case was first tried differed essentially from the offset which he pleaded when the case was tried the second time.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the claim which has been presented by the Committee on Claims I do not think is subject to any of the exceptions taken by the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Wisconsin. The two pleas of set-off were not different; they were the same. It is true that in the last suit brought by the Government against General Call there were some additional items which were not contained in the first, but that is certainly not an unusual proceeding, and it is not at all strange that at some future time there should be other items added, and these items in the letter first submitted by General Call consisted to a large extent of payments of money made by him.

Mr. CONKLING. May I ask the Senator a question on that point?

money made by him.

Mr. CONKLING. May I ask the Senator a question on that point?

Mr. CALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. I observe in the report of the majority of the committee this statement:

It was shown by the testimony that this revision-

That is, the revision made by the regulations of the Land Officeoccupied from two to three months, and for this service the jury allowed the sum of $12,500.

Will the Senator show me where that appeared in the first statement of offset found in the report of the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. CALL. I am not familiar, I will reply to the learned Senator from New York, with these accounts. I have in my hand, on which I predicated my statement, the reports; I do not know the evidence on which they were made.

Mr. CONKLING. I speak of the items of offset stated on the record.

record.

Mr. CALL. I have never examined anything but these reports, which the Senator has in his hand. I find here in the letter of General Call addressed to the Department on the 27th of October, 1840, the following statement of account:

The United States,

To R. K. Call, late receiver of public moneys at Tallahassee, for extra services performed in the adjudication of pre-emption land claims in Florida, (and where no compensation has been allowed,) from the 1st day of June, 1826, to the 31st day of May, 1830, inclusive, 1,460 days, at $5 per day..... $7,300

The period of time contained in this item is from the 1st day of June, 1826, to the 31st of May, 1830.

Mr. CONKLING. That was in the first offset?

Mr. CALL. And that is the original account of General Call, from June, 1826, to May, 1830—fourteen hundred and sixty days.

To clerk hire during same period, at $3 per day.

To extra services performed in the adjudication of pre-emption land claims in Florida, from the 1st day of June, 1830, to the 31st day of May, 1835, (where fifty cents only was allowed in each case approved and nothing for those rejected,) 1,825 days, at $1 per day.

To clerk hire during same period, at $1 per day.

That is the amount General Call presented to the Department with a request that the items might be presented and rejected in order that they might come within the rule for the purpose of being introduced as evidence.

Now, I desire to say to the Senate that there never was a man who lived of a higher character, of purer integrity, of loftier purposes than General Call. He was a patriot, and a man who was willing to die for his convictions of right. He was devoted to the Union of the States, and when the war of secession occurred, as an old officer of the Army, who had gone through the war of 1812, who had velunteered when he was seventeen years of age, and accompanied General Jackson in his Indian campaign, served with great distinction, and as the favorite officer and friend of General Jackson, identified with the Army and with the Union throughout his whole life—when the war of secession occurred it grieved him to the death, and he died the victim of his own disappointment and bitter mortification at the course which public affairs had taken. He in his whole lifetime in Florida had signalized his devotion to the country and the Government. When the Indian war occurred and a difficulty of communi-Florida had signalized his devotion to the country and the Government. When the Indian war occurred and a difficulty of communication existed between the capital and the then remote frontier of Florida, he had contributed out of his own private means $100,000, which were paid into the hands of the quartermaster of General Jesups army for the purpose of defraying the then pressing expenses and necessities of the volunteers that were called into the service to anticipate the coming of the regular forces of the Government. His whole life was signalized by contributions of this character, and whole life was signalized by contributions of the Government. His whole life was signalized by contributions of this character, and when in 1840 the general presented this claim he considered that he was the creditor of the Government and openly maintained that attitude and position toward it.

I will not read this letter, presenting this account which is substantially the foundation of the report of the committee, which has never been varied from except that some additional items have been added to it, and which was sustained under the rigid ruling of Judge Bronson, formerly a member of Congress from the State of New York and appointed to be district judge of the United States, a man of the greatest learning, of the highest integrity, and of the most rigid honesty. This account was sustained by two verdicts, two trials, and careful and minute examinations into the truth of every item. I, as careful and minute examinations into the truth of every item. I, as a boy, at the time, and familiar with the facts, remember the trial. I remember that General Call, when the verdict was obtained, was highly gratified, and that, being a man of wealth, he never asked the Government for it; he was too proud to ask the Government. He said, "There is my vindication. If the Government sees fit it can pay the amount, for I shall not press it with solicitations." He died in 1862, and his fortune was swept from his children. He died because he was broken-hearted at the contemplation of the calamities which had come upon the country. He died a martyr to his devotion to the old flag, and to his love for the perpetuation of the Union. His children were left in comparative poverty.

There is no pretense for the statement that these services were not rendered. There is no ground for suspicion that every item in that rendered. There is no ground for suspicion that every item in that account was not a just and true item of services rendered and money paid for the Government. On the contrary, every proof and every presumption of proof is in its favor.

Then, I say there can be no doubt whatever. The Senator from Mis-

Then, I say there can be no doubt whatever. The Senator from Missouri has found none. The objection that he makes on the ground of a judgment is one that has no weight in it. There is no evidence that the court did not approve the verdict of that jury. There is every presumption that the court did approve the verdict of the jury. Judge Bronson upon the second trial of the case refused to set aside the verdict, and there is every evidence in the facts of the case that it met with his entire approval. I myself know the fact, as a matter of common notoriety at the time, that Judge Bronson regarded this verdict as a just verdict and this sum of money as honestly due by the Government to General Call.

by the Government to General Call.

I hope, therefore, that the Senate will vote this sum of money as an act of tardy justice to this man and of just performance of the obligations of the Government.

obligations of the Government.

Mr. CONKLING. Allow me to ask a question of the Senator before he sits down. This report, I observe, states:

It is true there is no evidence before the Committee to sustain the items of the set-off. But is not the verdict of a jury upon these items rendered, see

Therefore the verdict of the jury, although it could not be the foundation of a judgment against the United States, becomes quite important. Now I wish the Senator to turn his attention to this important. Now I wish the Senator to turn his attention to this point. He has read item by item the original set-off spread on the record. Here is the report of the Judiciary Committee which gives the items of set-off as presented at another time. They are not only somewhat different, but they are most significantly different. The letter from the Solicitor of the Treasury states among other things:

In his report of this trial the district attorney states almong other things:

In his report of this trial the district attorney states, in a letter dated 8th March, 1842, that "the court allowed evidence to go to the jury upon a claim for extra service in revising the decisions of the register and receiver of the land office at Tallahassee upon pre-suption claims which the defendant insisted he was directed to perform by a letter of G. Graham, Commissioner of the General Land Office, directed to the register and receiver at Tallahassee, dated July 27, 1827. It was shown by the testimony that this revision occupied from two to three months, and for this service the jury allowed the sum of $12,500.

Now when you come to the set-off as it appears on the Judiciary Committee report, it not only does not read as this set-off of which the Senator has read different items, for example, for services in preempted land claims $7,300 and so on, but this is it:

Amount paid register, salary third quarter 1825	$125
Amount paid for office furniture		50
Amount paid Colonel R. Butler, second quarter's salary, 1827	1,000
Amount paid Colonel R. Butler, first quarter's salary, 1833	1,000 (00
Amount paid William P. Duval, 1835	1,000	00
Amount deposited first quarter 1831, Bank of Mobile	5.0 (
Amount deposited second quarter 1831, Central Bank of Florida	3, 200 (00
Amount deposited tourth quarter 1833, Bank of Mobile	200
For legal services in fitteen mandamus cases at chambers, at $100 each.	1,500 (00
For at ending three mandamus cases in superior court, $50 each	150
For a tending two mandamus cases in court of appeals, $100 each	200 (
For adjudicating and revising pre-emption land claims, 939 days, at & per day		00
	13, 623	50

If I am not mistaken every one of these items is different, radically different from any item which appears in the first set-off excepting the last, and that one instead of being an item for $7,300 is an item for $4,695; and now inasmuch as we are remitted to the proceedings in this court, very irregular as they seem to me to have been, it becomes quite important to know what took place there; and I ask the Senator how it can be that this gentleman in his life-time, on the spot, seeing to this himself, presented in two instances a set-off not only different but repugnant and irreconcilable the one with the other.

of Mrs. Ellen Call Long and Mrs. Mary K. Brevard will be regarded as still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, to enable the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] to conclude his remarks.

Mr. CALL. I think I can answer the inquiry of the honorable Senator from New York. I will answer it in this way: the letter of General Call referred to in the report of the Judiciary Committee, as I suppose the foundation of the set-off in the first trial, is dated the 27th of October, 1840. The report says:

The defendant pleaded a set-off for $15.250, consisting of four items, to wit:

1. For extra services in adjudication of pre-emption land claims, 1,460 days, at $60 per day.

$7,300

That is in the letter which I have read. Clerk hire for same time, at $3 per day
 Extra services in adjudication of land claims in addition to 50 cents allowed by law, 1,825 days, at $4 per day
 Clerk hire for same time. 4,300

That was the first trial of the case. Now, the objection of the Senator from New York is that in the second trial of the case a new and different plea of set-off was entered for a different amount. I said before that General Call stood before the court in this controversy before that General Call stood before the court in this controversy insisting that for a long period of time he had performed these services without any compensation, and that he had paid out large sums of money, and the objection is that at the first trial the specifications in the plea were of certain items which upon the second trial were not contained in the plea, but a new series of items were inserted and relied upon for the defendant. I explain that in this way, and I will state to the Senator from New York that it is a true explanation: General Call was a man who transacted the business of the Government in the Territory of Florida; as receiver and as a lawyer representing the Government he was continued in this employment for a number of years by General Jackson, and no doubt there was more or less difficulty in obtaining vouchers, more or less uncertainty in his own mind until the progress of this suit in its different phases called to his attention the different payments made for the Govern-ment; and when he came to trial the second time we find in the ver-dict of the jury, (which is the only part of the record that we have,) not that there was no other plea of set-off, not that there was no other claim presented by General Call or insisted upon, but that the jury found some additional items different from the items claimed in jury found some additional items different from the items claimed in the first suit

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, he will perceive that if the first plea was still insisted upon and the verdict of the jury was for these items and only for these, then they found against the other items which had been insisted upon in the first trial; so it follows that General Call withdrew his original claim or set-off and substituted another, or else that the jury found against that claim although it found in favor of the claim as it stands now.

Mr. CALL. I will submit to the honorable Senator from New York, whose experience is very great, this question: While that might perhaps be the conclusion drawn, has he not often seen the second verdict of a jury for a larger amount a different finding from the first one? The fact is only that the jury found in this case that they could agree on the proof as to certain items while they might have disagreed as to the others; but there is no evidence that there was anything wrong in the original items. The evidence in the case is this:

We, the jury impaneled in the case of the United States against Richard K. Call, find that said Richard K. Call is not indebted to the plaintiff, but that the plaintiff is indebted to the defendant in the sum of $8,563.37, as exhibited by the following statement, to wit:

The presumption is that the judge considered some of the items in the first account plead as unsustained by the evidence, and for this reason set aside the verdict; and on the second trial additional items of account were added, but these items had been presented to the Government by General Call, as is shown by his letter of 1840, which I will read to the Senate. Here in his letter he says:

I have the honor herewith to inclose my accounts against the United States for legal services rendered in my professional capacity.

That is the letter of 1840. This is the verdict of the jury to which the Senator referred, the last jury in the case, and here is his letter:

For legal services rendered in my professional capacity, and for extra services, which in their nature were judicial and performed as receiver of the land office at Tallahassee, Florida, in adjudicating pre-emption land claims.

Should these accounts not be allowed, I have to request that they may be returned to me through the post-office at this place, with the usual indorsement and evidence that they have been presented and rejected at the Treasury Department.

evidence that they have been presented and rejected at the Treasury Department. There are the very items returned by the last jury. I cannot speak certainly as to the pleas, but I said they were substantially the same. Here is the claim for revising the pre-emption laws: Nine hundred and thirty-nine days the jury allowed at $5 a day. General Call claimed for the whole period of time from 1826 to 1830; and you will perceive that in both pleas, so far from there being material difference, as the report of the Judiciary Committee alleges, they are substantially the same. General Call presented this account in 1840. In the first trial it was allowed; in the second trial a specific sum awarded by the verdict of the jury, of which I hold in my hand a certified copy—of the verdict which allows more for adjudicating and revising the pre-emption land claims—nine hundred and thirty-nine revising the pre-emption land claims-nine hundred and thirty-nine days, at $5 a day

Mr. CONKLING. And that is the only item which appeared in the first account, and in place of being for $7,300 it is for four thousand and odd dollars; and every other item which they found never appeared in the original account at all, and no other item that appeared in the original account appears in this?

Mr. CALL. Let us see if my learned friend from New York is not in over about that "General Call cave."

in error about that. General Call says:

I have the honor herewith to inclose my accounts against the United States for legal services rendered in my professional capacity.

Mr. CONKLING. Now read what they are. Mr. CALL. Now let us see what the jury found:

For legal services in fifteen mandamus cases at chambers, at $100 each, $1,500.

Mr. CONKLING. Does that appear in the first account !

Mr. CALL. It appears in the account in 1840 substantially. Would you not hold that to be covered by these words? I am reading from the original documents on file, not from the Judiciary Committee's

Mr. CONKLING. It is not here at all.

Mr. CALL. I do not refer to the Judiciary Committee's report which the Senator has before him; but I submit to the Senate that I hold in my hand a letter of General Call, written in 1840, claiming I hold in my nand a letter of General Call, written in 1849, claiming of the Government compensation for his professional services as a lawyer in these cases, and I say that the verdict of the last jury sustains that claim of General Call. If it be objected that at the first trial he did not specify any particular items of accounts which the Government owed him for this service, and that therefore he was wrong in claiming them afterwards—I know the Senator will not make that assertion—the objection of course in the inforces that there are wrong in chaiming them afterwards—I know the Senator will not make that assertion—the objection of course is the inference that there was no claim or he would have presented it at the first trial.

Mr. CONKLING. That is not the objection. The objection is that at the first trial he did claim for professional services, he did specify what they were; and they were services of a wholly different kind and character from those which were afterward insisted upon. That is the objection is the objection.

Mr. CALL. Well, let us see. The report of the Judiciary Committee says:

Extra services in adjudication of land claims, in addition to fifty cents allowed by law, 1,825 days, at $1 per day, $1,825.

The learned Senator from New York is wrong. The jury in the last verdict specified that particular item, as any Senator may see.

Extra services in adjudication of land claims, in addition to fifty cents allowed by law. 1,825 days, at $1 per day, $1,825.

Clerk hire for same time, $1,825.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Will the Senator allow me to inquire when those legal services were rendered? Does it appear from quire when those legal services were rendered? Does it appear from the account when they were rendered?

Mr. CALL. It appears from the account that they were rendered from the year 1826 to the year 1830.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Was General Call during that time or during any portion of that time the receiver of public moneys?

Mr. CALL. I am not able to state certainly in what years he was the receiver. I presume he was at that time. General Call was the receiver of public moneys for many years in Florida, but as to the particular years I have no information except that which is contained in these naners.

these papers.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. What I want to get at is this: Was or was he not receiver at the time it is alleged these legal services were rendered?

Mr. CALL. I presume he was; but he was required to perform them as extra services, as his statement in this account no doubt will show; and I can assure the honorable Senator that such a judge as Judge Bronson never would have allowed a claim against the Government by an officer for compensation which he should have rendered in his official capacity to have been presented as an offset before a jury. He would have ruled it out.

would have ruled it out.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. This claim, I think, was not allowed by the judge, but it was passed upon by the jury.

Mr. CALL. When such a claim is presented, it is for the court to rule it to be either competent or incompetent evidence, and the court would have instructed the jury and if the jury had violated the instructions of the court it would certainly have set aside the verdict. There is no doubt about that. No jury ever presumed in Judge Bronsons's court, upon a clear question of the ruling of the court, to disregard the instructions of the court without finding their verdict summarily set aside.

I can only say to the Senate that this is beyond all doubt a just claim, that a man who, like General Call, stood up in the last moment and hour, when passion was at its height, and confronted the entire public opinion of the country upon a sincere conviction of right, would never be the man to present an account against the Government for services which were not rendered. And I submit to the honorable Senator from New York that even if it is true that there is not in the record of the first trial in court a specific item of charge for professional services, it appears in the letter of General Call addressed to the Department in 1840; and whether by omission or purposely it was not contained in the plea at the first trial, it was contained in the plea at the second trial, and that claim presented in 1840; the Transport Percent Percent is the second trial, and that claim presented in 1840. to the Treasury Department here was, at a trial before Judge Bronson, by an intelligent jury, found to be true and sustained by the evidence. And I will submit further that the law officer of the Gov-son, by an intelligent jury, found to be true and sustained by the evidence. And I will submit further that the law officer of the Government, the Solicitor of the Treasury who at that time examined the case and the proofs and the record as reported to him, certified that there was no ground of error, in his opinion. This also was the view of the United States district attorney.

Senators cannot say that a judge of character would not have set aside the verdict if there had been an insufficiency of evidence to sustain the claim for services alleged to have been rendered by General Call, both professional and non-professional, and the items of credit claimed by him. If the evidence did not clearly show that they had been rendered and were done, gentlemen cannot say that the presumption is that a judge of a United States court would not have set aside the verdict of the jury.

Mr. HEREFORD. Mr. President, it seems to me that there is a disposition to go outside of the record in this case. We have here be-position to go outside of the record in this case. We have here before us—and I do not think we can go outside of that—the report of the Solicitor of the Treasury, and in that report is included the report of the United States district attorney who tried the case. They must have known more about it than anybody else can know. Now, what do they say? The district attorney who tried the case, in his report to the Solicitor of the Treasury at Washington, says:

The court allowed evidence to go to the jury upon a claim for extra service in revising the decisions of the register and receiver of the land office at Tallahassee upon pre-emption claims, which the defendant insisted he was directed to perform by a letter of G. Graham, Commissioner of the General Land Office, directed to the register and receiver at Tallahassee, dated July 27, 1827.

That was his claim.

It was shown

The district attorney says-

by the testimony that this revision occupied from two to three months, and for this service the jury allowed the sum of $12,500. I excepted to the opinion of the court in the admission of this testimony, contending that the revision of these decisions were included in the ordinary and special duties of his office prescribed by law, and were not extra-official; also to the introduction of other letters specified in the copies of the bill of exceptions herewith inclosed.

He sent the whole bill of exceptions to Washington.

Upon the return of the verdict I entered a nfotion for a new trial, upon the ground that the verdict was against evidence, and was given under an obvious misconception of the charge of the court, and that the judge misdirected the jury.

And that distinguished judge, after the motion for a new trial made, with those several entries in the account, overruled the motion of the United States district attorney, and said that those items were proper charges against the United States and that the jury did not misconceive the construction of the judge. That was the first trial in this case, and upon that there was a judgment, notwithstanding the Senator from New York, a moment ago, and I believe the Senator from Missouri, stated that in such a case as this there could be no judgment. souri, stated that in such a case as this there could be no judgment. Every lawyer ought to know, I think, that in such a case as this there ought to be a judgment, and certainly would be between private citizens. I do not mean a judgment for the overplus, but a judgment to let the defendant go free and acquit of the demand of the plaintiff; and as far as the charge of the General Government against him was concerned he was thereby exonerated and discharged from it forever. Then comes the second trial; Mr. Penrose was then Solicitor; two Solicitors of the Treasury had charge of this matter:

By direction of Mr. Penrose, then Solicitor, the case was appealed, and in February, 1843, the judgment in the court below reversed.

And yet we are told by the chairman of the committee on Claims that there never was and never could be a judgment in a case of this kind. The district attorney says there was a judgment, the Solicitor of the Treasury says there was a judgment, and from that judgment there was an appeal to the superior court, and the judgment was reversed and the case remanded—

And a venire facias de novo awarded. After this there was much correspondence with the district attorney, and diligent efforts appear to have been made to prepare the case, and at November term, 1843, it again came on for trial, but in consequence of the inadmissibility of some of the papers offered in evidence the district attorney submitted to a non-suit, and commenced a new suit.

This explains the colloquy that took place between the junior Senator from Florida and the Senator from New York as to the difference between the items of set-off in the first trial and in the last. The officer who tried the case, who had control of the matter, says:

The set-off plea was for services as counsel in arguing mandamus cases under instructions from the Land \cup ffice.

That was the addition and the only addition. It was for arguing mandamus cases and extra compensation for adjudicating pre-emption claims. That charge for adjudicating pre-emption claims, as we have seen, was ene of the set-offs pleaded in the first case, and in the second the only addition is the argument of these mandamus cases, as is set forth by the Solicitor of the Treasury himself, and that is the only discrepancy. The report of an ex-Senator here, a very distinguished man, Senator Frelinghuysen, is quoted, and it is said in that report that the fact that the verdict in the second trial was different from the first covercement the inference to be drawn from the original verthat the fact that the verdict in the second trial was different from the first overcomes the inference to be drawn from the original verdict. All those matters were before the jury at the nisi prius trial. They were argued before the jury and were decided by that jury; and at the second trial they increased the verdict over the first and brought it in for eight thousand and odd dollars. Then when the matter came here to the Solicitor of the Treasury the second time he says he has examined the case diligently and "that there is no possible question which can be carried to the Supreme Court;" in other words, there is no error. If the jury had been wrong in allowing these various items the judge would have set the verdict aside; but he refused to set the verdict aside, and thereby indorsed the correctness of the second verdict. If they had allowed improper items to swell the proportions of the verdict the United States judge would have set the verdict aside, as he was asked to do. Then the Solicitor of the Treasury says he finds no possible cause for taking an appeal to the Supreme Court. an appeal to the Supreme Court.

It is upon those two verdicts that the petitioners in this case come before the Senate and ask it to render them what twenty-four men before the Senate and ask it to render them what twenty-four men awarded, what a court has twice said was their due; what two juries have said was due to their father, when the witnesses were before them publicly and subjected to a strict cross-examination.

That is this case, Mr. President. Two verdicts of two juries, given in a United States court presided over by one of our most distinguished judges, say this money is due by the United States; and if there had been error in those verdicts the judge would have set them aside. Upon those two verdicts the petitioners in this case come before this body and ask the Senate to do simple justice to one of the most distinguished men that the State of Florida has ever produced.

PEDESTAL OF FARRAGUT STATUE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business is before

Mr. VOORHEES. Before the unfinished business is before the Senate, being Senate bill No. 877.

Mr. VOORHEES. Before the unfinished business is taken up, I observe that the bill (H. R. No. 6593) to provide a suitable pedestal to the monument erected in honor of the late Admiral Farragut in Washington City has come from the House of Representatives. I move that the usual reference be dispensed with, the subject having been before the Naval Committee of the Senate, who examined it and I understand entirely concur in the action of the House in the propriety and necessity of this small appropriation. I hope the Senate priety and necessity of this small appropriation. I hope the Senate will take it up and pass it without an unnecessary reference to the committee, because the Committee on Naval Affairs have had the matter under consideration and are of the same mind as the House. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the suggestion made by the Senator from Indiana? The Chair hears none.

Mr. McPHERSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island whether the sub-committee, of which he is one, has examined the House bill on this question of the sufficiency of the plan of the proposed pedastal?

proposed pedestal?

Mr. ANTHONY. We have not had any consultation upon the subject, but from the drawing that has been submitted to us it is manifest that the pedestal which is now under the statue is inadequate for its exhibition. We have not examined the plan for a new pedestal. Indeed I do not know that this bill contains a plan. Let the bill be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will lay before the Senate the bill received from the House of Representatives, which will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 6593) to provide a suitable pedestal to the monument erected in honor of the late Admiral Farragut in Washington City.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $8,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated for the purpose of increasing the height of the pedestal to the monument erected in honor of the late Admiral Farragut in the city of Washington, and which sum shall be expended for said purpose under the orders and direction of the Secretary of the Navy. The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to make such use of ordnance and other naval stores now on hand for the appropriate ornamentation of said pedestal as may be required.

The bill was read three times and passed

The bill was read three times, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I do not think any great harm will result to the public interests by finishing the case the Senate has been con-

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not believe that case can be finished immediately. Of course the amount involved is not large; but as a precedent for future action in a thousand other cases, it is quite important, and the Senator knows there is considerable executive business that ought to be attended to before the holiday recess, and therefore I suggest that we had better do what we ought as a matter of carrying on the Government to do. I want to be heard a little while about the principle involved here.

Mr. ALLISON. Let us have the regular order first, Mr. President.
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I call for the regular order.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has directed the Clerk to report the unfinished business of the Senate, being Senate bill No. 877.

BEN. HOLLADAY.

Mr. VOORHEES. Before the unfinished business is taken up, I desire to make an announcement and give a notice. The Committee on Claims reported some time ago a bill for the relief of Benjamin Holladay. It was ready for action last session. It is conceded on all hands that there is money due him, some large amount. Toward the close of the last session the Senate will remember that a day was set when it should be taken up after the convening of the present session. That day passed by. It was not taken up. I give notice now that after the morning hour on the 5th of January, when we reconvene here, I shall move to take the bill up and ask the Senate to vote upon it, and I hope I shall live to be in my place to make that motion.

LIST OF PRIVATE CLAIMS.

Mr. WHYTE. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to make a report from the Committee on Printing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be received in the absence of objection.

Mr. WHYTE. The Committee on Printing has instructed me to report back the letter of the Secretary of the Senate, transmitting, in obedience to the resolution of the Senate of June 16, 1880, an alphabetical list of all private land claims which have been before the Senate, with the action of the Senate thereon, since the 3d day of March, 1867, and with the letter to report the following resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration by the Senate:

Resolved, That the alphabetical list of private claims extending to the 3d day of March, 1867, and which has been continued and completed to the close of the second session of the Forty-sixth Congress, in obecience to the resolution of the Senate of June 16, 1880, be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that a resolution that has been referred to the Committee on Printing?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is reported by the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does it fall within the rule prescribed by act of Congress about referring resolutions that call for an expenditure of

An. EDMUNDS. Does it all within the fule prescribed by act of more than $500?

Mr. WHYTE. The letter asking for the information was referred to the Committee on Printing, and this resolution is reported back with the letter. I take it for granted it is precisely in the same condition as if the resolution itself had been referred to the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know whether it is or not. I do not make any point about it; I only call attention to the question whether we are going to get the Public Printer into any bother about his accounts by this thing. That is all.

The resolution was considered, by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I rather think the law requires that a resolution for printing anything that costs more than $500 must be concurred in by both Houses. However I do not make any point.

Mr. WHYTE. I have pursued the regular course that I found in other cases. I take it for granted that the gentleman who preceded me, my learned friend from Rhode Island, [Mr. Anthony,] was correct. I am following behind him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very likely it is correct, then. Far be it from me to dispute two such high anthorities.

Mr. ANTHONY. Does the resolution call for the publication of extra copies?

extra copies?

Mr. WHYTE. No; only for the usual number for the use of the Senate.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then it is proper.
Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well, it is all right; they both say it is all right.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business is Senate bill No. 877.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 6025) to establish an assay office in the city of Saint Louis, Missouri, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

CHANGE OF NAME OF A YACHT.

Mr. RANSOM. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 6539) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to change the name of the yacht Stephen D. Barnes, of Philadelphia, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its immediate consideration at the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WALLACE,] who is not here, but desires the bill to pass Pennsylvania, Lair. Wallace, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to change the name of the yacht Stephen D. Barnes, owned by Henry C. Lea, of Philadelphia, to that of Vega, and to grant a register in the new name, the vessel being a pleasure yacht only, and not engaged in commercial or other business.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Tuesday, December 21, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

CORRECTION.

Mr. OSMER. In the RECORD of to-day, Mr. Updegraff, of Ohio, is credited with having introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6699) to fix the rank and pay of the non-commissioned officers of the medical staff of the Army. That bill was introduced by me and I ask the correction be made accordingly.

The SPEAKER. The correction, the Chair is informed, has already been made.

been made

Mr. PRICE. That seems to be another case like that where a bill was introduced and no notice taken of it in the Journal or the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has directed a search to be made in reference to the bill referred to by the gentleman from Iowa so that the question may be determined between the clerks and that gentleman as to which is correct. Whoever turns out to be correct shall have the benefit of the announcement by the Chair.

IMPROVEMENT OF CAPITOL GROUNDS.

Mr. HUNTON. I ask by unanimous consent to introduce at this time the usual joint resolution making appropriation for filling up, draining, and placing in good sanitary condition the grounds south of the Capitol along the line of the old canal, and for other purposes.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I object.

Mr. BLOUNT. I object too.

Mr. HUNTON. This is the usual resolution passed for the purpose of employing the poor of this District in reclaiming valuable lands for the Federal Government.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am willing to have it read

Mr. BLOUNT. I am willing to have it read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objected. Does the gentleman insist on his objection?

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I object to any bill which will give rise to discussion.

Mr. HUNTON. This cannot lead to discussion.
Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I must object as I wish to go on with the funding bill.

PORTRAIT OF SPEAKER TRUMBULL,

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am charged with a brief message from the General Assembly of Connecticut, for which I beg the unan-imous consent of the House to occupy a few moments. When the imous consent of the House to occupy a few moments. very acceptable changes were made in the rooms and corridors in rear of the Speaker's chair, it was suggested that the varied, imperfect, and unsatisfactory collection of photographs and lithographs of former Speakers ought to be replaced by a full series of portraits in oil. To contribute to that end, the delegation from Connecticut addressed a communication to his excellency the governor, and upon his suggestion the General Assembly immediately ordered a portrait of Jonathan Trumbull 2d, member of the first two Congre Speaker of the second. The painting has arrived and has this morning been placed in the corridor.

Permit me to give a brief catalogue of the eminent services of the distinguished statesman whose portrait I have now the honor to present. He was a son of Governor Jonathan Trumbull 1st, the original "Brother Jonathan," who was governor from 1766 to 1784, and was the only colonial governor in office at the beginning of the Revolution who continued to serve throughout. Jonathan Trumbull 2d was born at Lebanon, Connecticut, March 26, 1740, and graduated at Harvard College. He served several years in the General Assembly before the Revolution. He was appointed by the Continental Congress paymaster of the northern department of the Continental forces and served as such from 1775 to 1778, when he resigned to settle the affairs of his deceased brother, Colonel Joseph Trumbull, (who was and served as such from 1775 to 1778, when he resigned to settle the affairs of his deceased brother, Colonel Joseph Trumbull, (who was the Commissary-General of the United States forces,) and immediately entered the Legislature. In 1780 he was appointed secretary and first aid to General Washington, and served with him until the end of the war, honored with the confidence and friendship of his distinguished commander and the esteem and affection of the Army. In 1788 he was elected speaker of the Legislature of the State of Connecticut, and in March, 1789, he took his seat in the First Congress. He was re-elected to the Second Congress, and in 1791 he was elected Speaker. In October, 1794, he was chosen United States Senator, which position he resigned in May, 1796, to accept the office of lieutenant-governor of his State.

On the death of Governor Wolcott, in 1798, he became governor of the State, and was thereafter annually elected by large majorities

On the death of Governor Wolcott, in 1798, he became governor of the State, and was thereafter annually elected by large majorities for eleven years consecutively, dying in office August 7, 1809. He was a man of culture, of dignity of character, remarkably evenly balanced faculties, a man of sound judgment and devoted patriotism, beloved in private life and admired and respected in public life. The portrait brought here to-day was painted by Harry I. Thompson, of New Haven, Connecticut, from a miniature painted about the time Governor Trumbull was Speaker, and with the aid of a portrait by his brother, Colonel John Trumbull, (the artist, likewise one of Washington's aids,) and aided also by a portrait by the famous Sully. The General Assembly of the State of Connecticut desires to present to the House his portrait, to be placed among the collection of distinguished Speakers, and I have the honor, Mr. Speaker, of placing it at your disposal.

at your disposal.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit the following resolution accepting the portrait referred to.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

Resolved, That the thanks of the House of Representatives be tendered to the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut for the portrait of the distinguished statesman and citizen, Jonathan Trumbull, presented to the House to-day.

The resolution was agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT OF CAPITOL GROUNDS.

Mr. HUNTON. I now ask, Mr. Speaker, to submit the following joint resolution for immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read.
The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled. That the sum of $20,000 dollars be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of continuing the filling up, draining, and placing in good sanitary, condition the old canal, the grounds of the United States south of the Capitol, along the line of said canal. The commissioners of the District shall determine the plan of said work, employ the labor to do the same by the day, week, or morth, and see that it is properly conducted, and shall disburse the money and make report of the same to Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution !

Mr. FORT. Mr. Speaker, that ought to go to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the resolution is not before the House for consideration.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I demand the regular order. The SPEAKER. The regular order is the morning hour for reports from committees.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASES.

Mr. FIELD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a privileged report from Mr. FIELD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a privileged report from the Committee on Elections. I am directed by the committee to present the following report and the accompanying resolutions, two in number, and ask that the resolutions be read and the report and resolutions be printed. Also, that the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Indiana, members of the committee, have the privilege of presenting the views of the minority in the same cases.

The SPEAKER. The resolutions will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the matter of J. C. Holmes, claiming a seat from the eighth congressional the matter of J. C. Rolmes, claiming a seat from the eighth congressional district of Iowa:

Resolved, That the petitioner, J. C. Holmes, in the matter of his petition asking to be admitted to a seat in the Forty-sixth Congress as a Representative from the eighth congressional district, from the State of Iowa, have leave to withdraw his petition.

In the petter of John J. Wilson eleming a seat from the pinth congressional

In the matter of John J. Wilson, claiming a seat from the ninth congressional district of Iowa:

Resolved, That the petioner, John J. Wilson, in the matter of his petition asking to be admitted to a seat in the Forty-sixth Congress as a Representative from the ninth congressional district, from the State of Iowa, have leave to withdraw his petition.

The SPEAKER. Are there two reports?

Mr. FIELD. The matter referred to in the two resolutions which have been read is all involved in one report.

The SPEAKER. The report and resolutions will be printed, and also, as suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts, without objection, the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Indiana, members of the Committee on Elections, will be authorized to diana, members of the Committee on Elections, will be authorized to present the views of the minority, and that the same be printed.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I desire at this time to present the views of the minority in the contested-election case of Boynton against Loring, which was presented yesterday, accompanied by the resolution which I desire to offer, and ask that the resolution be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That E. Moody Boynton is entitled to the seat in the Forty-sixth Congress from the sixth congressional district of Massachusetts, and that George B. Loring is not entitled thereto.

The SPEAKER. The minority report and the resolution will be printed in accordance with the order of the House previously made.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 5384) granting permission to the Chamber of Commerce of New York to erect a statue on the sub-treasury building in the city of New York.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I must insist on the regular order.
The SPEAKER. The regular order is the morning hour for the call of committees for reports.

Mr. REAGAN. I move that the morning hour be dispensed with.
Mr. WEAVER. I ask that the vote be taken by tellers.
Tellers were ordered; and Mr. RICHMOND and Mr. REAGAN were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 83, noes 52.

So (two-thirds not having voted in the affirmative) the morning hour was not dispensed with.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF WAR.

Mr. SPARKS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with an adverse recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 6515) to provide for an Assistant Secretary of War; which was laid on the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

EDWARD M'DONALD REYNOLDS.

Mr. BRIGGS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back, with an adverse recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 4776) for the restoration of Edward McDonald Reynolds to the rank of captain in the Marine Corps of the United States; which was laid on the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

M. P. JONES.

Mr. DUNN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1747) for the relief of M. P. Jones; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ALONZO GESNER.

Mr. DUNN also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1748) for the relief of Alonzo Gesner; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

CARR LAKE.

Mr. SAPP, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 6527) to grant to the corporate authorities of the city of Council Bluffs, in the State of Iowa, for public uses a certain lake known as Carr Lake, situated near said city; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM F. SCHLOEGEL.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 6557) to authorize a patent to issue to William Frederick Schloegel for the southeast quarter of section 34, in township 22 south, of range 15 east of the sixth principal meridian in Kansas; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

SAN ANTONIO AND MEXICAN BORDER RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. I desire to present an adverse minority report on the bill (H. R. No. 2967) to authorize the Secretary of War to contract with the San Antonio and Mexican Border Railroad Comto contract with the San Antonio and Mexican Border Railroad Company for the immediate construction of a railroad from San Antonio to a point on the Rio Grande at or near the town of Laredo for the purpose of establishing a postal and military highway from the United States military headquarters at San Antonio, Texas, to the Mexican border. The bill has heretofore been reported favorably by the Committee on Railways and Canals, and has been referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I present now the views of the minority of the committee adverse to the bill, and ask that they be printed to accompany the bill.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

HEIRS OF RICHARD HALE.

Mr. DIBRELL, from the Committee on Pensions, reported a bill (H. R. No. 6714) directing the Commissioner of Pensions to pay to the heirs of Richard Hale the pension that would have been due him had he not been dropped; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FRANKLIN CROCKER.

Mr. COLERICK, from the Committee on Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 6715) for the relief of Franklin Crocker; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. FLORA A. DARLING.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 6716) for the relief of Mrs. Flora A. Darling; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS REPORTED BY TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 6717) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department; which was read a first and second time, recommitted to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CONFIRMATION OF LAND CLAIMS IN MISSOURL

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 1015, a bill (H. R. No. 6718) to confirm certain land claims in the State of Missouri, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RANCHO PANOCHE GRANDE.

Mr. CALDWELL, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported back, with an adverse recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 449) to ascertain and determine the title to the tract of land known as Rancho Panoche Grande, in the State of California; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the adverse report ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALDWELL. My colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. MYERS,] desires to submit the views of the minor-

There was no objection; and it was ordered that Mr. Myers have leave to present the views of the minority, and that the same be printed.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE.

Mr. WILSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back a resolution heretofore referred to that committee, and to move that the resolution and accompanying papers, together with the report of the committee, be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is it in reference to constructing a new building or extending the old building of the Government Printing Office? If it is, it seems to me it should go to the Committee on Public Buildings

Mr. WILSON. I understand that the subject was before the Committee on Appropriations last year.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved. That the Committee on Printing be directed to ascertain and report to this Honse whether there is any necessity for enlarging the buildings of the Government Printing Office, and, if so, that they report the extent and probable cost of such additional buildings as may be necessary.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House, if strictly enforced, the Committee on Appropriations, upon the objection of a single member, it being new legislation not in the line of retrenchment, would be prevented from considering the resolution.

Mr. BLOUNT. It should go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. WILSON. I conferred this morning with a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and he thought that it should go to that committee. The Committee on Appropriations has been charged with committee. The Committee on Appropriations has been charged with the investigation of the subject.

Mr. BLOUNT. A simple resolution was referred to that committee; I do not think any instructions were given to the committee.

Mr. WILSON. This is a report in regard to the necessity of additional facilities for the Government Printing Office, and I think it should go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think it should go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The SPEAKER. The House can refer it to any committee it pleases. The question will be first on the reference to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion to refer to the Committee on Appropriations was not agreed to, upon a division-ayes 4, noes 16; no further count being called for

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the resolution and report be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The motion was agreed to.

YORKTOWN CELEBRATION.

Mr. GOODE. I am directed by the Select Committee on the Yorktown Celebration to report back a joint resolution referred to them with a recommendation that it be considered at this time.

The SPEAKER. The title of the joint resolution will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 337) authorizing and requesting the President to extend to the Government and people of France an invitation to join the Government and people of the United States in the observance of the centennial anniversary of the surrender of Lord Cornwallis and the British forces at Yorktown, Virginia.

Mr. GOODE. I ask that that joint resolution be considered at this

The SPEAKER. Under the rules it cannot be considered during this call.

Mr. GOODE. Can it not be by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman later in the day.

Mr. GOODE. I will withhold it for the present.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HASKELL. I ask consent to submit a report from the Committee on Indian Affairs for reference to the Public Calendar. If the Committee on Indian Affairs was called I failed to hear it.

The SPEAKER. It was called distinctly, and the Chair waited for a response but did not hear any. After the call of committees has been concluded the Chair will recognize the gentleman.

The call of committees was then resumed and concluded.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now recognize the gentleman from

OTOE AND MISSOURIA INDIANS,

Mr. HASKELL, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (S. No. 753) to provide for the sale of the remainder of the reservation of the confederated Otoe and Missouria tribes of Indians in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of further considering the funding bill. Pending that motion, I move that all general debate on the bill shall be limited to one hour.

Mr. ROBESON. Pending that motion, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

ELECTORAL COUNT.

Mr. ROBESON. I send to the Clerk's desk a resolution which I ask may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 357) providing for the assembling of the two Houses while the electoral vote is counted.

Resolved. That the two Houses will assemble in the Chamber of the House of Representatives on the second Wednesday of February, 1881, at twelve o'clock, and the President of the Senate shall be the presiding officer; that two persons shall be appointed tellers on the part of the Senate and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to make a list of votes as they shall be declared; that the result shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall announce the state of the vote and the persons elected to the two Houses assembled as aforesaid, which announcement, together with a list of the votes, shall be entered on the Journals of the two Houses.

Mr. ROBESON. We have now passed four appropriation bills before the holiday recess, and I think we will eat our Christmas dinners with easier consciences—

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I raise the question for consideration at this time on that resolution.

Mr. ROBESON. I desire to present the question.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I object to debate, unless it be in

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules that it is a question of privilege, but the question of consideration can be raised upon it.

Mr. ROBESON. I think we will do better if we make the necessary preparations to discharge our constitutional duties before we enter upon the holidays.

The SPEAKER. On the question of consideration, which in fact involves the priority of business, the resolution is not debatable.

Mr. ROBESON. If it is a question of privilege, then it must be

The SPEAKER. The Chair has always ruled, even in a case involving the right of a member to a seat upon this floor, that the question of consideration could be raised upon it.

Mr. ROBESON. Well, sir, I desire to be heard upon the question of consideration. I believe I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules the question of consideration is not deletable.

Mr. ROBESON. Well, here is a resolution similar to the resolutions under which the votes for every President up to Abraham Lincoln were counted by the democratic party. I want to see now if the democrats of this House are willing—

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois, and others. Order! Order!

The SPEAKER. The question of consideration is before the House.

Mr. ROBESON. Consideration with what?

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the resolution presented by the gentleman as a question of privilege, but the gentleman from New York [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD] raises the question of consideration upon it.

Mr. ROBESON. Consideration with what?

The SPEAKER. The question is whether the House will now pro-

The SPEAKER. The question is whether the House will now proceed to consider the resolution.

Mr. ROBESON. Is it a question of consideration whether a privileged question shall be considered before a question not privileged?

The SPEAKER. The majority of the House has always the right to determine the order of its business; the rules give the majority that right. This is merely a question of the priority of business. The gentleman had the right to present his privileged question, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fernando Wood] had the right to raise the question of consideration upon it, which he has done.

Mr. ROBESON. I desire to antagonize every bill until this question of high privilege has been considered.

The House then proceeded to vote upon the question of consideration, but before the result of the vote was announced,

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.
Mr. REAGAN. I desire to move that the resolution be referred to the committee

Mr. ROBESON. That is not in order. When the question of consideration is voted upon, I shall claim the floor.

The SPEAKER. If the House refuses to consider, the Chair will then decide upon the motion indicated by the gentleman from Texas. The question was taken; and there were-yeas 88, nays 96, not vot-

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the funding bill.

Mr. ROBESON. I desire one moment only to ask a parliamentary question. The House having refused to consider this resolution, when does it come up?

The SPEAKER. Whenever the House may be ready by a majority vote to bring it up, or whenever the gentleman introduces it again, the Chair supposes.

Mr. ROBESON. Does this vote reference to the suppose of the control of

Mr. ROBESON. Does this vote refusing to consider the resolution now, as against the funding bill, kill the resolution? Did the gentlemen who voted not to consider, vote against the resolution? That

The SPEAKER. The house has decided practically by the vote just given that it is not ready now to consider the subject. The inference is that the House prefers to go on with the funding bill.

Mr. ROBESON. We know which side of the House is opposed to going on with the electoral count. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. It seems to be a contest between the funding bill.

and the electoral count.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BICKNELL] has charge of the subject of the electoral count, which will come up after the holidays according to the notice he has already

FUNDING BILL.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I now insist on my motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of the funding bill, and pending that motion I move that all general debate be limited to one hour after the consideration of the subject debate be limited to one hour after the consideration of the subject shall be resumed in committee.

Mr. MILLS. This is one of the gravest questions to come before this Congress, and I hope the gentleman will relax a little and let us have a full and free debate on it.

Mr. BUCKNER. I move to amend by saying four hours.

Mr. BLOUNT. Is the motion of the gentleman from New York in and are the force we get into committee.

order now before we get into committee?

The SPEAKER. The committee has already had this subject under consideration, and the motion is in order.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I am willing to modify my motion by

Mr. MILLS. If I cannot get any modification of the motion so we shall have a fair debate on the funding bill, I shall have to move the House adjourn. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, we do not wish to dispose of this question until after the holidays.

Mr. WEAVER. Then we do not need to discuss it until after the holidays.

Mr. MILLS. The venerable gentleman from Pennsylvania wishes to discuss this grave and serious question, and he is not present. We want it discussed before a full House, and a full House is not present

Mr. KEIFER. Does the gentleman from New York intend to press this bill to a final consideration and passage before the holiday adjournment?

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I am glad the gentleman from Ohio has put that question. I believe it is entirely practicable for the House to exhaust the general debate by limiting it to two or three hours, and then to pass the bill or reject it before to-morrow night. My intention is to do so if the House will sustain me.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Does the gentleman from New York know there are not more than two-thirds of the House now present, one-third having gone away?

present, one-third having gone away?

Mr. KEIFER. To day there is barely a quorum present, and tomorrow there will not be a quorum, and it will be quite improper to press this bill through now.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order on the proposition, but the Chair will hear at moderate length gentlemen who desire to make suggestions suggestions.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, when it was agreed by the House to take this question up the supposition was it was for the purpose of disposing of it and not making it an obstruction and a hinderance to action on other important measures now pressed and demanding action. We have agreed between the two Houses to cut out two weeks of this short session, notwithstanding the large amount of important business before it. business before it.

We are told now we cannot do anything for to-day and to-morrow, the only time remaining before the two weeks' vacation begins, because all the members are not here. We have grave questions before us and so far matured that we can act on them if we can only get this House to consent to do the business before it. I hope, therefore, the House will take this funding bill up, put a reasonable limitation upon the general debate, and act on it, so as to afford opportunity npon the general debate, and act on it, so as to afford opportunity for something else to be considered.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. As I have already indicated, I modified my motion to limit the debate to two hours.

Mr. MILLS. Will not a motion as a substitute for that be in order?

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I insist upon being heard upon my motion.

Mr. MILLS. Would it not be in order to move that the subject be laid over until after the holidays, say to the 6th of January next?

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I desire to be heard, Mr. Speaker, for one moment. Now, the condition of this bill is of this character: under the law as it now stands the Secretary of the Treasury is obliged to give three months' notice if he intends to pay the 5 per cent. bonds, which constitute two-thirds of the bonds maturing next cent. bonds, which constitute two-thirds of the bonds maturing next summer. If the House does not pass this bill before the vacation, gentlemen will see it will be utterly impossible for us to take it up gentlemen will see it will be utterly impossible for us to take it up in January, with the great pressure of other bills and important measures, and make any progress in it whatever.

Mr. WEAVER. That would be a great blessing to the country.

Mr. MILLS. The Sesretary can do that after January next.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. He cannot, unless he pays 5 or 6 per cent. interest on bonds instead of three. Now, if gentlemen will absent themselves from the sessions of this House to-day and to-morrow, and thereby prevent a quorum and any further action on this bill, they assume, in my judgment, the gravest official and personal responsibility they ever assumed in their lives.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Why, one-third of the House is absent now.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Why, one-third of the House is absent now.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. If gentlemen assume to leave the House pending the determination of a question of this character, pressing upon our consideration at this time, I hope their constituents will hold them to a just accountability.

Mr. WEAVER. I wish to be heard on the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The fact is debate is not in order.

Mr. MILLS. We have heard a lecture from one side, and now the Chair certainly ought to hear the other.

Mr. WEAVER. The plan of funding this debt, falling due this year and next, has been materially changed since last Congress. It is now sought to adopt a very different plan. They attempt now to force this bill upon the House and force its passage through the House regardless of the short time that is allowed for its consideration. They propose to force the passage of this funding bill, one of to force this bill upon the House and force its passage through the House regardless of the short time that is allowed for its consideration. They propose to force the passage of this funding bill, one of the most important measures that has been presented to the House, between now and the adjournment to-morrow—a day and a half. It cannot be done and receive that proper consideration which its vast importance demands. It is, as I have said, one of the most important bills now pending before Congress. I protest most heartily against this haste. I protest in the name of my constituents, and in the name of the people of the United States; and if there are sufficient members upon this floor who will stand by me—if there are twenty-five men here who will sustain me in my efforts—I will see that it does not pass, and that it is not to be considered now.

Mr. SPARKS. I demand the regular order.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I hope I will have an opportunity to answer the remarks of the gentleman from New York who has made some criticism upon what he supposes to be my position in reference to the funding bill. I think he is laboring under a misapprehension. What we object to on this side is the tardiness with which this important matter has been treated and the time which has elapsed during the long session of this Congress when this bill could have been brought before the House and when it could have received that attention its importance merits. This matter was passed over and neglected during the whole of the last session of Congress. And now it is proposed to take it up and pass it in this short time before the adjournment. What I now complain of is that time sufficient is not granted on a bill of its importance.

Mr. SPARKS. I demand the regular order. it is proposed to take it up and pass it in this short time before the adjournment. What I now complain of is that time sufficient is not granted on a bill of its importance.

Mr. SPARKS. I demand the regular order.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman should have demanded the regular order while the gentleman from New York was on the floor.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say further—

The SPEAKER. The regular order being demanded, the Chair has no option but to recognize the demand.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. A single word Mr. Speaker in reply to Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. A single word, Mr. Speaker, in reply to the gentleman from Ohio.

the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KEIFER. I have not finished my statement, and if the gentleman from New York is permitted to go on with his remarks, I hope I will have an oppertunity of replying. [Cries of "Regular order."]

The SPEAKER. The regular order having been demanded, the question is on limiting debate to two hours upon the funding bill.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. MILLS. If it be in order, Mr. Speaker, I move that the whole subject be postponed until the 6th day of January.

The SPEAKER. That is not now in order, the gentleman from New York having made a previous motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I now renew the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider the funding bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The Chair desires to announce the following The SPEAKER. changes on committees.
The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Sherwin, on the Committee on Education and Labor, in place of Mr. Bar-Mr. Barlow, on the Committee to inquire into the Causes of the present Depression of Labor, in place of Mr. Sherwin.

The SPEAKER. These changes are made by reason of a letter from Mr. Sherwin, in which he states that this understanding has been arrived at between himself and Mr. Barlow.

The House has resolved to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The gentleman from New York, Mr. Covert, will please take the chair.

FUNDING BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. COVERT in the chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 4592) to facilitate the refunding of the national debt.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of privilege.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. KEIFER. I find in the printed copy of the bill which is furnished us—the pending bill—what may be in a certain sense designated a speech attached to it. I want to know if that is in order.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that if there be anything of the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio that it is a proper subject for the consideration of the House if it trenches upon the privileges of the House.

Mr. KEIFER. I only make the suggestion. I waive the question

Mr. KEIFER. I only make the suggestion. I waive the question of privilege.
Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. Chairman, the Wood refunding bill is not new, but has hung over us like a black cloud for nearly a year. On the 10th of May last I spoke at length upon it, but cannot see it pass without adding a further protest. There are most important measures before Congress pressing for immediate consideration, measures that would benefit the whole people. For example, the regulation of railway freight charges now controlled arbitrarily by avarice. As another has stated it: another has stated it:

A dozen or so of railroad magnates, summoned by private message, meet from time to time in one of our great cities. They consult in secret, dine and wine satisfactorily, adjourn and go their several ways. Next morning, the telegraph wires will have flashed across the land their decision that every bushel of grain going to market, every bale of goods passing inland, shall henceforth pay 20 to 30 per cent. more freight than has hitherto been paid. In effect, this bevy of railroad kings has arbitrarily reduced the value of every farm, every quarter section, every bushel of grain, in the great West. If they owned the whole country, and all who live in it, they could not lord it over us more tyrannically.

It is the duty of Congress by just laws to promptly protect inter-state commerce from such unjust and arbitrary impositions. The It is the duty of Congress by just laws to promptly protect interstate commerce from such unjust and arbitrary impositions. The suppression of pleuro-pneumonia, the cattle disease which is to-day damaging foreign markets for our beef and threatening our great cattle interests with wholesale ruin—bills enough have been introduced for that purpose, but we are discussing a proposition to load down our cattle and other interests with perpetual bonds rather than taking steps to protect them. Like Nero, we fiddle while Rome is burning. Wholesale disfranchisement of citizens in Massachusetts and other States calls for prompt action by Congress, and election frauds demand attention. Beside there are over a thousand bills already considered by committees of the House and recommended for action, but all are pushed aside that this bill in the interest of a small class of bankers may be crowded through. It cannot be urged that pay-day is near, for the bonds to be refunded are not due, and only become payable next year at the pleasure of the Government. It is the option to pay that matures, and not the bonds.

The Committee on Ways and Means have materially changed the bill. Every time they have considered it they have reported amendments. Their last is to issue 3 per cent. rather than 3½ per cent. bonds. We would be willing the bill should remain in their hands for a year more, in hopes they would discover by that time the folly of paying any interest and, indeed, the folly of the whole bond scheme.

This bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to borrow the credit of individuals, agreeing that the people shall be taxed for a generation or more to pay interest for that credit. Government, which is another name for the people, holds all the power, wealth, and resources of the nation, issues directly or indirectly all the money, and has a eration or more to pay interest for that credit. Government, which is another name for the people, holds all the power, wealth, and resources of the nation, issues directly or indirectly all the money, and has a thousand-fold more credit than all the citizens whose credit it borrows or proposes to borrow. There is therefore no reason why it should borrow and pay interest for the credit or money of individuals. Why carry coals to Newcastle? Why should the nation borrow from itself? Why ignore its own prerogative and resources? Thomas Jefferson condemned funding as "swindling futurity on a large scale." It is a swindle to unnecessarily tax the many to support the few. It is as undemocratic and unrepublican as a throne and a crown.

Every bond must be paid, principal and interest, by labor. When we sell a bond we sell the labor of our constituents to the purchaser. we sell a bond we sell the labor of our constituents to the purchaser. I am opposed to the sale; I oppose it as I would the slave trade. It is the same thing in principle and in result. You have no right to sell the labor of my constituents to the Vanderbilts. The toilers who pay taxes to support the rich and untaxed will some day discover that they are the victims of a very refined but cruel system of slavery. This bill nominally calls for 3 per cent. interest; but considering that 90 per cent. of the purchase-money may be demanded back in national-bank notes, and the exemption from taxation, these bonds will really be worth three times that to the holders. They can practically be purchased for ten cents on the dollar.

practically be purchased for ten cents on the dollar.

Be it known to the members of this House and to the country that the purpose of this bill and of those who introduce and advocate it is to sell these bonds for ten cents on the dollar; that is what the Government is to get for them, while the people are to pay interest upon their face. The provisions of the bill will make them national-bank bonds. They will be purchased by the banks, deposited with the United States Treasurer, who will keep them safely and return interest regularly, and will refund to these institutions 90 per cent. of the purchase-money in national-bank notes, universally accepted as money, because secured by the credit of the people and made a tender for some debts, and printed and prepared by the Government; and thus are the people to be swindled. I would oppose this bill if it proposed 1 per cent. bonds. It is the principle involved that I oppose. It will overthrow our Government if we do not overthrow it as Jackson did the old United States Bank.

it as Jackson did the old United States Bank.

Away with this slavery of usury, and let this Government commence at this late day to foster and protect labor from the robberies of refunding, and all other schemes that go hand-in-hand with it. Absolute equality is the only standard we will accept. Ours must be a government that protects the weak rather than a government that taxes them for the benefit of the strong.

If there was ever an excuse for issuing and selling bonds there is none now. We are not at war. There is no emergency upon us. The bonds which it is proposed to refund are not payable except at the option of the Government, and can be redeemed within two years

The bonds which it is proposed to refund are not payable except at the option of the Government, and can be redeemed within two years without adding to our circulating medium or oppressing any class of our people. Indeed, without further legislation our surplus revenue, according to present receipts and future estimates, would pay these bonds in six years; but lest even that should be done, the committee propose in this bill to take away from the people the right to pay most of them for a generation to come. The title of this bill should be, a bill to prevent the payment of the Public Debt. Then its object would be patent to all. its object would be patent to all.

its object would be patent to all.

The Secretary of the Treasury has just reported that he has paid in the last fiscal year $2,795,320 premium on bonds purchased before maturity. This bonus of nearly $3,000,000 was taken from the people because of the folly of previous Congresses in issuing bonds that could not be paid at any time. If we now desired to pay the $740,000,000 of four percents recently sold, we would be compelled to pay a premium of $88,000,000 at least. This is a direct loss to the people in addition to the interest; and yet in the face of this the Committee on Ways and Means propose to repeat the blunders and crimes of the past by the issue of $500,000,000 of bonds that cannot be paid for twenty years. Was ever such criminal folly!

In this mad scheme the democratic party of the East and the republican party join hands in harmony, vying with each other in their

In this mad scheme the democratic party of the East and the republican party join hands in harmony, vying with each other in their efforts to serve capital and sell labor. The solid South is forgotten. We do not hear of troops at the polls, nor of rebel brigadiers. These campaign cries are hushed; while upon the supreme question, who shall own the labor of the land, the lion and the lamb lie down together in sweet accord, and the national banker leads them. President Hayes and John Sherman ask for a refunding bill, and Mr. Wood champions the republican scheme. I rejoice to say, many of the western and southern democrats, and I hope republicans, too, will refuse to vote for this swindle. Prior to the late election the people were everywhere assured that it was the purpose of the republican party to pay this debt, and were pointed to the monthly debt statements, which showed an average monthly payment of $8,779,250 for the five months preceding election; but the next statement after election showed a payment of only $3,609,261, not one-half of the previous payments, and the President in his message asks us to repeal the law requiring the coinage of the silver dollar, "which," he says, "in reality is not a dollar."

It has been the standard dollar of this country almost ever since the foundation of the Government, so much so that our gold coins

It has been the standard dollar of this country almost ever since the foundation of the Government, so much so that our gold coins have been reduced in metallic value to correspond thereto. It was until 1849 the only dollar coined. The first gold dollar struck at our mints is only about thirty years old, and yet our simple fathers were all badly fooled. The Forty-fifth Congress, that assured Mr. Hayes by a two-thirds vote over his own veto that this is a dollar, were misby a two-thirds vote over his own veto that this is a dollar, were mistaken. Webster, Wooster, the United States statutes are all wrong. The world is upside down and inside out. This coin is not a dollar according to the bull of our infallible President. And as for the greenback, he says that is only a debt to be paid and retired, Congress and the Supreme Court to the contrary notwithstanding. The national-bank note escapes his criticism. No official of this Government dares criticise that. It is a promise to pay, like the greenback, and, like it, a partial legal tender. But, unlike the greenback, it is issued in the interest of our lords, the national bankers, and designed to extort interest from the many to enrich the few. Hence it is all right; and not only the greenback but the silver dollar must go to make more room for this royal money—the promise to pay of bondholders. Shades of Jackson! Was ever a United States President so shameless in his devotion to bank corporations and so false to the people who have honored him?

honored him?

He further "recommends prompt legislation to complete the funding of the debt which is about to mature"—not to pay it; and here is the bill for that purpose.

These measures, if adopted, would prevent the payment of the published by the property of the payment of the right.

lie debt by depriving us not only of money to pay it, but of the right to pay it, and would largely increase it. They show the utter insin-cerity of the leaders of the republican party when they profess a pur-pose to pay it. For the people before election; for the bankers after election

This bill is the natural outgrowth of the English spirit of caste and snobbery, which is rapidly developing here. The same spirit which we find asking for life-Senators to govern the people, without being responsible to them, demands permanent interest for an aristocracy of fund-holders from our Treasury. This refunding bill would add, as now proposed, over $300,000,000 to the public debt in interest obligations that the state of the state of or fund-holders from our Treasury. This refunding bill would add, as now proposed, over $300,000,000 to the public debt in interest obligations that must be paid before the principal could mature. This effort to perpetuate and increase our bonded debt is an effort to pinch with famine the men that feed the world, to make an Ireland of the Northwest and the South. It is the English system of degrading and enslaving labor adopted here. The English 3 per cent. debt has drawn over $12,000,000,000 from the people in interest.

Farmers of the Northwest, planters of the South, here is the republico-democratic scheme for selling you out. Here is the reward you get for your sectional, bloody-shirt fight. Not only your labor but that of your children is to be sold by a combination of the Eastern democrats and republicans to the capitalists of the country, because they refuse to call in the national bank notes, apply the useless heap of coin in the Treasury, impose a tax upon large income and pay this debt at once. But then the "honor" of the country, we are told, demands that you shall be sold out. "Honest money" (i. e., national-bank money) demands the sacrifice on your part. Wall street financiers and political quacks all insist and now for the sale.

Here is practically the advertisement which the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fernando Wood] and the committee he represents propose this Congress shall put out to the world:

Rothschilds, Vanderbilts, national bankers, and others,

Rothschilds, Vanderbilts, national bankers, and others,
Take notice! Who speaks first!

To be sold at the Treasury! over three hundred million dollars' worth of the future labor of the people of the United States to any syndicate for the use of gold or silver coin or greenbacks or national bank notes!

Government will collect from the people, with the Army and Navy, if necessary, taxes to this amount, and pay in quarterly installments for the next twenty years.

N. B. Ninety per cent. of the purchase-money will be returned upon lawful application in national-bank notes, so called, issued by the Treasury, guaranteed by the credit of the people and a partial legal tender!

My colleague [Mr. PRICE] introduced a bill to abolish the two-cent stamp upon bank-checks, and his argument yesterday was that this tax was a war measure, and therefore should be abolished. This tax was a war measure, and therefore should be abolished. This same argument was used against the income tax which was abolished and against many other taxes that have been repealed. I wish to remind the House that these bonds were a war measure only, and therefore should be abolished. They are the black monument to commemorate, like a horrid nightmare, that fratricidal war; and in the name of peace and unity and brotherly love, in the name of our common country, I demand that they be abolished forever.

The pending substitute for this refunding bill which I had the honor to submit proposes to pay these bonds, not to reissue them: to reduce

The pending substitute for this refunding bill which I had the honor to submit proposes to pay these bonds, not to reissue them; to reduce the interest, not to 3 per cent., with exemptions from taxes and other advantages, but to reduce it to nothing. It proposes to end dangerous monopolies, not to foster them. It restores to the people the highest prerogative of sovereignty, the direct issue of all the money. It divorces the political from the money power. It converts bank-notes into greenbacks, and thus enables us to pay $344,000,000 of these bonds at once, without increasing our currency, without taxation, and without injustice. Section 64 of the national-bank act provides "that Congress may at any time alter, amend, or repeal this act." My bill reimposes the income tax upon large receipts, thus compelling the wealthy to help lift this load. realthy to help lift this load.

If adopted, it would be the second emancipation proclamation to the people from the slavery of usury and the domination of banks. It utilizes most of the idle money in the Treasury and sends it out to bless the country and relieve the great stringency in the money mar-

Such a famine for money exists in our great money center, New York City, that it has recently commanded 100 per cent. interest, and I clip from last evening's paper a statement that some bankers are begging for a new kind of paper money:

Application was made last week to Comptroller Knox by certain New York banks that they be allowed to use assay office receipts as part of their reserve in order to relieve the money market.

In the face of this alarming condition of things we are as indifferent as a Chinese god, and talking about issuing more bonds, instead of paying them off and supplying business with its vital breath—of paying them on and supplying business with the real money.

My bill is drawn in the interest of labor, of business, of the people. It would pay these bonds as follows: with $344,000,000 of greenbacks issued in place of national-bank notes retired; with $150,000,000 of useless coin now hoarded at an expense to tax-payers of over $6,000,000 per annum. The remaining $150,000,000 would be paid from surplus revenues and income taxes in less than two years.

I appeal to members of this House, without regard to party, to sustain my substitute and vote down this scheme to issue 20-40 bonds. I believe the men who lend themselves to this measure will be held to strict account by their outraged constituents.

Mr. Chairman, I oppose this refunding bill because it conflicts with free institutions, because I am unwilling this Government should continue to collect taxes for the support and emolument of private citizens. I oppose it because it subserves the few at the expense of the many, and is a proposition to issue letters of marque against our own many, and is a proposition to issue letters of marque against of whi people. I oppose it because it places a premium upon idleness and a tax upon industry. I oppose it because I am unwilling to see the next generation of toilers mortgaged in advance to the Floods, Vanderbilts, and others. I oppose it because it will build up caste and derbilts, and others. I oppose it because it will build up caste and classes in American society—for every bond is a patent of nobility—and because there is no excuse, no necessity whatever for it. I oppose it because it is designed as a corner-stone to be placed under that fungous outgrowth of war and debt, the national-banking system. I oppose it because I want the ninety-odd millions of interest now extorted annually from the people for bondholders used to build national railroads and ship-canals, to furnish our vast commerce the cheapest possible transportation. I oppose it because I wish to overthrow that combination of bankers and gamblers who now at pleasure create a money famine, and force interest rates to 100 per cent. in New York City and ruin business men. I oppose it because I hear the millions of freemen calling to us to block the wheels of this modern car of Juggernaut in the name of justice and humanity. I oppose the millions of freemen calling to us to block the wheels of this modern car of Juggernaut in the name of justice and humanity. I oppose it because all history raises its warning voice and bids us beware of the quicksands which have ingulfed others. I oppose it because Washington, Jefferson, and other early statesmen warned us over and over against this folly—this danger to our liberties. I oppose it because unless these bonds are paid now and a different policy adopted other wars are likely to afford the excuse for plunging us into hopeless debts. I oppose it because I believe it to be the policy and purpose of the bank party to fund these bonds out of our reach and then insist upon using our surplus revenue to take up and destroy the insist upon using our surplus revenue to take up and destroy the greenback, as urged by the President in his message.

I yield now the remainder of my time to my colleague, [Mr.WEAVER.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has thirty-five minutes of his time left.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman, if it be in order, I would like to reserve my time and speak on another occasion, with the consent of the committee. I am not fully prepared now, and if other gentlemen present are, as I presume they are, I hope I may be permitted to retain the time until some other occasion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has grave doubts whether that privilege can be extended to the gentleman except by unanimous consent.

Mr. WEAVER. I hope unanimous consent will be given.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentlemen from Jowa?

man from Iowa

There was no objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, if there is no one else who desires to address the committee, I move that the committee now rise.

Mr. ATHERTON. Mr. Chairman, as to the last matter determined by the committee in reference to the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Weaver] I wish to ask, can the committee sitting now bind any future committee by its action as to the question of allowing a member the right of the floor?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I think the committee ought not to rise in the temporary absence of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. He will be here in a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. A messenger has been dispatched for the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. In reply to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. ATHERTON,] the Chair will state that he entertains very grave doubts as to the power of the committee now to bind the action of the committee at a subsequent sitting as to debate.

Mr. FINLEY. I do not think the Committee of the Whole can bind the committee hereafter by that sort of arrangement. To obviate

Mr. FINLEY. I do not think the Committee of the Whole can bind the committee hereafter by that sort of arrangement. To obviate any difficulty, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from I owa [Mr. WEAVER] have leave to print his remarks.

Mr. WEAVER. The gentleman is very kind.

Mr. FINLEY. I do not charge anything for the suggestion.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, (having just entered the Hall.) If there is no gentleman present who is ready to continue the general debate, I move that the committee now proceed to the consideration of the hill by sections. bill by sections.

Mr. MILLS. I hope the gentleman from New York will not attempt to force the House at this time to a vote on so important a bill.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I do not intend to permit a few members of the House, less than one-twentieth of its members, to force the House and control this bill. But I am quite willing the House itself shall dispose of it. There are two ways of defeating a measure. One way is to vote it down; another is when those who desire to defeat a measure are not ready, and ask the House to delay action until they are ready. The gentleman from Iowa who held the floor obtained it for one hour. If he is not prepared to occupy his hour, any other gentleman who desires to speak is entitled to the floor, if the Chair recognizes him. But if nobody is ready to continue the general debate, it is my right and my duty to move that we now proceed to the consideration of the bill by sections.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Fernando Wood] need not lecture me about the rights of which I avail myself on this floor; and he ought not to permit his zeal to serve the syndicates and bankers in Wall street to lead him so far as to insult a member on this floor who is asking this House to give a grave and deliberate consideration to a great question, the passage of a bill which amounts to no less than to condemning the generations that are to come after us to the slavery of a perpetual debt to satisfy the godless greed of the men in Wall street, whom the gentleman represents. I stand here to resist it, and notify the gentleman from New York, when he says he does not intend to permit a few gentlemen in this House to control this bill—I tell him he shall not force this measure so long as the Chairman of this House maintains the parliamentary rights I have as a member of this House maintains the parliamentary rights I have as a member of this House. I have some parliamentary rights House before the gentleman shall prostrate this whole House in this House hefore the gentleman shall prostrate this whole House in this House hefore the gentleman shall prostrate this whole House in this House hefore the gentleman shall prostrate this whole House in the shall not force this measure rights on this floor, and I shall exercise every power known to the rules of this House before the gentleman shall prostrate this whole House in submission to the endless demands of Wall street.

submission to the endless demands of Wall street.

I move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. In reply to the gentleman from Texas, I doubt whether anything I have said can be construed by that gentleman or the House into any personal allusion to himself. I had notice served on me by the leader of a very small party in this House that every parliamentary stratagem and right they could possibly command they would make use of to prevent the passage of any funding bill.

Mr. WEAVER. And I now renew that declaration in the presence of the whole House.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Vary wells, if the continuous from Level.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Very well; if the gentleman from Iowa will assume that position openly in the presence of the House for himself and those who act with him, upon their heads rests the responsibility.
Mr. WEAVER.

Mr. WEAVER. Let it come.
Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. But let me say, so far as I am concerned, I am not connected directly or indirectly in the remotest degree with any Wall street brokers or with any selfish interests. I am controlled by a majority of the Committee on Ways and Means, who have reported this bill to the House in pursuance of an imperative public necessity, which compels me, and, in my judgment, compels every member of this House to lay aside every other question in order to reach a conclusion upon this bill.

I am not wedded, Mr. Chairman, to the details of this bill, but I feel the necessity of passing some bill that will enable the Government to maintain its honor and its credit; a bill that will enable the Government to redeem the bonds that mature next summer without in any way dishonoring our creditor impairing that high position we now hold before the nations of the world. I am acting, therefore, in pursuance of what I feel to be our duty and of what is demanded by every consideration of justice and right, when in every way I can I press a speedy conclusion of this question.

I renew my motion that we proceed to the consideration of the bill by sections for amendment.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I cannot imagine why the gentleman from New York desires so strenuously to press his bill at this time.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I have just told the gentleman and the House why I do so.

Mr. BLAND. It is well known that nearly one-half of the members of this House are not here, and no doubt there are gentlemen now absent who desire to be heard on this measure. At the instance of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fernando Wood] this House but a short time ago voted for a two weeks' recess, and members living at a distance from the capital, in order to have a little time to remain at home, have already gone, and there is hardly a quorum present. And now, sir, when there is scarcely a quorum in this House it is not, in my opinion, proper to press an important measure of this sort. Let it go over until after the holidays, until gentlemen have had time to reflect on the subject and investigate, and until a full House can be had to vote on it.

So far as I am concerned, and I think I can speak for many absent members, I believe that this bill looking to the perpetuation of the public debt will not meet the approbation of the people whose representatives are absent. And on behalf of them and of the great body of the tax-payers of this country, who look to the wiping out of the national debt some time, I enter my protest against trying to force this measure through the House when there is scarcely a quorum present to vote on it

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I have not asked that a vote be taken on the bill now. I acquiesce in the action of the House refusing to put a limitation on the debate. I am quite ready to let this debate run on just as long as any member is prepared to speak upon the bill. But in view of the great importance of this question I am not willing to adjourn from day to day during this short session of Congress in order to give gentlemen an opportunity to prepare speeches on this If no man is ready to go on now, I am ready to consider the bill section by section.

I will say further that on the last yea-and-nay vote which we have had there were thirty more than a quorum of members answering to their names. Now, with thirty more than a quorum, for us under the retense of the want of a quorum to refuse to debate this bill is some thing astonishing. I am surprised at the ground taken by gentle-men. While I will not attempt to control the action of any member of this House, because each member is responsible to his own constituents, I feel it to be my duty in season and out of season to impress upon the House the gravity of this question and the imperative necessity of the action of Congress upon it before the 4th day of March next

I desire to say, as a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, that in my judgment the chairman of that commit-tee [Mr. Fernando Wood] has not failed to do his whole duty with tee [Mr. Fernando Wood] has not failed to do his whole duty with regard to the pending bill.

The Secretary of the Treasury in his report, submitted in December, 1879, urged in very strong language the importance of early action in view of the maturing of these bonds in 1880 and 1881. The Committee on Ways and Means prepared a bill and reported it to this House at its last session, and action upon it was urged again and again by the chairman of that committee. Perhaps it was fortunate for the country that action did not then take place, but the chairman of the committee was only carrying out the wishes of the Treasury of the committee was only carrying out the wishes of the Treasury of the committee was only carrying out the wishes of the Treasury of the committee was only carrying out the wishes of the Treasury of the committee was only carrying out the wishes of the Treasury of t man of the committee was only carrying out the wishes of the Treasury Department and the instructions of his committee.

The bill was spoken to by very many members on each side of the House during the last session of Congress. Action was not then taken upon it, and it comes over now to this short session. A bill should be passed by the 1st day of February next. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD] has been urging its consideration almost every day of the present session of Congress.

As the gentleman has said, this is a very important question. There will become due prior to the 1st day of July next $637,000,000 of bonds. To redeem those bonds three months' notice must be given. One-third of those bonds will become due in May next. It is important that this or some similar bill shall pass in order to meet these bonds when they shall become due. those bonds when they shall become due.

We are now here in Committee of the Whole, the whole House has understood that we were to go into Committee of the Whole as soon as possible to consider this bill. We are now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering it. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] speaks very strongly against the passage of this bill. He does not attempt to address the committee upon the merits of the bill. he does not attempt a graph of the bill.

of the bill; he does not arge any argument against its passage. The

Is snow open to debate.

I stand here to say that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means has done his duty and has done nothing less than his duty in regard to this matter, and I am unwilling to hear him found fault with by the House for what he has done. He has represented the wishes of the Government in trying to secure early and definite action upon this subject. We have two days remaining before the holiday recess. Why does the gentleman from Texas criticise the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and the committee itself? If he has any argument to make against this bill, let him

Last year when this bill was reported it fixed the rate of interest on the bonds to be issued under it at 3\frac{1}{4} per cent. per annum. The chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means is now under instructions from his committee to move an amendment reducing that rate of interest from 3½ to 3 per cent., and also to increase the volume of Treasury notes to be issued under the bill from $200,000,000

There never was a time in our history when our credit was what There never was a time in our history when our credit was what it is now. There never has been an hour befere when we could dispose of this large volume of bonds so readily as at the present time. Yet we linger in our action here, although this large volume of maturing bonds is on our hands, with a seeming inability to meet the emergency of the hour. I do not see why men on either side of the House should quarrel with this great fact staring us in the face. We must either take care of these bonds or continue to pay 6 or 5 per cent. interest on them. We will not represent our constituents if we permit this session to close without making some provision for the payment of these bonds.

I am not in favor of this bill in all respects. I think we might well increase the volume of Treasury notes to be issued under the bill from $200,000,000 to $400,000,000. But I am not willing to issue any quantity of bonds greater than $637,000,000, the quantity that will be outstanding after this year's surplus shall have been used for the redemption of those bonds.

We may well congratulate ourselves and the country upon the great progress which we have made during the last year, the great reduction of the national debt, amounting to nearly one hundred millions of dollars, and the increase of our credit so that nobody now doubts our ability to place 3 per cent. bonds, and even 3 per cent. 2-10 Treas ury notes. I was surprised at some of the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. GILLETTE.] I will not stop to answer them now, but if his speech shall appear in the RECORD to-morrow, I will take a few minutes to answer some of the wild and strange declarations made by the gentleman touching the pending bill. He has read his bill; he has not read the bill of the committee.

I rose, however, simply to uphold and sustain the hands of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, who is doing his whole duty and nothing less than his duty in urging action upon this bill.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I do not believe there is any bill which we can consider at this session of Congress more important than the one now under consideration, and I do not believe that there are ways any born of this Heave who would be a present the interior are many members of this House who really desire to prevent legislation upon this subject. We want to legislate, and in my opinion we will legislate upon this matter. We are not bound to wait from day to day for gentlemen who want to speak by the hour. It is their duty to be here and to avail themselves of the disposition manifested by the House to-day to give them the opportunity under the rules to speak upon this bill, and to speak by the hour if they desire so to do. The consideration of this bill should not be procrastinated because such gentlemen absent themselves. If they are not here it is their own fault; and public business should not be delayed in consequence. It is desirable that we should proceed to consider this bill under the five-minute rule.

There are many provisions in the bill, as reported and printed, to which I cannot give my support. I agree with the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Dunnell] in the suggestion that if we are to have what I might denominate a call-bond running from two to ten years, we can make such loan in larger amount than this bill proposes. It will be observed the Secretary of the Treasury states in his last report that during the next ten years as he believes there can be and should be taken up $520,000,000 of public indebtedness to go to the credit of the sinking fund. I would like to see the difference of opinion as to this character of legislation between the East and the West reconciled as far as possible. I would like to see an agreement that the larger part of the indebtedness falling due next July shall be met by a call loan running from two to ten years. The figures given by the Secretary of the Treasury show that the amount which should be placed to tary of the Treasury show that the amount which should be placed to the credit of the sinking fund varies from $40,000,000 to $60,000,000 yearly from 1882 to 1891, inclusive. We could provide in this bill that the first year $40,000,000 should be paid to the credit of the sinking fund; the second year $45,000,000; the next three years $50,000,000 annually; the next three years $55,000,000 annually; and the last two years $60,000,000 annually. We would in this way get clear of an existing objection on the part of some to a long bond. If the Secretary of the Treasury can handle, as I do not doubt he can, $520,000,000 or thereabout of these call-bonds, then there will remain but $100,000,000 to be placed as a permanent loan at 3 per cent.

but $100,000,000 to be placed as a permanent loan at 3 per cent.

I think, myself, from examination, that $600,000,000 in the aggregate will be a sufficient amount for us to provide for by legislation. gate will be a sufficient amount for us to provide for by legislation. There is to be paid on the 31st of December, 1820, $13,414,000 on account of the loan of February, 1861; and the Secretary of the Treasury states he has the money to meet that requirement. In July next there will be redeemable in the aggregate $672,224,800 of bonds.

Mr. HATCH. Will the gentleman be kind enough to state to the House what portion of that $672,000,000 is due or payable at that time, and what portion is redeemable at the pleasure of the Government.

ment?
Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) It is practically all in one shape. It is redeemable then or at any time thereafter, at the pleasure of the Government. The Secretary of the Treasury tells us that from money now in the Treasury he can pay $50,000,000 of the amount, thus reducing the aggregate amount to $622,224,800 that we must provide for by legislation. I believe it will be found, after a careful examination of the resources of the Treasury, that we can go further and pay to the extent of $72,224,800, and that we need not provide for more than an issue of $620,000,000, to include both the proposed call Treasury an issue of $600,000,000, to include both the proposed call Treasury notes and bonds, both at 3 per cent. per annum.

In this bill I would like to provide, if possible, as an auxiliary to this legislation, that the national banks shall be compelled to deposit entirely in 3 per cent. bonds the amount required by them to be deposited in the Treasury as a protection for the holders of their circulation. I am not quite sure whether such a provision would interfere with a seeming contract with the banks. I am not quite certain whether we have the power by a law to change the requirement as to whether we have the power by a law to change the requirement as to the form of the securities to be placed by the banks in the Treasury as a protection to the note-holders and indicate a particular bond at a particular rate of interest. If upon examination it be found that we possess this power, then I would like so to legislate that the entire $359,000,000 of bonds held by the Treasury of the United States as security for the circulation of the banks shall be exclusively in the 3 per cent. indebtedness now to be issued. Thus we would make an immediate market for those bonds to the extent of $359,000,000 from that source. The Secretary of the Treasury tells us that of the bonds falling due on the 1st of July next $200,000,000 are held by the banks. As to this amount, there would be no difficulty; but I would prefer to go further and say to the banks, "We propose now by legislation to change the character of the guarantee which the people have in the deposit of bonds for the national-bank circulation; and instead of depositing 6 per cent., 5 per cent., 4½ per cent., and 4 per cent. bonds, you shall make your entire deposit in three percents." Should the banks accept this condition, they could with much more equity come forward and ask a reduction in the amount of taxation on their circulation. circulation.

Mr. HISCOCK. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?
Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Certainly.
Mr. HISCOCK. What would be the result in the event that the banks refused to accept that condition?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I have observed that the banks study, as other people do, their interests, and I believe that it will be the interest of the banks to have this deposit of bonds for the protection of the note-holder placed permanently in the form of bonds bearing 3 per cent. interest. I think I speak for the banks of Philadelphia when I say that they would be willing to promote as far as they can under the law this form of deposit.

Mr. BUCKNER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania suppose that the banks would be willing to take these three percents in lieu of the four-and-a-half or four percents that they now hold?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I think that they will. As to $200,000,000 of the bonds falling due in May and July, 1881, and at present held by the banks, they naturally would, and as to other bonds hearing a higher rate of interest. Thus we would immediately make a market for our 3 per cent, bonds. The banks would at once make a market for our 3 per cent. bonds. The banks would immediately make a market for our 3 per cent. bonds. The banks would at once become large purchasers, and other capitalists would follow their example. The entire amount of the indebtedness of the United States held by the national banks, State banks, savings-banks, and private bankers can be stated at more than $630,000,000.

held by the national banks, State banks, savings-banks, and private bankers can be stated at more than $630,000,000.

Mr. EINSTEIN. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion in support of his argument?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Spenker.) Cheerfully.

Mr. EINSTEIN. In my opinion it is more to the interest of the national banks to deposit 3 per cent. bonds as security for their circulation than to deposit higher-priced bonds—4 per cent., 4½ per cent., or 5 per cent. bonds—which sell at a much higher premium. In other words, they will in this way have to deposit less security for their circulation than if they are required to deposit less security for their circulation than if they are required to deposit higher-priced bonds selling at a higher premium in the market.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The gentleman from New York [Mr. EINSTEIN] well states it. As I said a moment ago, the banks will naturally, as fast as they can, dispose of bonds for the purpose of deposit on circulation, bearing the higher rate of interest at whatever premium they will command in the market, parting with them at different periods so as not to depress the principal value of those bonds. It is, I deem, the best policy to be pursued by this Congress to pass such a refunding bill as will provide an auxiliary power in behalf of the Government to place the new indebtedness so as to make it the interest of the banks to buy these 3 per cent. bonds.

As I was going on to say when interrupted, there is now held by the national banks, state banks, savings-banks, and private bankers more than $630,000,000 of the public debt. It is so invested by them.

As I was going on to say when interrupted, there is now held by the national banks, state banks, savings-banks, and private bankers more than $630,000,000 of the public debt. It is so invested by them for security as the safest place in which to deposit it beyond all the contingencies of trade and commerce, and I believe the banks of the country, just as they did at the beginning of the war, will promptly come forward and secure for these 3 per cent. bonds, an early taking, country, just as they did at the beginning of the war, will promptly come forward and secure for these 3 per cent. bonds, an early taking, so far as they are able.

There is one further remark I desire to make. In my judgment there is no earthly reason why the United States should not borrow money at as low a rate of interest as any other of the civilized nations. We have the ability, which is an important fact for the investor to know, and we have the disposition to meet principal and interest of our debt. England borrows money at 3 per cent., and is now trying to reduce the rate of interest to 2½ per cent.; and yet England confessedly never expects to pay the principal of her public debt, and has sometimes a struggle to meet the interest upon it. Holland borrows money at less than 3 per cent., a fact which I think the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Fernando Wood,] chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, will corroborate. There is therefore no good reason why United States securities should not have a superior credit to those of any other nation, or why United States bonds should not stand at the head of all governmental securities. What we ought to do concerning the previsions of a refunding bill at this time is precisely what any good business man would do in the management of his own affairs, that is, borrow money in manner where we can borrow it at the lowest rate of interest.

I come now to touch another point. I find in this bill a re-enactment of various laws in connection with the past funding of the public debt, laws passed under totally different condition of things, and in reference to which there has been, to my mind, some abuse. If there is in any of these laws which are proposed by this measure to be re-enacted and given fresh force and effect anything which provides for the payment of a commission for the disposal of these new bonds which are to be issued, then I for one want to know it. We ought to the payment of a commission for the disposal of these new bonds which are to be issued, then I for one want to know it. We ought to know before we are called upon to vote upon the proposition whether the re-enactment of any of the laws alluded to renews the payment of any such commission.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. With the permission of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I will say that the general clause in the first section of the bill reported by the committee provides that the regulation of the details under which the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to have printed and to dispose of the bonds authorized by the act of 1861 shall apply to these new issues. In those laws there was a provision that the Secretary should be allowed † per cent, which included the cost of the preparation of the bonds as well as the commission to be paid to syndicates and others through whom he negotiated the sale of the bonds. In this bill we make one-fourth of 1 per cent. as the amount allowed to the Secretary for the disposal of the bonds, which does not include the cost of the preparation of the of the bonds, which does not include the cost of the preparation of the bonds themselves.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I do not believe in re-enacting any such law. I do not see any propriety or any necessity on the part of the United States Government paying any commission. Let the purchaser pay the broker commission.

Mr. CLAFLIN. The Secretary claims the cost of engraving and printing will amount to one-fourth of 1 per cent.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Then let us realize that it is for engraving and printing, and appropriate for that object; but do not provide for the payment of any commission. I believe the payment of commissions by the Government has led to a large and unnecessary expense.

of commissions by the Government has led to a large and unnecessary expense.

There is another feature in reference to which I should like to make an inquiry of the gentleman from New York, and that is, whether in any law which it is proposed by this bill to re-enact there is any provision for the double payment of interest in any case?

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. This bill guards and protects the Treasury in that regard. The practical operation of it, if it should become a law, would be that the holder of 5 or 6 per cent. bonds, if he chooses to surrender them before the maturity of the bonds and take 3 per cent. bonds in exchange for them, that then the difference of interest between the bonds shall be adjusted so as to make it exactly equal; in other words, that the purchaser of the new bond shall not acquire any double or additional interest beyond the legitimate interest due upon the bond which he relinquishes. That I understand to be the operation of the provision contained in this bill in that regard.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I have never been able to find out from the Treasury Department the amount of money paid in the way of double interest. There was during 1879 refunded about $740,000,000 of the debt of the United States. I learn from a report of the Bureau of Statistics of the Treasury Department, and issued under the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury, that in 1879 there were $83,773,778.50 of money due to bondholders according to the rate of interest on the face of the bonds, and yet on a prior page of that same report I find there was actually paid on account of interest during that same year $105,327,949. The difference is $21,554,170.50. I can account for a part of this difference. I find there is not included, the amount of interest paid on account of Pacific railroad bonds, which is $3,800,000, or thereabout. I do not know what amount of commission was paid on the $740,000,000 exchanged or redeemed during the said year; but at one half of 1 per cent., the highest commission allowed is $3,500,000, or thereabout. I do not know what amount or commission was paid on the $740,000,000 exchanged or redeemed during the said year; but at one-half of 1 per cent., the highest commission allowed by law, it would only be $3,700,000, and the two together would make $7,500,000, or thereabout.

There is still an amount of over $14,000,000 that I cannot account for in any other way than as having been paid out on double-interest account during that year. This is a large sum. Perhaps the gentleman from New York can tell me what amount of interest was paid in 1879 under the head of double interest.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. No; I cannot answer that question. I am not informed as to the exact amount. I have been trying to get am not informed as to the exact amount. I have been trying to get the information from the Department.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) This, Mr. Chairman, is a matter connected with the formation and passage of this bill which should be looked to in the most careful manner; and we should provide in some way absolutely that there shall not be any payment of deable interest. The interest should cease upon one bond as soon as another bond is issued to replace it.

I have been induced to make these remarks not in the light of criticism upon the bill, but simply in a way suggestive to the Committee on Ways and Means, in order that they may proceed to make such investigations into the subject to which I have directed their attention as will make this bill in accord with the necessities of the Governtion as will make this bill in accord with the necessities of the Government, and satisfactory so as to secure a favorable public judgment. I want, Mr. Chairman, to facilitate the Government in its refunding operations in every possible way. There is not, as far as I believe, and as far as I have been able to learn, any considerable number of members of this House who do not want every necessary legislation enacted to meet these bonds in July, and we shall fail in our duty if we onit providing a satisfactory manner of meeting them. enacted to meet these bonds in July, and we shall fall in our duty it we omit providing a satisfactory manner of meeting them. In that connection I want to say to the gentleman from New York that the three months' notice required, and of which he spoke, does not arrive until the 1st of April.

Mr. DUNNELL. Let me correct the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The great body of these bonds becomes due on the 1st of May—$468,000,000 of them, or about two-thirds of the whole debt, become due on the 1st of May, as is shown by the report of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) They are not actually due at that time, because there is the power of option which exists so that the bonds may run for a longer period.

I thought the Secretary of the Treasury indicated the 1st day of July as the day on which these payments would be made.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Certainly.

Mr. WARNER. These bonds that mature on the 1st of May or the 30th of June, or rather become redeemable at the option of the Government at these dates, become then redeemable, as I understand the law, according to the terms of the bond, and it is not in that case necessary to give the three months' notice.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I think the gentleman is entirely mistaken. The last clause of the third section of the act of 1870 makes taken. The last clause of the third section of the act of 1870 makes it the duty of the Secretary to give three months' notice before option arrives that interest upon the bond shall cease.

Mr. SPARKS. That is the option bond?

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. All of these are option bonds. The 5 and 6 per cent, bonds are option bonds, the Government having the option to continue them for a longer period.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) There is another matter in connection with the past issue of bonds and their sale that I think should be a subject of careful inquiry and be guarded against in some way in framing this bill, and that is in reference to the time allowed for the exchange or sale of the bonds and the manner in which the brokers or the syndicate obtained control of them for disposition. I am advised by gentlemen whom I believe to understand all the details of the transaction, that between the time when the Government placed the $740,000,000 of bonds sold in 1879 in the hands of the syndicates and bankers for sale and the time that the Government had the right to compel payment in money by the syndicates and bankers, the syndicates and bankers so manipulated them that there was a large predicates and bankers to manipulated them that there was a large predicates and bankers to manipulated them that there was a large predicates and bankers to manipulated them that there was a large predicates and bankers to manipulated them that there was a large predicates and bankers to manipulated them that there was a large predicates and bankers to manipulated them that there was a large predicates and bankers to manipulated them that there was a large predicates and bankers to manipulated them that there was a large predicates and bankers to manipulated them that there was a large predicates and bankers to manipulated them that there was a large predicates and bankers to manipulated them that there was a large predicates and bankers to manipulated them that there was a large predicates and bankers to manipulated them that the graph that the dicates and bankers so manipulated them that there was a large premium which fell to the syndicates and bankers by the increased value of the bond in the intervening time. I will illustrate: We handed to the syndicates or bankers, or anybody buying the bonds, bonds. The interest on the old bond kept on, and in the mean time, before the United States Government had the power to call upon those parties taking the new bonds for the money, the new bonds had largely increased in value and commanded a premium in the market. This premium was not a source of profit to the Government, but was, as I am informed, a large source of profit to the syndicate and bankers. I would like if possible in the handling of these bonds, if the Secretary of the Treasury had the power under the proposed law to enable him, as the bonds gradually increased in value in the markets above par, in some way to reap the benefit of this premium for the Government of the United States, and not let such advantage or profit go to parties purchasing our bonds. ties purchasing our bonds.

A MEMBER. The bonds to which the gentleman refers were sold

Mr. Manual.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) They were technically sold, I know, at the time the Government lost possession of them, yet the bankers were not required to pay the Government until a time when in fact a large premium accrued, and the Government derived no benefit from the increased value of her own indebtedness.

In conclusion let me say that in this bill I want to provide against, first, the payment of any commissions to banks, brokers, or syndicates; second, double interest, and, third, to so retain the control of the funding operations that if there is any premium it may be received by the Government and go to the benefit of the great body of the tax-payers and not to the bankers.

These are mere suggestions, and I throw them out simply because when this bill comes up if these matters are properly attended to the interests of the Government will be better protected than they have interests of the Government will be better protected than they have been under any former law which has been enacted for the funding of our public debt. We ought to know exactly what we are doing by the re-enactment of laws in the manner proposed in this bill.

Mr. ATHERTON. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question? I have listened with interest to the discussion upon this subject. My question is this: What is the shortest possible time that we can have these bonds run and still provide this lowest rate of interest? In other words, how short a bond can we make and have it negotiated at par in the markets?

megotiated at par in the markets?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) If I understand the Secretary of the Treasury, and I have no doubt that that officer has conferred with the moneyed interests of the country, he can negotiate a 2 10 with the moneyed interests of the country, he can negotiate a 2 10 bond to the extent of $400,000,000 of Treasury notes at par. He does not distinctly favor a 3 per cent. bond for the balance of indebtedness to be redeemed on May 1 and June 30 next. I think he might be able to go further and place the 2-10 Treasury notes to the extent which he states as the requirement according to law for the sinking fund, which is $520,000,000 during the next ten years.

Mr. ATHERTON. Is there no reason that can be given, then, why

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The reason I think so is, because our bonds, in my opinion, at 3 per cent. are the best governmental securities in the money markets of the world.

Mr. ATHERTON. The gentleman did not permit me to finish my question. It is this: If shorter bonds can be negotiated at par is there any reason why a twenty-year bond should be issued at all?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) If I did not thereby weaken the principal value of the bond and did not increase the rate of interest on the bond, they I would prefer to run the bond for a short time and principal value of the bond and did not increase the rate of interest on the bond, then I would prefer to run the bond for a short time and at the option of the Government.

Mr. ATHERTON. That is the exact point.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) But then we have in our past history been led to believe that the banking men of the country do not want to take bonds made payable at short periods; that the longer you want to take bonds made payable at short periods; make the bond run the steadier and more desirable you make the investment to the man who has money to lend; and consequently the value of the principal of the bond is increased when the time is lengthened. The 4½ per cent. bonds now sell for less than the 4 per cent. bonds, because the latter have from their first issue thirty years cent. bonds, because the latter have from their first issue thirty years to run, while the former have but fifteen years from their first issue. Mr. WARNER. I desire to call the attention of the House simply to one point. The bonds we are to provide for are redeemable some on the 1st May and some on the 30th June next, but are not payable except at the pleasure of the Government at that date, but may run on indefinitely. Therefore there is no obligation resting upon the Government to provide for the payment of bonds absolutely. The whole question, then, is one of reduction of interest; and I should be willing myself to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue and sell at once all the bonds he can, $200,000,000, $400,000,000, or $600,000,000, enough to fund this whole debt, if he can sel a 3per cent. or a 3pper cent. 2-10 bond; the whole idea being to allow him to reduce the interest as far as possible, reserving the option of the Government to pay at par and to apply the surplus revenue of the Government to the payment of the principal of the debt. I think such a bill could be passed almost any time. I concur with the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania in that.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

Here the committee informally rose, and Mr. HILL took the chair

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Burch its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 1928) to provide for remitting the duties on the objects of art awarded by the Berlin International Fish Commission to Professor Spencer F. Baird.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 1760) amending section 1852 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

A bill (H. R. No. 6539) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to change the name of the yacht Stephen D. Barnes, of Philadelphia.

A bill (H. R. No. 6593) to provide a standard pedestal to the monument erected in honor of the late Admiral Farragutin Washington City.

FUNDING BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] desired to ask me a question.

Mr. WEAVER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has just stated that the capitalist prefers a long bond.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I said that is the history of the past.

Mr. WEAVER. That is the history of the past, and certainly it is the condition of the present. Now the Secretary of the Treasury asks, not to be allowed to issue short bonds, but, as an alternative propesition, that he be allowed to issue twenty-year bonds or 2-10 bonds in his discretion. His discretion will be controlled by the hidders for his discretion. His discretion will be controlled by the bidders for these bonds. He cannot compel any man to take the short bond. He has a discretion. A combination of capital would compel him to issue has a discretion. A combination of capital would compel him to issue the twenty-year bonds in evitably. I am opposed to clothing the Secretary of the Treasury with any more discretion than he has now. His discretion has invariably been used and exercised against the people and in favor of the bondholders and capitalists.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I agree with the gentleman from Iowa that we ought not to give too much discretion to the Secretary of the Treasury, and that is the reason I objected to this sweeping re-enactment of old laws in connection with the future funding of the debt.

Mr. WEAVER. One more point. Some of us have insisted this

Mr. WEAVER. One more point. Some of us have insisted this bill should not be brought to a vote. Between this and to-morrow bill should not be brought to a vote. Between this and to-morrow there is not enough time for members to examine these sweeping enactments. All we ask is that this should be postponed until after the holidays, when we will have had time to reflect, and the House will be able to act intelligently.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The difficulty about the position of the gentleman from Iowa I think is, that he is not willing to do anything that looks to a permanent debt, or the further exchange of any bond which continues even the present aggregate of the public debt. The truth is we have this debt on our hands, and if we have not the money to pay it off absolutely now, we have to provide for it by new loans in some way. Therefore the gentleman's position is not a practical one, nor does he present a business-like argument that would be applicable to the business either of an individual, a firm, a would be applicable to the business either of an individual, a firm, a corporation, or a government.

Mr. WEAVER. I cannot understand why it is not.

Mr. DUNNELL. I would like to interrupt the gentleman from

Mr. DUNNELL. I would like to interrupt the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEAVER. I will yield.

Mr. DUNNELL. The gentleman says the Secretary of the Treasury has recommended an alternative proposition providing for the issue of bonds or of Treasury notes.

Mr. WEAVER. Yes, sir.

Mr. DUNNELL. The gentleman is mistaken. The Secretary recommends the issue of bonds and Treasury notes; there is no alternative in the proposition.

Mr. WEAVER. The Secretary is not confined to the one or the other.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) He recommends an issue of call Treasury notes to any amount not exceeding $400,000,000, and he must issue bonds for the remainder of the debt due not placed under call Treasury-note proposition.

Mr. DUNNELL. The statement of the gentleman leaves the impression that the Secretary might issue the whole amount in Treasury notes.

Mr. WEAVER. Not at all; the Secretary is clothed with discretion. Now I wish to reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.] He is quite right when he says that I am opposed to any permanent debt. I am, and the gentleman himself would be if he was following in the footsteps of Thomas Jefferson. What I am opposed to is this: the funding of any portion of the public debt beyond the power of the Government to pay it when it pleases. That is my position. In reply to the criticism of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that my argument is not business-like, I wish to say that it is business-like at all times for either individuals or nations to pay their debts when within their power.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) But you would issue a note without interest to pass from hand to hand. In other words, you would increase the aggregate of the circulation of the country to meet these bonds, and if you do that you will produce inflation and depreciate values of every description.

Mr. WEAVER. The only difficulty with the gentleman is this: he does not understand the doctrines of the greenback party. [Laughter.]

ter.]
Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I was in favor of greenbacks before

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I was in favor of greenbacks before the gentleman was.

Mr. WEAVER. Yes; I was like Saul of Tarsus, persecuting the saints at the time the gentleman was, like Judas, serving with the Apostles. I am not now in that condition. The resolution which I had so hard a time to get before the House at the last session [laughter] proposed to pay the public debt according to the contract, and in no other way. The greenback party does not propose, nor do I propose, to pay this debt in notes that do not draw interest, unless the holder of the bond desires to take such notes. What we propose is not to fund the debt beyond the power of the Government to pay it.

Mr. ATHERTON. Let me ask the gentleman's proposition: not to fund the debt at all, under any circumstances? Is that not the argument made by his colleague only a few moments ago?

Mr. WEAVER. I am not bound by the argument of my colleague, and yet if I understood his remarks correctly I indorse them most fully. This is the position of my colleague and of myself: the only bonds which the Government now has the right to pay, or will have after the 1st of July next, amount to about $700,000,000.

Now the party which I have the honor to represent is opposed to taking away from the Government the option of paying the only bonds to which that option now applies. We want to pay those bonds, we want to provide for their payment. We do not want to pay them in greenbacks, either, unless the holder is willing to take them. We are opposed to refunding because the Government has the right and the power to pay, and I greatly mistake the tone of public opinion if the people are not with us.

power to pay, and I greatly mistake the tone of public opinion if the people are not with us.

Mr. BUCKNER. Pay them in silver.

Mr. WEAVER. Yes; the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER]

Mr. WEAVER. Yes; the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] smiles at the idea of paying them in silver.

Mr. MORSE. At eighty-three cents on the dollar.

Mr. BUCKNER. No; I am in favor of it.

Mr. WEAVER. The gentleman says he is in favor of it. I am very glad to hear it. There is something very curious about this proposition to pay the debt. Not one gentleman who has debated this question refers to the hoard of silver on hand in the Treasury which can be need for this purpose.

mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Nor to the hoard of gold there.

Mr. WEAVER. Nor to the hoard of gold there, as very properly suggested by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. CANNON.] That silver can certainly be paid out without endangering resumption; it is not held there to maintain resumption

I will never vote for any funding bill which excludes the right of the Government to pay these bonds at any time we have the money; nor will I support any measure that takes from the Government the right to pay these bonds, according to the contract, in standard silver dollars of 412½ grains. It is very marvelous that the leading democrats of the East are found to be in full accord with the republican party of this country when it comes to the consideration of the questions of the end of the great contract operation of the questions.

tion of finance and other great economic questions.

Mr. FINLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, if it will not interrupt him. I understood the gentleman to say that he will not interrupt him. I understood the gentleman to say that he was not in favor of paying the debt in paper except it draws interest, or words to that effect.

Mr. WEAVER. I cannot understand the gentleman distinctly.

Mr. FINLEY. In short, I understood the gentleman to say that he was in favor of paying the debt in greenbacks. Now, the inquiry I want to make is, whether the gentleman did not at the last session of Congress declare from his place in this House that he was in favor of paying this debt according to the contract, and that the contract permitted its payment in greenbacks?

Mr. WEAVER. No, Mr. Chairman. The gentleman knows nothing about either my declarations in this House or the doctrines of the party to which I belong if he claims anything of that kind.

Mr. FINLEY. I do not pretend to know anything about the gentleman's doctrines; I only asked whether the gentleman did not say that last session.

Mr. WEAVER. I have no doubt the gentleman made his canvass upon that error, that blunder, and that is the reason of the lack of upon that error, that blunder, and that is the reason of the lack of success in his part of the country. [Laughter.]

Mr. FINLEY. I did not hear the remark.

Mr. CLAFLIN. How about the result in your part of the country?

Mr. WEAVER. The success of my party in my part of the country was very marked. The district which I have the honor to represent is only counted republican by seven majority, and they had to put in one hundred and fifty illegal votes to count it that way. There was a republican majority of four thousand when I ran two years ago, and the district remains reliably anti-republican to-day.

Mr. KEIFER. I suppose the gentleman does not want to do him-

Mr. KEIFER. I suppose the gentleman does not want to do him-self injustice. The remark which was made here playfully was un-derstood to refer to the whole party that the gentleman represented self injustice. The remark which was made here playfully was understood to refer to the whole party that the gentleman represented in the recent canvass.

Mr. WEAVER. Then I will enlarge my remarks to the area of the country. The party which I had the honor to represent in the late campaign polled nearly 400 per cent. of an increase over the vote polled in 1876. At the same ratio of increase, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Keifer] will be a loud-mouthed fiatist in four years from now. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I want to direct the attention of the gentleman from Iowa to an enactment made by Congress before the democrats came into possession of this House—the law known as the "act to strengthen the public credit," by which gold was made the medium of paying the bonds.

Mr. WEAVER. Yes, sir; and the democratic party voted against it. Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The reason I said in the early part of my remarks to-day that I thought the Government could pay $72,000,000 of this indebtedness out of the funds in the Treasury was because I find the amount of gold coin in the Treasury is more than $69,000,000, and of bullion more than $55,000,000. In my opinion the Government should at once begin to coin that bullion at the rate, say, of $10,000,000 a month, and by so doing be able to pay out that addition of gold coin. At the same time I would not reduce the amount of money in the Treasury of the Government to such an extent as to endanger the continuance of specie payments. I would not diminish the aggregate amount of money to such an extent as to impair the ability of the Government to continue resumption in spite of any distress in the money market or any financial crash that might happen.

Mr. SAMFORD. What extent would that be?

ability of the Government to continue resumption in spite of any distress in the money market or any financial crash that might happen. Mr. SAMFORD. What extent would that be?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I think it would not be necessary to hold for this purpose anything like the amount now in the Treasury. Mr. SAMFORD. Has the gentleman any well-defined idea as to the amount that would be necessary?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I have only an opinion to express on that subject. The amount of assets in the Treasury, as I understand, is more than $260,000,000. If I were transacting the business of the Treasury I would not like to reduce its assets below $160,000,000 to $170,000,000, in manner as at present accumulated.

Mr. SPARKS. Can we not pay out 50 per cent. of the surplus?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I have examined that subject as a business man, and I believe that the Government can, between now and the 1st of July, pay out of the Treasury $72,000,000 on account of the bonded indebtedness we mean to meet in July. I think we can safely go to that extent, and that we would still leave the Government in a position strong enough to meet any draught that might ernment in a position strong enough to meet any draught that might arise from any panic or crisis.

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman will allow me to call his attention to the fact that of this $260,000,000 of coin less than $150,000,000 belongs to the Government.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) One hundred and forty-four million dollars is the amount.

Mr. CLAFLIN. One hundred and forty-three million dollars of gold, $12,000,000 of silver, and about $24,000,000 of fractional currency.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Over forty-seven million of silver dollars, I believe.

dollars, I believe.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I will ask my friend from Pennsylvania this question: In view of the money now in the Treasury, together with the present income of the Government and its expenditures, what length of time would be required to meet the debt which will fall due between now and July, 1881, if no law be passed at all?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I say that with the amount now in the Treasury, and the surplus constantly accumulating, to which the Secretary of the Treasury directs attention, and which he estimates at $40,000,000, over and above an excess of the $50,000,000 which he proposes to use, the Government can pay $72,000,000 of this indebtedness in ready cash, leaving as the amount of indebtedness to be met on the 1st of July, 1881, only $600,000,000, and I believe that of this amount possibly $500,000,000, certainly $400,000,000, can be placed in these 2-10 bonds, and the balance, whatever it may be, can be put into a permanent loan with proper option at 3 per cent.

can be put into a permanent loan with proper option at 3 per cent.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. How long will it require, without any law being passed, to extinguish the whole of the bonds falling due in 1881 at the present rate of income on the part of the Government?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) If the increase during the fiscal year of 1879 from about $130,000,000 to $186,000,000 in 1880 in receipts from customs, and the increase in internal revenue receipts of $12,000,000 in 1880 over 1879 be continued, then it resolves itself into a simple question of mathematics which the gentleman can work out for himself. It would be about $90,000,000 each year.

Mr. GILLETTE. It would take about six years at that rate to pay

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Amounting to $90,000,000 a year, it would be as $90,000,000 is to the entire debt, and the quotient would be the number of years it would take to extinguish that debt.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Would not that be cheaper than to issue a bond running forty years at 3 or 4 per cent.?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) There is no well-informed person who proposes to issue a bond at any greater rate of interest than 3

Mr. WEAVER. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the point where he refers me to the vote of the democratic party when the public-credit act was passed.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I did not refer to the vote, but to the act itself.

Mr. WEAVER. Not the vote, but the act itself. The act itself does not say gold. It says payment of the public obligations in coin or its equivalent.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) The gentleman and I do not disagree about that.

Mr. WEAVER. I hear some gentlemen dispute what I say; but I am correct, having referred to the act itself, and it does say coin or its equivalent. That was the credit strengthening act of March, 1869. That act was voted against solidly by the democratic party in Congress, because the democratic party had just carried on a campaign in 1868 under the declaration that the bonds should be paid in green-

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I think the gentleman is mistaken about that. The democrats of the House voted against it upon the ground that it changed the contract then existing and gave a better contract, one of more value to the holders of the bonds.

Mr. ROBESON. Will the Speaker allow me to ask one question?
Mr. REAGAN. The democratic party of 1868 substantially declared that the debt should be paid in lawful money where not required by law to be paid in coin, and that was responded to by the act of 1869 that the whole debt should be paid in coin—should be paid in gold.

Mr. WEAVER. I beg pardon of the gentleman from Texas. It does not say that it shall be paid in gold, but that it shall be paid in does not say that it shall be paid in gold, but that it shall be paid in coin or its equivalent.

Mr. ROBESON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. WEAVER. That is the language of the act of 1869. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is mistaken as to the position of the democratic party in 1868. He will not deny that the democratic party made its canvass in 1868 on the principle that the bonds should be paid in greenbacks. I hold here in my hand before the House one of the democratic flags printed in the Cincinnati Enquirer office in 1868, when Horatio Seymour was the candidate of the democratic party for President. [Laughter on the republican side.] I will read the legend on that flag, [Laughter and cries of "Read."] This is the banner which the gentleman from Pennsylvania marched under in 1868. in 1868.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) And he has been marching ever since. [Laughter.]

Mr. WEAVER. Yes; he has been marching ever since, and has marched clear out from under this banner. Mr. Chairman, I demand

Mr. BLAND. Where was the gentleman from Iowa himself in

Mr. ROBESON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania

Mr. ROBESON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania this question—
Mr. WEAVER. Where was I in 1868?
Mr. BLAND. Yes; where was the gentleman from Iowa in 1868?
The gentleman in 1868 supported the party which voted for that act. Mr. WEAVER. I know that; but about the time I got converted to the democratic theory the democratic party went back on it. [Laughter and applause.]
Mr. ROBESON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question. He says the act strengthening the public credit was passed by the republican party. I want to ask him whether the democratic party in the Senate, led by its finance leaders, did not propose an amendment to that and voted for it solidly that the debt should be paid in coin at the value of that coin at the time the debt should be paid in coin at the value of that coin at the time the debt was contracted?

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I say the democratic position was that it changed the contract under which the bond was issued.

Mr. WEAVER. I wish to read to the House the legend on this flag, under which the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania marched in 1868.

marched in 1868.

The CHAIRMAN. The House must come to order and gentlemen in the aisles will resume their seats.

Mr. WEAVER. I will read the legend on this flag. "The people demand of the United States payment of the bonds in greenbacks."

Listen to that. [Laughter on the republican side.] "Payment of the bonds in greenbacks. Equal taxation. One currency for the conditions and other securities.

That is a part of the democratic platform of 1868.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman knows very well that all but about $750,000,000 of the debt at that time was redeemable in legal-tender notes.

Mr. WEAVER. The fourth clause of this same platform provides:

Equal taxation of every species of property according to its real value, including Government bonds and other securities.

Government, the people, the laborer, the office-holder, the producer, and the bondholder. For President, Horatio Seymour, of New York." [Laughter and applianse on the republican side of the House.]

Mr. ATHERTON. And the democratic party is true to that ban-

Mr. ATHERTON. And the democratic party is true to that banner yet.

Mr. WEAVER. There is not one word in this legend about a "tariff for revenue only." [Laughter.] That was the position of the democratic party at that time. The gentleman from Missouri says I supported the party that was opposed to that.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. WEAVER. But upon patient investigation, Mr. Chairman, I found the democratic theory to be right in a qualified form, and just about the time that I was ready to concede that fact and agree to their theories, the democratic ship left its moorings and sailed away on the broad sea from payment in greenbacks to just the opposite harbor. I yield now to the question of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WARNER. I wish to ask the gentleman from Iowa, if he has it at hand, to read the republican platform in the State of Ohio in 1868, as he has read a portion of the democratic platform. It is desirable to have it read in connection with the one he has just referred to. If the gentleman has not the platform, I can send and get it for

to. If the gentleman has not the platform, I can send and get it for him.

Mr. WEAVER. I have not the platform to which the gentleman refers, nor does it matter in this connection.

I yield now to the question of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman has read a portion of the democratic platform. That platform in 1868 pledged the payment of the 5-20 bonds in greenbacks, according to contract. Now, the gentleman belonged to that party then, and he has held to it ever since until during last session, or after the republican party had changed that contract and had driven, under the laws of this country, the democratic party from that platform on which they stood in 1868. The gentleman from Jowa has no right to read the democratic party a leaving tleman from Iowa has no right to read the democratic party a lecture for having receded from the position it then held in a political plat-form, when the party with which he affiliates has so framed the laws form, when the party with which he affiliates has so framed the laws as to force it to change its position or else come in conflict with the laws of the land. [Applause on the democratic side.]

Mr. WEAVER. My reply to the remark of the gentleman is that millions of the five-twenties could have been paid in greenbacks long before they were refunded; but the gentleman and his party were discouraged in 1868, and have never renewed their declaration of principles. There are no two platforms of the democratic party four years apart that will tally upon the question of finance; and I propose to show by reading from another platform of principles set forth in another general election—in another general election—

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman and his party have changed the law, and of course the democratic party could not go contrary to the

Mr. REAGAN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Mr. WEAVER. I think I have yielded about enough to gentlemen for questions

Mr. REAGAN. I only want to put right after what the gentleman has said the fact that after March, 1869, the power was taken away from the democratic party to maintain the position it did in the platform of 1868 unless it would oppose itself squarely to the law of the land and the contract which the Government had made in reference and and the contract which the Government had made in reference to the payment of the bonds.

Mr. WEAVER. No, sir. The act of 1869 could have been repealed. The new bonds were not funded under the act of 1869, but they were funded under the acts of 1870-71, and there was no effort on the part of the democratic party whatever to repeal the act or make any effort to pay the bonds in the manner they had declared in that platform.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The democratic party was not in power at that time.

Mr. BLAND. And even in 1871 the ower at that time.

Mr. BLAND. And even in 1871 the gentleman himself voted to send the republican party into power here, a party which had been committed already to make the bond payable in coin, and when he voted for members of Congress at that time he voted, as he well knew, to make the bond payable in coin.

Mr. REAGAN. I want to ask the gentleman another question. I simply want to get at the facts of the case. The gentleman refers to the act of 1870. Now, he knows very well that when the democratic platform of 1868 was drafted there were some $750,000,000 of the 5-29 bonds redeemable in lawful money. After the passage of the act of bonds redeemable in lawful money. After the passage of the act of 1869 not one dollar was redeemable in lawful money, but the whole was to be redeemed in coin. Now, that being so, the democratic party could not maintain the platform of 1868 without putting itself directly in opposition to the act of 1869, and therefore putting itself in opposi-tion to the laws of the land.

Mr. WEAVER. I will read the platform of 1868. I have it here:

When the obligations of the Government do not expressly state upon their face or the law under which they were issued does not provide for it, they ought in right and justice to be paid in lawful money of the United States.

That is a part of the democratic platform of 1868.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman knows very well that all but about $750,000,000 of the debt at that time was redeemable in legal-tender

Now, the democratic party raises its voice in favor of an entirely different principle from that which prevailed in 1868.

A MEMBER. We paid the debt.

Mr. WEAVER. And therefore they have changed their position

Mr. WEAVER. And therefore they have changed their position and indorsed the republican doctrine. [Applause on the republican side.] The God's truth of the matter is simply this: the democratic party in its whole history has simply camped every four years exactly where the republican party camped four years before, and during the late campaign they were neck and neck with the republican party in their doctrine. [Laughter on the republican side.]

But before I reach that point I wish to call attention to another point. In 1876 the democratic party in the Saint Louis convention indorsed the resumption policy of the republican party.

Mr. TALBOTT. You are four years behind us.

Mr. WEAVER. In 1876 the democrats complained of the republican party because they had not hastened resumption, and demanded lican party because they had not hastened resumption, and demanded that the law setting a day for resumption should be repealed so that they might, I presume, resume immediately. That was the intention as expressed in the platform of 1876. But they were beaten again in

Mr. RICHMOND. We were cheated out of it that time. Mr. WEAVER. You were beaten out of it some way. A Member. Who was elected in 1876?

Mr. WEAVER. I do not believe anybody was elected in 1876.
Mr. BLAND. For whom did you vote in 1876?
Mr. WEAVER. I voted for Rutherford B. Hayes in 1876, and I am sorry for it. [Laughter on the democratic side.]
Now let me notice the position of the democratic party in 1878.
After they had adopted, in 1876, the resumption and hard-money platform at Saint Louis—in 1878 the democratic platform of Ohio read as follows:

We demand * * * the gradual substitution of United States legal-tender paper for national-bank notes, and its permanent establishment as the sole paper money of the country, made receivable for all dues to the Government and of equal tender with coin.

That was the Ohio idea. And the Texas democratic platform is to the same purport; I have it here. The Maine platform, away down in New England, the country of steady habits, demanded the same thing. In Louisiana, all through the South, and in the West and Northwest, the democratic party favored the same policy of the substitution of greenbacks for national-bank currency, and the abolition of national banks—one currency of equal legal-tender value with coin, and the abolition of national-bank notes. That was their position then.

But the time came in 1880, two years after that, when for the second time in the history of the democratic party it had to be determined which set of ideas should dominate in the councils of that party. In 1860 it had to be determined whether Stephen A. Domelas and his co-

1860 it had to be determined whether Stephen A. Douglas and his co-adjutors or Jefferson Davis and his co-adjutors should dominate in the democratic councils. They could not agree; and the consequence was the nomination of two candidates, followed by the triumph of the republican party.

The same crisis arose in the history of the democratic party in 1880, when it had to be determined whether August Belmont and the Bayards, the eastern wing of the democratic party, should dominate on all these questions, or whether leaders like Hendricks of Indiana, Ewing of Ohio, Voorhees of Indiana, Trimble of Iowa, and Beck of Kentucky, should dominate in the councils of the party, and whether the policy of the South and West should be adhered to. The result was that the Bayards and the August Belmonts dominated, and result was that the Bayards and the August Belmonts dominated, and the sequel was the overthrow of the democracy—a just retribution for forsaking the principles they had enunciated to the people.

'There is but one party in the country that does adhere strictly to the principles it has enunciated before the public—save and except the republican party, which is open and bold in its piracy upon the rights of the people of the United States. [Laughter.] The party I refer to does adhere to its maintenance of the rights of the people, and is aboveboard in the declaration of its principles, and will be till it sweeps this country. And let me say to those who length at the it sweeps this country. And let me say to those who laugh at the diminutive size of the greenback party that that comes with an ill grace from the republican side of the House, when in my own short memory I can recall the time when the republican party did not poll so many votes as did the national greenback party in the last campaign.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. The republican party was born in 1856, and polled more votes then than the greenback party did at the

Mr. WEAVER. Not at all; the republican party was nothing more nor less than the old abolition or free-soil party.

Mr. HASKELL. The abolition and free-soil parties were not the

Mr. WEAVER. I know that; but the republican party united the free-soil and abolition elements. All parties have had to have a beginning. Now I defy any gentleman to show me why the following plank could not have been inserted in the republican platform without the dotting of an i or the crossing of a t. I read from the fourth plank of the democratic platform of 1880, adopted at the Cincinnation of the convention. convention:

The republicans are in favor of that.

Honest money-

My country! where did that come from? There is not a republican platform, State or national, up to 1880, for the last four years that has not demanded honest money, by which they mean gold as the exclusive standard of values in America.

Honest money

Let me read further.
Mr. SPRINGER. What is the gentleman reading from?
Mr. WEAVER. From the democratic platform of 1880. Don't you know your own platform? [Laughter.]
Mr. SPRINGER. I did not hear you.
Mr. WEAVER. The gentleman from Illinois, it seems, has already forgotten his principles, and no doubt is ready now for a new declaration since the defeat of his party.

Honest money, consisting of gold and silver and paper converted into coin on demand.

The strict maintenance of the public faith, State and national.

A tariff for revenue only.

[Laughter on the republican side.]
There is another declaration which will make the platform differ-There is another declaration which will make the platform different from the platform of the republican party, and that is the strict maintenance of the public faith, State and national. That signalizes the permanent abandonment by the democratic party of the doctrines of State rights. In that plank they propose to become the agents and attorneys of the holders of the bonds of Tennessee, of Arkansas, and of Virginia, and to compel the payment of those bonds. Now, what has the General Government to do with the payment of the State dath of Virginia on of Arkansas, or of Tennessee.

debt of Virginia, or of Arkansas, or of Tennessee, or of any other State? In this platform the democratic party has out-Heroded Herod and become the agents and attorneys of the bondholders in the collection of their claims against the repudiating States.

That platform was a slap in the face of every southern and western democrat, and of every democrat who formerly adhered to the declarations of 1868 and the State platforms of 1878. It was the repudiation of a VOORHEES, a Hendricks, a EWING, a THURMAN, the wisest and most fearless and talented leaders that the democratic party has produced in modern times. It was an indorsement, and a cowardly indorsement, of the republicant heory of finance and of funding. And the result was that the people of the United States said, If that is to be the settled policy of the Government, we prefer to trust the party that has shown itself the time-honored friend of the bondholder and of the syndicates of the country; we will not swap horses while crossing the stream.

I have some remarks to make in the way of criticism of the recommendations of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Comptroller of the Currency, and the President of the United States, so far as their recommendations are connected with the system of funding. I do not wish to do so to-day, but in all probability will do so when we come to consider this bill under the five-minute rule, when I will offer some to consider this bill under the nve-minute rule, when I will offer some amendments and the substitute now pending.

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] has referred to the democratic platform of 1868, and has read the legend which was on some flag paraded in the State of Ohio. I ask the Clerk to read the republican platform of the State of Ohio for that year, in order that it may go along with the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That we cordially approve the determination of Congress to retrench the expenses of the Government, and that we urge upon the National Legislature the necessity of the strictest economy, a reduction of the Army and Navy, and a thorough revision and simplification of our system of Federal taxation, so as to equalize and lighten the burdens of taxation of the people.

Resolved, That the republican party pledge itself to the faithful payment of the public debt according to the laws under which the 5-20 bonds were issued; that said bonds should be paid in the currency which may be a legal tender when the Government shall be prepared to redeem such bonds.

Resolved, That we heartily approve of the policy of Congress in arresting contraction, and believe that the issue of currency should be commensurate with the industrial and commercial interests of the people.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to say a word or two in response to some remarks made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Weaver] on the subject of political platforms and the consistency of political parties. He has arraigned the democratic party for inconsistency, because in its platform of 1868 it avowed itself in favor of paying the 5.20 bonds that were redeemable in legal money, according to the contract; and because when the law of the contract was changed in 1869 it changed its platform to meet the law. The gentleman has arraigned the democratic party because in its platform and speeches this year it proposed honost money, gold and silver, and paper convertible into coin.

Now, that gentleman and his political associates have urged upon the country the issuance of greenback notes to pay all public and private indebtedness. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Weaver] to the debate which occurred on this floor in May last, I think. During that debate, while the gentleman was discussing this question, he was interrogated by General Garfield and asked if he proposed to pay the debt in flat money. He replied that he did not. When asked how he proposed to pay it, he replied, by the current revenues of the country and by the free and unlimited coingre of silver. That is one point.

coinage of silver. That is one point.

Another point is, that by the platform of the convention which presented him to the American people for the office of President it was proposed to pay the debt according to the contract. The contract now is to pay the debt in coin. How, then, can that gentleman come here and arraign the democratic party for proposing to pay the debt according to the law when he and his party and its platform of principles were in favor of paying the debt in coin?

Mr. WEAVER. Allow me a question. I can answer that right

Mr. REAGAN. I will yield for a question; not for an argument

Mr. WEAVER. I want to answer the gentleman now.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman can do so after I am through. This is pretty much all I have to say. Of course I will submit to a question from the gentleman, but I will be through in a moment.

The gentleman stands here arraigning the democratic party because it does not still propose to pay the public debt in greenback notes as it proposed to do according to the law and the contract in 1868, when the power to do so was taken from it by the law of 1869 strengthening the public debt. Yet his party, following the inexorable logic that drove the democratic party to accept the law of the land and act upon it, proposed in its platform of last year to do precisely what the democratic party proposed to do—to pay the public debt according to the law and the contract, which requires now that it shall be paid in coin. I think he should remember these things when he undertakes to criticise the action of other political parties.

Mr. WEAVER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to reply to the gentleman. He cannot point this House to a single declaration in the platform of the democratic party of 1880 proposing to pay any portion of man. He cannot point this House to a single declaration in the platform of the democratic party of 1880 proposing to pay any portion of the public debt in silver dollars.

Mr. REAGAN. I did not speak of that subject.

Mr. WEAVER. Oh, no! you spoke of coin; but the greenback party proposes to pay in whatever hoard we have on hand—gold or silver. We propose, and we did propose in the resolutions to which the gentleman has just referred, to pay the bonds according to contract by using the hoards on hand—the surplus coin in the Treasury—by using the silver on hand and by the nurestricted coinage of silver. by using the silver on hand and by the unrestricted coinage of silver dollars. Now the gentleman knows very well there was no declara-tion of that kind in the democratic platform during the whole cam-and of that kind in the democratic platform during the whole campaign; not one word.

Mr. REAGAN. I was not talking about that,
Mr. WEAVER. I defy the gentleman to show wherein the green-back party has wavered one hair's breadth from its declaration of

Mr. REAGAN. If the gentleman will allow me, the democratic party in its platform did not propose to deal with the question in precisely the form in which the gentleman presents it; but it proposed to make gold and silver, and paper convertible into gold and silver, its money to pay all debts. It was not necessary to go further than it did in indicating its policy. The gentleman knows that I am as much inclined to the free and unlimited coinage of silver and to its use in the discharge of its public and private obligations as he is; and he knows that the great body of the democratic party hold the same view.

Mr. WEAVER. But let me ask the gentleman this question: Did not the platform of the democratic party of Texas as late as 1878 propose to pay the Government bonds in greenbacks?

Mr. REAGAN. It did not in the terms in which the gentleman speaks; but it proposed to ask, if necessary, for a constitutional amendment to restore the original contract as it stood prior to the law of 1869.

Mr. WEAVER. "If necessary." That was put in as a saving clause; but the declaration was that it was not necessary, and that the Government in the exercise of its sovereignty had the right to pay its obligations in any kind of money. Now, this platform was penned by the gentleman himself, I understand.

Mr. REAGAN. I did not write it.

Mr. WEAVER. The declaration of the democratic platform in 1878, was that they favored one uniform currency for all the people—the laborer, the office-holder, the pensioner, the soldier, the producer, and the bondholder.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Who demonetized silver, and who remonetized it?

remonetized it?

Mr. WEAVER. I will reply to the gentleman. The republican party demonetized silver, with the aid of the eastern wing of the democratic party.

Mr. SPARKS. Who remonetized it?

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Did not the republican party at the time silver was demonetized have more than two-thirds of both Houses of Congress?

Mr. WEAVER. Oh, yes. There was no necessity for any democrat to vote for it at all.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. None whatever; and did not the democratic party remonetize it?

Mr. WEAVER. The gentleman asks who remonetized silver. In aft. WEAVER. In gentleman asks who remonetized silver. In the first place, silver has never been fully reinstated; but in so far as they have gone, the republican Senate and a democratic House remonetized it.

Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina. Could the "republican Senate" have done it without the almost unanimous vote of the democrats of the Senate? Did not a large majority of republican Senators vote against it? vote against it?

Mr. REAGAN. I shall have to claim the floor. I desire to conclude

Mr. Kr.AGAN. I shall have to claim the source of the problem of the source of the sour

The gentleman also knows that in the national democratic plat-form of 1880 there was no declaration in favor of paying any portion form of 1880 there was no declaration in favor of paying any portion of the public debt in silver dollars; nor is there a single proposition of that kind now pending in this House emanating from a democrat. A substitute has been offered for this bill by the gentleman from Missonri, [Mr. Buckner,] and a bill has been introduced by the gentleman from New York. No democratic member has in any speech or in any bill proposed to pay out the silver on hand in discharge of the public debt; yet democratic members know that they have the right to pay out every dollar in liquidation of the public debt. Therein they differ from the greenback party.

Mr. REAGAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, since the gentleman has been very happy in his humor about political parties and their consistency, I wish to say that the democratic party did not feel itself under any obligation to make the declaration that it would obey the law and be honest. It did propose that gold and silver, and paper convertible honest. It did propose that gold and silver, and paper convertible into gold and silver, should be the money of the country. What else was there with which to pay the debt? It was not necessary for the democratic party to make a formal declaration in favor of paying the democratic party to make a formal declaration in favor of paying the debt of the country. It is a thing to be done of course in common honesty. The gentleman has carefully avoided, in his response to me, meeting the point I made as to his platform, that his party bound itself to the same thing, to gold and silver—to coin.

But I will go a little further. There is an action of parties outside of platforms. In the canvass, in which I participated to some extent, meeting the representatives of his party and his opinions, I found they often repudiated his platform, disregarded it; that they proposed to issue greenbacks without limit, some advocating as much as $2,500,000,000 with which to relieve the public by paying public and private debts.

private debts.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman—
Mr. REAGAN. I am not through.
Mr. WEAVER. But I wish to ask the gentleman a question.
Mr. REAGAN. Very well; I will hear the gentleman.
Mr. WEAVER. I wish to ask the gentleman this question: whether he to-day indorses the democratic platform of Texas of 1878?
Mr. REAGAN. I do not know what part of the platform the gentleman refers to tleman refers to. Mr. WEAVER. Then I will read it for the gentleman.

Mr. REAGAN. I understand the democratic platform—
Mr. WEAVER. Does the gentleman indores it?
Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman does not himself indorse the payment of the bonds in legal tender notes, and he should not put that question to me question to me.

Mr. WEAVER. But I ask the gentleman the question.

Mr. REAGAN. The democratic platform was in favor of the same currency for all classes of people and all classes of debt, but doubted the Government's capacity to make the unqualified declaration, and favored, if need be, constitutional amendment to enable it to do so It never made any declaration which was intended to place it in opposition to the laws of the land.

Mr. WEAVER. I wish to read the gentleman's platform.

Mr. REAGAN. On that subject why should the gentleman catechise me when he comes as the representative of the greenback party, pledged to pay the debt in gold and silver? Why catechise me? Why catechise democrats?

Mr. WEAVER. I will tell you why. I see you have been waver-

Mr. WEAVER. I will tell you why. I see you have been wavering as a shuttlecock on this question of finance, and to show that the democratic party is not to be trusted with the leadership of the people in opposition to the syndicates and the bondholding class of this

Mr. REAGAN. I respond in Yankee fashion by asking the gentleman another question, and that is, whether he is now in favor of paying the public debt in greenbacks?

Mr. WEAVER. I have already, Mr. Chairman, said the greenback party do not propose to violate any contract which now exists between the bondholder and the people.

Mr. REAGAN. Exactly what the democratic party said after the passage of the law of the 4th of March, 1869.

Mr. WEAVER. No, sir. The declaration of the democratic party I hold in my hand. It was penned by the gentleman from Texas himself, and was to the effect that the bonds were to be paid in greenbacks. Let me read. [Cries of "Read," "Read," from the republican side of the House.]

Mr. REAGAN. I was not a member of the convention, and did not write the platform, though I was conferred with as to some parts of it.

of it.

Mr. WEAVER. You were a member of the party. Did you not stump the State in favor of it?

Mr. REAGAN. I suppose I did. [Laughter.]

Mr. WEAVER. Then you were an accessory after the fact, at least.

Mr. REAGAN I do not propose, Mr. Chairman, to give my place away, and if the gentleman from Iowa would answer my question I would be glad to hear him, and then I will proceed. I want to know with what propriety he stood up on this floor, in the presence of the representatives of the people, and arraigned the democratic party for being in favor of paying the debt in coin, when he himself, and all that portion of his party which abided by his platform, was pledged to the same thing. I remember they were not all of the same opinion.

Mr. WEAVER. Oh! well.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Dillaye, in a letter written to the Greenback Tablet, and which was printed on the 10th of May, declared the platform was a fraud and a cheat, that the committee had sold out to the banks; and the gentleman's candidate for Vice-President on the greenback ticket, Mr. Chambers, of Texas, also wrote a letter, published in the same organ on the 30th of May, declaring that the platform was a great mistake. Yet he accepted their votes as cheerfully as my friend.

Mr. WEAVER. The declarations of persons made after the action

Mr. WEAVER. The declarations of persons made after the action Mr. WEAVER. The declarations of persons made after the action of the convention cannot be charged to the party itself. Its solemn declaration will be found in the platform, and that declaration is to be taken rather than any declaration of any individual. When I had the honor to stump the State of Alabama during the late campaign, a gentleman of the audience hurrahed for Hancock first, and immediately afterward hurrahed for Jefferson Davis. Now, would it be right and honorable in me to charge that declaration upon the democratic party as foreshadowing their belief? [Cries of "Yes!" "Yes!" on the republican side of the House.] No, I say it would not, for, since I left the republican party I have increased in charity and love for all men. love for all men.

Mr. BUCKNER. When was that? When did you leave the republican party?

Mr. WEAVER. In 1877.

A MEMBER. When did you return to it?

Mr. WEAVER. I want to answer the question of the gentleman from Missouri, and hope he will not go away before I have answered him. The gentleman asks me when I left the republican party. I will tell you when I left the republican party; it was in 1877; and at that time, or in the year after, in 1878, the gentleman from Missouri, chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency of this House, was stamping his district in that State as a greenbacker. this House, was stumping his district in that State as a greenbacker, and in favor of issuing greenbacks as a substitute for national-bank notes. [Laughter on the republican side.]

Mr. BUCKNER. I say that so far as that statement is concerned

Mr. REAGAN. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.
Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman——.
Mr. WEAVER. Now, the gentleman [Mr. BUCKNER] also publicly promised that at the next session of Congress the democratic party would repeal the resumption act, and I ask him to show a single step that has been taken in that direction. If anything has been done in that line, I certainly have not heard of it. Now I wish to read this Texas platform.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman from Iowa that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bland] has been recognized of "Let us hear the platform."] lowa that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] has been recognized. [Cries of "Let us hear the platform."]

Mr. WEAVER. He could not have been recognized until I yielded the floor, and I had not yielded.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I had five minutes of my hour left, but I think it must have gone somewhere. [Laughter.]

Mr. WEAVER. Let me read this platform. [Cries of "Read it!"

"Read it!"]
Mr. WEAVER. This is a part of the Texas platform of 1878. It reads as follows:

We hold that the right of the States to tax property in the States is inviolable, and that United States bonds should bear the burden equally with all other property, and any legislation that exempts such bonds from taxation is unjust and oppressive.

The fifth clause of this platform declares-

That the bonds and obligations of the United States Government ought to be paid in legal-tender notes of the United States, except where it is otherwise provided by the original law under which they were issued, and all that can be called in and paid now should be paid at once, and the remainder as soon as it can be lawfully done. We heartly approve the action of Congress in passing the act known as the silver bill, thereby increasing the circulating medium of the country and restoring to us the dollar of the fathers.

Now, I asked the gentleman from Texas a very pertinent question little while ago

Mr. BLAND. I do not yield the floor any further.
Mr. WEAVER. I asked the gentleman from Texas whether he indorsed that platform of his own party and of his own State in 1878, and he refused to answer.

and he refused to answer.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield the floor any further. I demand my rights under the rules of the House. If I am entitled to the floor I desire to proceed.

Mr. WARNER. Will the gentleman from Missouri simply permit me to have read an extract from the republican platform from the State of Indiana in that same year, 1868, as this seems to be a question of platforms, and it will take but a few moments' time to read. [Cries of "Go on!" "Read it!" "Read it!"]

Mr. BLAND. J. will yield for that purpose

Mr. BLAND. I will yield for that purpose.
Mr. HOUSE. I rise to a question of order.
Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. What is it the gentleman from Ohio desires to hear read?

Mr. WARNER. An extract from the republican platform of 1868 in Indiana. [Cries of "Let it be read!"]

The Clerk read as follows:

4. The public debt, made necessary by the rebellion, should be honestly paid, and all bonds issued therefor should be paid in legal-tenders, commonly called greenbacks, except where by their expressed terms they provide otherwise, and paid in such quantities as will make the circulation commensurate with the commercial wants of the country, and so as to avoid too great an inflation of the currency and an increase in the price of gold.

5. The large and rapid contraction of the currency, sanctioned by the votes of the democratic party—

Mr. WARNER. That is all. [Laughter on the republican side, and cries of "Read on!"

Mr. ROBINSON. Go on; that is good reading.
Mr. WARNER. Read what I have marked.
Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Yes, read it all; we can stand it if they can.

Mr. WARNER. Read all of the paragraph marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

5. The large and rapid contraction of the currency, sanctioned by the votes of the democratic party in both Houses of Congress, has had a most injurious effect on the industry and business of the country, and it is the duty of Congress to provide by law for supplying the deficiency in legal-tender notes, commonly called greenbacks, to the full extent required by the business wants of the country.

Mr. WARNER. I simply wanted this to appear in connection with what the gentleman from Iowa has read and commented on.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I hope in the few remarks that I shall now make I will not be interrupted; for it is not my purpose to detain the committee but for a few moments. Since this Government began the democratic party has had its existence as an organization and as a party in this country, and it has seemed to me the special mission of every new party which springs up from time to time in this country to make bitter and violent attacks upon the democratic party. They seem to suppose that it is necessary to do away with this grand old party that has always stood up in the front for the rights of the people of this whole country, not only in finances, but in civil liberty old party that has always stood up in the front for the rights of the people of this whole country, not only in finances, but in civil liberty and for all the rights of the people, and that that old party must be supplanted before any of these new growth of parties can survive. The gentleman from Iowa in his speech in this House to-day has not only reiterated what I suppose to be some of his campaign speeches during the last canvass, but has carried out exactly what I supposed he would carry out from his speeches during that canvass, and he has shown the animus which then inspired him in attacking the democratic party, the only friend he has here upon this floor to stand by him. [Laughter on the republican side.] Now, Mr. Chairman, during the last session of Congress the gentleman introduced certain resolutions here, the purport of which was against the funding of this debt beyond the power of the Government to pay or at any time to pay the debt in silver, and a proposition that he sustained in a speech and on the call of the roll of this House. That roll-call shows that there were 84 votes in favor of that resolution, and 72 of those were democrats.

Mr. WEAVER. Now let me ask a question.
Mr. BLAND. I will not yield to the gentleman.
Mr. WEAVER. I yield to the gentleman for his questions and hope he will exercise the same courtesy toward me.

hope he will exercise the same courtesy toward me.

Mr. BLAND. I will not be further interrupted at this point.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that this proposition received in this House 84 votes, 72 of which were east by democrats, and only one single republican voted with the gentleman. Yet he stands here to-day making his speech, and cheered on by the republican side of the House in his attack upon the democratic party and upon democrats.

In the gentleman's canvass it was charged by men high in authority (of his own party) that he visited committees of the republican party in the city of New York, and that during the canvass the whole influence of himself and his party was yielded to the republican party, which did not support him in this House, and was used against the party that did. The gentleman may deny it, but he knows what is matter of public history, and that men high in the cancus of his own party charged him with this conduct in the canvass.

What did the gentleman do after he was nominated? The first State he went into was Alabama; and while the record shows that every democrat from that State who voted on this proposition voted with him, he went down there to defeat the very men who upheld with him, he went down there to defeat the very men who upheld him here. Then he went to Arkansas to do the same thing there, and his whole canvass seemed to have been conducted with a view to de-his whole canvass seemed to have been conducted with a view to defeat the men who stood by him on these propositions, and to elect men who voted against him and his propositions.

Mr. CONGER. Did he stay there long? [Laughter.]

Mr. BLAND. I am glad the gentleman has suggested that. There seems to be a sort of harmony between the gentleman representing the greenback party and the republicans in all these questions. He stayed there till near the election. Then he went up into West Virginia, and he claimed there the greenback party was going to carry Alabama. But the Associated Press sent out dispatches that the gentleman from Iowa denounced the people of that State as being bull-dozers, and had said the republicans had not told half the truth condozers, and had said the republicans had not told half the truth condering them. Senator Conkling, in making a speech in New York denouncing the democratic party, adduced these dispatches and put Mr. Weaver on the stand to prove these men were bulldozers. So that I say his whole campaign, from beginning to end, corresponds with his speech here in the interest of the party that has conducted this Government and passed the laws he has complained of and fixed them upon the people of this country, and against the party that all this time has opposed that policy.

Mr. SPARKS. The gentleman from Iowa was aiding them at that

Mr. WEAVER. That is not true.
Mr. SPARKS. Were you not a republican?
Mr. WEAVER. I understand the gentleman to say that during the campaign I aided the republican party.
Mr. SPARKS. Were you not a republican, and as a republican did you not vote for the men that passed those laws?
Mr. WEAVER. I understood you to say I aided the republican

Mr. WEAVER. I understood you to say I aided the republican party during the campaign.

Mr. SPARKS. I said you were a republican.

Mr. SPARKS. The gentleman is crazy.

Mr. SPARKS. The gentleman states a falsehood.

Mr. WEAVER. I rise to a question of privilege.

Mr. BLAND. I have the floor, and call for order in the House.

Mr. WEAVER. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. BLAND. I claim my personal privilege. I have the floor, and do not desire to be further interrupted. The gentleman from Iowa arraigns the democratic party because of its platform of 1868. In that platform it declared the 5-20 bonds to be payable in lawful money, and the gentleman talks of the platform of Texas in 1876. Now, sir, I do not desire to misstate the record concerning this matter, but my information is that these 5-20 bonds, or a portion of them, in 1874 and 1876 were outstanding and were payable in greenbacks, and hence a platform making this declaration, at that time, did not declare what was contrary to law. As I understand the democratic platform of 1880 it makes no allusion to this subject, because these bonds have been redeemed and canceled. Hence there was no reason why there should be any declaration concerning them. They were not in existence. were not in existence.

were not in existence.

The gentleman from Iowa charges the democratic party with having abandoned the platform of 1868. Yet his own speeches show he has himself abandoned that platform. He gave as an excuse at the last session of Congress why he abandoned it, that the law of 1869 had changed the contract, and the funded bonds of 1870 were coin bonds. If he had looked at the record of that legislation he would have found that a democratic Senator in the Senate of the United States endeavored to incorporate into that law the power to tax these bonds, and his proposition was voted down by a republican Senate. And yet the gentleman charges the democratic party as not in favor bonds, and his proposition was voted down by a republican Senate. And yet the gentleman charges the democratic party as not in favor of taxing these bonds. That proposition was voted down by the republicans, and the bonds were issued under the law, exempt from taxation and payable in coin. The gentleman acknowledges the binding obligation of these laws, and his proposition was to pay these bonds in silver; a proposition supported by democrats in this House. And now how does the gentleman stand? Why is it he has not a word to say concerning the republican party except now and then to throw in something by way of parenthesis to laugh at? And I think the gentleman will remember he was an office-holder under General Grant from 1867 to 1873; that he was a candidate for Congress before republican conventions in 1872 and 1874, and was defeated; that again he was a candidate for State senator on the republican ticket and was defeated by the people. And when the republican ticket and was defeated by the people. that I think in 1878 he was candidate for State senator on the republican ticket and was defeated by the people. And when the republican party had tired of him he found an excuse to leave that party and join the greenback party. Hence his change of heart. He never changed heart until it was too late to remedy this legislation. Why did he not in 1869, when the party for which he voted and to which he held up to that time, changed the law and made these bonds payable in coin—why did he not change heart then? Why did he not have a change of heart in 1870, when his party passed the law refunding this debt into a coin debt? Sir, he never found time to change his heart until the republican party refused him office, refused to divide with him its steal of $500,000,000. [Laughter.]

I say the democratic party has a clear record on this subject. It is a party that has stood with the people on this question. It is a party through the influence of which silver was remonetized, which had been demonetized by his party.

Mr. FORT. Will the gentleman tell me how many dollars in silver the democratic party coined in forty years? The republican party coined more silver in one year under Lincoln than the democratic party did in forty years.

party did in forty years.

Mr. BLAND. When my republican friend from Illinois [Mr. Fort] tries to defend his greenback friends on this floor it all sounds very well. He and his friend from Iowa [Mr. Weaver] have always slept in the same bed, and I am willing to place them there to-day.

I say that there never was a piece of legislation in the interest of I say that there never was a piece of legislation in the interest of the people until the democratic party got possession of the House of Representatives. I say that the remonetization of silver never was talked of until you got a democratic House of Representatives. There never was a reduction of appropriations until the democratic House of Representatives wrung it from an unwilling Senate and an unwilling President.

Mr. CONGER. Nor then, either.

Mr. BLAND. The surplus revenue was wasted by extravagant appropriations. By the economy forced upon a republican administration we have to-day a surplus revenue sufficient, if properly applied, to wipe out the national debtattherate of from $2,000,000 to $4,000,000 per month.

Mr. WARNER. More than $5,000,000.

Mr. BLAND. More than $5,000,000. I say that all the reforms that have come to the people of this country have come from the democratic party. While belonging to his pretended greenback organization, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Weaver] seems to be more hostile to the democratic party to-day than he was when holding to his old faith. That seems to be the whole purpose and object of these new parties to employed and object of these new parties to employed and object. of these new parties, to supplant and cut down the democratic party.

of these new parties, to supplant and cut down the democratic party. [Applause.]

The gentleman talks about the democratic party being dead. Sir, you may by your assessments on your office-holders and by your system of public plunder, by expending the public money for purposes of corruption, and with greenback tails to republican kites succeed for the moment in defeating this grand old party that stands by the liberties and rights of the country. But sooner or later that party will rise and be the governing power of this Government. Reform will come through that organization, and not through his little greenback party, that had one platform two years ago and that has another platform to-day.

other platform to-day

other platform to-day.

I would like to allude to the platform of that party two years ago and to the platform of to-day. Two years ago it was a platform that promised one money to the bondholder and the plow-holder. The platform of the greenback party in Missouri proposed that fiat money should be issued and loaned out to States and counties and school districts to pay off their debts, and should be made a legal tender.

The gentleman in his speech to-day does not claim that he proposes the same money for the plow-holder and the same money for the bondholder; not much. He announced in the last session of Congress and he announces here to-day that he is in favor of paying these bonds in coin. Then, if he issues his flat money, who is to take it? The bondholder? No, sir.

I believe the gentleman made a speech in Indianapolis, in which

I believe the gentleman made a speech in Indianapolis, in which he said to the bondholder, "Back up your cart and take away your coin." I suppose he would say to the plow-holder, "Roll up your wheelbarrow and take away your fiat money." [Laughter.] That is the logical conclusion of his platform and all his principles. His platform and his speech to-day is in favor of paying the bonds of the Government, principal and interest, in coin. What, then, is he to do with his flat money? Who is to take it? The pensioner and the plow-holder. plow-holder.

plow-holder.

Here is a system of finance that the republican party has adhered to until it resumes specie payments. He wants to go back and take that same old system, a system that he supported and maintained when he was a republican, and which he holds to now.

I say to the gentleman that if he desires to reform this Government let him come over to the only party that is able and willing to reform it. My friend from Iowa [Mr. Weaver] seems to have the sympathy of gentlemen on the republican side of the House. They seem to be a sort of harmonious family, and therefore we may expect that when he makes another change it will be simply to go back to his old bed and lie down in the place that is mentioned in scripture where wallow and mire are named. and mire are named

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Missouri says (and his remarks were quite personal) that I have turned upon the only party that showed me any sympathy or encouragement during the last Congress.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Before the gentleman from Iowa proceeds I would like to know to what question or what point he now proposes to address the committee.

Mr. WEAVER. I propose to reply to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] in extenso, in general debate.

Mr. BLAND. And I suppose that I can reply to him. He made a long speech to which I have replied.

Mr. WEAVER. And I will rejoin.

Mr. HUMPHREY. This is a surrebutter. [Laughter.]

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman, I certainly have a right to the floor to reply to the gentleman from Missouri, whose remarks were quite personal.

personal.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WEAVER. The gentleman says in substance that I am antagonizing the only party which gave me any encouragement or sympathy upon the resolutions that I had the honor to introduce at the last session of Congress. It is true, Mr. Chairman, in the history of that matter, that after I had by dint of perseverance extorted by a three months' contest recognition for the purpose of bringing that question before the House seventy-two democrats who dare not face their constituents upon a yote against these resolutions yoted for it. their constituents upon a vote against those resolutions voted for it. But what democrat gave me any encouragement or assistance in getting the resolution before the House? Did not the chairmen of democratic committees interpose and seek recognition at the hands of the Speaker in order to prevent me from obtaining the floor? Is it not true, also, that just as soon as those seventy-two democratic members of the House voted in favor of that resolution they went straight away to Cincinnati and adopted a hard-money republican platform?

The gentleman passes some strictures upon my campaign. I spoke perhaps to a million people during that campaign. I spoke in sixteen States of the Union. I traversed the country from Arkansas to the northeast corner of Maine, and from midway on the eastern shore of Lake Michigan to the Bay of Mobile. What I did and said was not done in a corner. I discussed all these issues of the different parties, freely, openly, boldly; and I now challenge the gentleman to show one word that I uttered during that campaign in favor of the republican party. Until you do show it, shut up or put up. [Laughter.] Mr. BLAND.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman's own party—
Mr. WEAVER. I will not yield to the gentleman. I will return "an eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth" when I am dealing with him.
Mr. BLAND. Then do not ask questions

wr. BLAND. Then do not ask questions.

Mr. BLAND. Then do not ask questions.

Mr. WEAVER. I not only defy the gentleman to show one word I ever uttered during the canvass in favor of the republican party, but on the contrary I affirm that in every speech I made during that campaign I arraigned the republican party as being hostile to every interest of the people. I now declare them to be so. The charge that I am in sympathy with them the gentleman knows to be untrue. That is all there is about it.

That is all there is about it.

Mr. BLAND. I do not know any such thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa declines to yield.

Mr. WEAVER. As to the greenback platform in Missouri, I will refer the gentleman to the Forty-seventh Congress, when four greenbackers from Missouri, who displace democratic candidates, will be here to meet him on that question; and the reason these democrats were displaced was because the leaders of the democratic party in Missouri had gone back upon their declaration.

Missouri had gone back upon their declaration.

A MEMBER. No; because they received radical votes.

Mr. HATCH rose.

Mr. WEAVER. I must decline to yield. Now, one word more in regard to democratic sympathy. Let me show what kind of democratic sympathy I received. During the campaign I denounced the democratic platform as being identical with the republican platform upon all essential questions which the greenback party presented; and hence I opposed a division of electoral votes with the democratic party in Maine and with the republican party in West Virginia. I party in Maine and with the republican party in West Virginia. I went into the State of Alabama; and, by the way, I will say, in reply to a suggestion which has been made from the republican side of the House, that I was never better treated in my life than by the people of Alabama. They treated me with the greatest courtesy. But because I had the boldness to declare that there was no free election because I had the boldness to declare that there was no free election in the State of Alabama, the gentleman therefore says I am in sympathy with the republican party. I say to him that the greenback party is just as much in favor of a free election and a fair count as the republican party. That is not peculiarly a republican principle; it is the abiding faith of all good citizens. [Applause.]

The gentleman says I went into Alabama to defeat the party of the count the decease the decease in favor of the result in favor of

The gentleman says I went into Alabama to defeat the party of the seventy-two democrats who voted in favor of my resolution. I went into Alabama to elect Governor Pickens as governor of that State—a straight greenback nominee; and every other man who was on our ticket in Alabama was a straight greenbacker, and all were of first-class democratic and confederate record. There was no fusion with the republican party in Alabama. That party made no nominations, and advised their constituencies to vote the greenback ticket. And I would to God that all parties in this country may do that at every election. [Langther 1]

I would to God that an parties in this country and election. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAMFORD. The majority of the votes received by Governor Pickens in Alabama were cast by republicans.

Mr. WEAVER. That may be true; but nobody knows how many votes Governor Pickens did get in Alabama. [Laughter.]

Mr. SAMFORD. He got very few in fact. The official return shows his vote.

Mr. WEAVER. It does not show the vote cast, by any means.

Mr. SAMFORD. How does the gentleman know that when he was in Maine at the time?

Mr. WEAVER. Because you had ninety-two thousand majority. and seven counties "to hear from;" and there are not seventy-five thousand democratic votes in Alabama, and you could not have had minety-two thousand if there had not been a single vote in opposition Mr. SAMFORD. That is not the fact, nor is it history. Mr. WEAVER. That is my judgment.

Mr. SAMFORD. Precisely; but there has never been an election in Alabama when a full vote was called out that the democratic vete was not one hundred thousand and more.

Mr. WEAVER. I must decline to yield.

Mr. SAMFORD. The gentleman ought not to make an incorrect statement and then decline to yield for a correction.

Mr. WEAVER. I mean no discourtesy.

Mr. BLAND rose.

Mr. WEAVER. I do not yield to the gentleman from Missouri. I hold him to his own doctrine. I shall not yield to him at all.

Now, one word more with regard to democratic sympathy. The chief item of sympathy was embodied in a forged letter published in a democratic paper, the New York Star. [Laughter.] No such letter was ever written by me; yet it was printed by the democratic papers and circulated broadcast over the country by the democratic committee—a bold, bare, bald forgery—nothing more and nothing less. More than that, Mr. Chairman, upon careful examination made by myself and by experts that letter is found to be in identically the same handwriting with the Morey letter. [Laughter and applause.]

One other matter, about my having conferred with the republican committee during the campaign. I pronounce, on the floor of the House and in the hearing of the American people, the declaration that I conferred with the republican committee, either personally, orally, or in writing, by myself or another or in any manner, during the campaign, I pronounce it, sir, here, before the representatives of the American people, an utter falsehood from first to last.

Mr. BLAND. Did not one of your constituents, Mr. Lum, make the charge?

charge?
Mr. WEAVER. Yes, sir.
Mr. BLAND. That is what I referred to.
Mr. WEAVER. But it is charged and believed by the country at large that the democracy had bribed Lum to do it.
Mr. BLAND. What do you know about that?
Mr. WEAVER. I will tell you what I do know if you will pay at-

I passed, Mr. Chairman, from West Virginia to Indiana, and arrived in the latter State at a very critical period in the campaign previous to the October election. When I arrived at the city of Indianapolis the democratic party had just bought one Yeagley off our ticket. He was the greenback candidate for secretary of state. The democratic party had just induced him by corrupt influence to leave the greenback ticket and to publish a letter in favor of General Hancock. Mr. Yeagley was owner of five-sixths of the Indianapolis Sun, one of the leading greenback papers in the Northwest. The contract required that he should surrender the only greenback paper in Indianapolis into the hands of the democratic party. The chairman of the greenthat he should surrender the only greenback paper in Indianapolis into the hands of the democratic party. The chairman of the greenback committee waited on the chairman of the democratic committee with an injunction in his hand, telling him that Mr. Speer, the editor of that paper, had the right to edit it for one year as a greenback paper, and if they put any money in it they would certainly lose it. The democratic chairman replied that he had put none into it, and he therefore refused to invest. Yeagley's treachery being known, he was compelled to publish his card, coming out for Hancock. At that time I arrived in the State of Indiana. I made no speech in favor of the republican party. I said everywhere there, as I said in Maine. the republican party. I said everywhere there, as I said in Maine, Alabama, and Georgia, to the greenbackers, "Vote your own ticket;" that there must be some place where the greenback party shall stand out separate and distinct from all other parties. I said to the greenbackers of Indiana, "Vote your own ticket against both of the old parties." That is all I said anywhere, and I say it here; and be it known to the democratic side of the House and to the republican side of the House that the greenback party is not a republican party nor a of the House that the greenback party is not a republican party nor a democratic party, but it is a greenback party, separate and distinct in its organization. That was my position throughout the country, and I was fearless in my declarations.

About the time that I was making those speeches in Indiana, the letter of Lum was telegraphed to Indiana, as well as the letter of Hughes and Dewees, of Pennsylvania—not telegraphed to me, but telegraphed to the democratic committee. All these letters, all these slanders, were hurled into the Indiana campaign for the purpose of influencing the greenbackers of the State of Indiana. But no man believed them. The men who circulated them did not believe them. I pronounce them here and now unqualified falsehoods from first to last, and challenge any man to show a single word that I ever uttered. last, and challenge any man to show a single word that I ever uttered during that long and arduous campaign in favor of the republican party or that was not strictly in accordance with loyalty to the party had the honor to represent.

Mr. SPARKS. The Lum letter, at all events, was genuine.

Mr. WEAVER. It was a genuine instance—

Mr. SPARKS. Was not the letter genuine?

Mr. WEAVER. It was a genuine instance of democratic bribery.

Mr. SPARKS. The letter was genuine, at all events.

Mr. WEAVER. I think it was. I think he wrote it.

Mr. RIAND. Did you not have generous with Mr. HUNDER.

Mr. BLAND. Did you not have a conference with Mr. Hubbell at the Riggs House, in this city?

Mr. WEAVER. What is the question?

Mr. BLAND. Did you not have a conference with Mr. Hubbell at

Mr. BLAND. Did you not have a conference with Mr. Hubbell at the Riggs House during the campaign?

Mr. WEAVER. No, sir.

Mr. BLAND. You did not?

Mr. WEAVER. No, sir; I had no conference with Mr. Hubbell at the Riggs House during the campaign.

Mr. HUMPHREY. We have a witness here.

Mr. SPARKS. Swear the witness.

Mr. WEAVER. I have no doubt the men who bribed Lum agreed to believe him; I have no doubt about that. But he was smoked out. He claimed to have testimony in his hands showing complicity on my part with the republican committee. By the greenback press on my part with the republican committee. By the greenback press of the country he was compelled to give what he had. What did it show? It showed he went to Maine with $100 of republican money in his pocket to oppose fusion in that State. When he got there the agent of the republican party wanted to know what he was doing. Then he could not oppose fusion. He had changed his mind after he got to Maine. Immediately after returning from Maine he published

Just prior to his making that declaration he had published a letter in the Irish World, a leading paper of our party, charging that I was about to compromise myself and my party by going upon the stand there at political meetings with the Speaker of this House, with Mr.

Cary, with Senator Doolittle, and General Butler, alleging that I was in favor of a fusion in that State on the electoral ticket. When I got there I took a decided stand in opposition to the division of our electoral ticket, arguing against it and protesting against any division of the electoral ticket with the democratic party. After that he turned round and accused me of selling out to the republican party because I was not in favor of doing the very thing he had denounced.

A MEMBER. Perhaps he sold out himself.

Mr. WEAVER. The truth of the matter is that he had sold out to both of the old parties, and both got badly cheated when they bought him. [Laughter.]

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I rise to a question of privilege. The gentleman from Missouri rose and addressed the committee, and the gentleman from Iowa rose to make a remark in response. The gentleman is discussing other matters widely different from that which is now before the committee.

Mr. WEAVER. I must reply to other points made by the gentle-man from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will state his point of order.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I raise the point of order and I wish the Chair to rule upon it. My point of order is, that the committee unanimously gave the gentleman from Iowa the privilege of replying to the gentleman from Missouri. I submit that he has consumed twice as much time in his own right as the gentleman from Missouri did in the discussion of that question. I insist that this is a debate upon the funding bill, and I shall move that the committee now rise unless other gentlemen desire to discuss the merits of the bill.

Mr. ACKLEN. The gentleman is not confined in this discussion exclusively to the consideration of the funding bill in Committee of the Whole. The rule is very distinct on that the Whole. The rule is very distinct on that.

Mr. BLAND. I hope the gentleman will be permitted to proceed.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I ask a ruling upon the point of order which I have made.

which I have made.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee have been proceeding in the direction of general debate, and the gentleman from Iowa sought recognition from the Chair. The recognition was accorded to him. The Chair holds that he is in order in discussing generally the question of funding. The gentleman must, of course, confine himself to the subject-matter pending before the committee.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The gentleman has already addressed the committee. I hold that it is not in order for any gentleman to address the committee twice upon the same subject until every other gentleman has spoken who desires to speak upon it. But I shall not press the motion that the committee rise. I would like to know from the gentleman, though, how much longer time he proposes to consume.

Mr. WEAVER. Only a very few moments longer. I should have been through by this time if I had not been interrupted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, in response to the suggestion of the gentleman from New York that the gentleman from Iowa cannot address the committee twice on the same question, holds that the objection comes too late. If objection had been interposed at the time tion comes too late. If objection had been interposed at the time when the gentleman claimed the floor, the Chair would have had to take notice of the fact. But he holds that the objection is not well taken at this time.

Mr. COOK. I would like to ask the Chair a question. How long is the gentleman entitled to speak?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has an hour in his own right from the time he commenced.

Mr. WEAVER. I will not consume very much time, Mr. Chairman. I know very well that gentlemen perhaps do not like to hear this, but I think they must hear it. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bland] is much concerned about my having once been a republican. I did enter the republican party about the time I attained my majority, and I remained in that party. When I left it, in 1877, I was a private citizen, engaged in business at that time, and am not responsible in any way for what the republican party did in the way of unjust class legislation, which I now denounce. I am undoubtedly obnoxious to the criticism of having followed blindly my party with obnoxious to the criticism of having followed blindly my party without due investigation, just as thousands are now doing.

As far as that responsibility carries me I plead guilty, and I am perfectly willing that gentlemen shall hold that up to the people of the United States and to my constituents. I regret it, Mr. Chairman, as much as they do; but when the light did strike my mind I left the republican party and thereafter and from that time have adhered strictly to what I believe to be right, swerving neither to the right nor to the left from that day to this. But that cannot be said of the democratic party; neither can it be said of the gentleman from Missouri who has just taken his seat. That gentleman and his party have occupied every sign in the political zodiac, first being against greenbacks, then supporting greenbacks platforms favoring the subgreenbacks, then supporting greenback platforms favoring the substitution of greenbacks for national-bank notes; then supporting the Saint Louis platform of 1876, favoring resumption; then supporting the Missouri platform of 1878, favoring the substitution of greenbacks for national-bank notes; and in 1880 supporting the Cincinnati platform, calling for "honest money." The gentleman and his party leaders are driven about by every wind that blows.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman misstates the democratic party and may register.

my position— Mr. WEAVER. I do not yield to the gentleman. If the gentleman can show any shadow of change or turning on my part, in any respect, since I embraced the doctrine of the greenback party, then the charge of inconsistency can be made against me; but that he cannot do. I do say, and I show, that he supported the democratic party without regard to what its platform declared, a party that has changed its platform as often as the presidential year came around, and that he supports any platform they choose to give him. The gentleman made his canvass in Missouri, and I had the pleasure of reading a speech of his, delivered in that State, in favor of our doctrines substantially, when he well knew that his declarations were not in harmony with the principles adopted by the democratic party at Cincinnati.

principles adopted by the democratic party at Cincinuati.

Mr. BLAND rose.

Mr. WEAVER. I do not yield.

Mr. BLAND. The gentleman makes a false statement and then will not yield to have it corrected.

Mr. WEAVER. The gentleman from Missouri can take the floor in his own time. He knows very well—

Mr. BLAND. I know that when the gentleman says I made a canvass on greenback principles he states what is not true.

Mr. WEAVER. Did the gentleman not state in his speech that the democratic party was the only true greenback party in this country because it sought to substitute legal-tender notes for bank-notes?

Does he deny he made that statement?

Mr. BLAND. I deny that yours is the true greenback platform.

Mr. BLAND. I deny that yours is the true greenback platform.
Mr. WEAVER. Let me say this in justice to the great mass of the democratic party: what I have been pointing out I do not charge to the party itself, but I charge it to the leadership of the party, those who run with the hounds and hole with the hare. I desire to hold up to the gaze of the American people as being unsafe and untrust-worthy to lead a great party—those leaders who are endeavoring to introduce the British system of a perpetual debt and the British banking system into this country are the parties I have in view. I know very well that in the next democratic conventions in Missouri and throughout the South and West they will declare themselves in favor of the abolition of national banks and the payment of the publie debt in silver, and in every other way. But I know they never can deceive the American people again into following their leader-ship in the great battle that is now upon us with the combined moneyed corporations of the world. The American people in this moneyed corporations of the world. The American people in this great struggle desire above all things an honest, bold, and fearless opposition to the encroachments which now threaten them. They have given the democratic party every opportunity to assume that attitude. The leaders of that party have refused to champion the people, and henceforth they will look elsewhere.

Now as to my candidacy before I left the republican party: I was a candidate in 1874 before the republican convention for the office of governor of my State. As the delegation from Iowa will bear me out in stating, I had publicly, over my own signature, made declaration refusing to permit my name to be used before the convention; and it was not until four o'clock on the evening of the day before the convention assembled that I finally consented they might use my name. And the statement that I ever was a candidate before any republican convention in the State of Iowa for governor after that republican convention in the State of Iowa for governor after that mr. BLAND. My information is that the gentleman was twice a candidate for Congress and once for governor. I do not know whether it was in 1874 or in 1876 he was candidate for governor. Mr. WEAVER. It was in 1874 and in 1876 my name was before the republican convention for Congressman, and that is the only time I authorized my name to be used before a convention for the office of Congressman. At that time I was defeated by one vote in the convention, and it was claimed by my friends it was done fraudulently. Nevertheless I gave in my adhesion to the nominee of that convention, and I supported the same gentleman, Judge Samson, two years

tion, and I supported the same gentleman, Judge Samson, two years afterward for the same position.

The gentleman from Missouri has sought to create the impression that I have been a chronic office-seeker in the republican party, and that I left it because I was disappointed by not getting an office. That is not true. When I left the republican party it had sixty thousand majority in Iowa over all opposition combined. I left it because I believed, on investigation of its principles, that its policy was hostile to the interests of the people, and that there was no possible chance of reforming that party. That is why I left the republican party and have remained out of it ever since, and I am more at war this moment with that party than ever before; and no amount of abuse can drive me or remained out of it ever since, and I am more at war this moment with that party than ever before; and no amount of abuse can drive me or inducements lure me into a party that is hostile to the principles which my party promulgates. I will organize with any man to fight the money power who will agree with me on the principles I advocate, without regard to the party to which he has formerly belonged.

Mr. SPARKS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. WEAVER. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPARKS. A short time ago some little trouble occurred between the gentleman and myself, and may have arisen from a misapprehen-sion. My remark to the gentleman was this, that during the time this vicious legislation which had been referred to was being adopted by the republican party he was a republican; namely, when the law of 1868 was passed, and when the laws of 1871 and 1873 were passed. I did not of course mean to charge the gentleman that since he had become a member of what is known as the greenback party he had been inconsistent at all. But the gentleman misunderstood me. I simply meant to state what is on record, and to say that while this vicious legislation was being adopted on the money question, the law of 1869, then the law of 1870-71, and then the silver demonetization law of 1873—during all that time the gentleman was aiding the republican party by being a member of it.

Mr. WEAVER. That is true. I do not yield further.

Mr. SPARKS. The gentleman is as much interested in this as I am.

Mr. WEAVER. I will say that I never allow myself to get excited in debate. There were two gentlemen talking at the same time, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] and the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPARKS.] I understood the gentleman from Illinois to refer to gentleman from Missouri Mr. BLAND and the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPARKS.] I understood the gentleman from Illinois to refer to some remarks which I had made during the campaign, and that is why I made the remark I did. The gentleman replied very offensively that that was a falsehood. Now, having been compelled once to apologize to this House, the gentleman should be very careful about using language of that kind. I did not take it as a personal insult; I did not take it as applying to me. If the gentleman ever does apply such language to me, and does it within the reach of my arm, I certainly shall personally chastise him. [Laughter.] But as he does not do a now.

ort do so now—

Mr. SPARKS. This man certainly will not make that remark here and refuse to let me answer it. I was told that he misunderstood my remark, which was that he had aided the republican party during

Mr. WEAVER. I understand all that now.

Mr. SPARKS. To relieve the gentleman from that I made my statement. The gentleman talks about what he will do within the reach ment. The gentleman talks about what he will do within the reach of his arm. Sir, that gentleman could not do anything "within the reach of his arm." I spurn with contempt the reach of his arm. The reach of his arm would affect me about as little as it affected the last presidential election. [Laughter.]

Mr. WEAVER. That is sufficient. Does not the gentleman now see that he ought never to open his mouth at all when he is excited? He spurns the reach of my arm. He can well do so in the temper I now am in. I would not hurt a hair of his head. His apology was ample, and I accept it as such. But I only caution him against the further use of such expressions as, "That is a falsehood," "That is a lie." In Kentucky, I believe, such an expression is regarded as the first blow, and even if I was not as large as a mouse, I would show a proper spirit. And the gentleman is mistaken about my fighting weight; it is one hundred and eighty-five pounds. [Great laughter.]

Mr. SPARKS. And the gentleman will understand that mine is two hundred and fifteen pounds. [Laughter.] Does the gentleman say that I said he was a liar?

Mr. WEAVER. The gentleman said it was a falsehood, which is the same thing.

the same thing. Mr. SPARKS.

You said so.

Mr. WEAVER. No.
Mr. SPARKS. Yours were the first offensive words.
Mr. WEAVER. No, you cannot make that out.
Mr. SPARKS. The gentleman certainly used the first offensive words.
Mr. WEAVER. Well, we are all right now.
Mr. SPARKS. You misunderstood me and said that I was stating that which was not true and wanting the qualities of a gentleman that which was not true, and wanting the qualities of a gentleman you failed to remedy it.

Mr. WEAVER. Oh, no.

Mr. SPARKS. That is all about it. I think it was developed at the last election that you wanted those qualities.

Mr. WEAVER. I denounce the gentleman personally as a liar on the floor of this House.

Mr. SPARKS. You are a scoundrel and a villain and a liar. [Mr. Weaver then approached Mr. Sparks in a menacing attitude.] If you get within my reach I will hit you.

The members of the committee generally rose to their feet, and many came to the front, some of them interposing between the parties.

The SPEAKER took the chair and called the House to order, saying: The Speaker has taken the chair for the purpose of restoring order, believing that parliamentary propriety and practice justify him in so doing.*

The Sergeant-at-Arms, (by direction of the Speaker,) with his mace of office, moved about the floor of the House, and order was restored. The SPEAKER. The Speaker will now yield the chair to the chairman of the Committee of the Whole, order being restored.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the House now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would prefer to have the Committee of the Whole rise in due form.

Mr. COVERT, as chairman of the Committee of the Whole, then took the chair.

took the chair. Mr. WEAVER. I believe I have the floor now, but I will yield for a motion that the committee rise.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COVERT reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4592) to facilitate the refunding of the public debt, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

Mr. McLANE. I move that the House now adjourn.

Mr. WARNER. Pending the motion to adjourn I ask consent to have printed in the RECORD—

Many Members. "Regular order!"
The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion that the House

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

Wednesday, December 22, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D. The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved. VISITORS TO WEST POINT AND ANNAPOLIS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT, pursuant to law, appointed Mr. MORRILL and Mr. Pendleton members of the Board of Visitors on the part of the Senate to attend the next annual examination of the cadets at the United States Military Academy at West Point, New York, and Mr. Allison and Mr. Morgan as members of the Board of Visitors

^{*}In a committee of the whole, the tellers on a division differing as to numbers, great heats and confusion arose, and danger of a decision by the sword. The Speaker took the chair, the mace was forcibly laid on the table; whereupon, the members retiring to their places, the Speaker told the House "he had taken the chair without an order, to bring the House into order." Some excepted against it; but it was generally approved as the only expedient to suppress the disorder. And overy member was required, standing up in his place, to engage that he would proceed no further, in consequence of what had happened in the grand committee, which was done.—3 Grey, 128.

be printed.

Mr. McPHERSON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1783) relating to the survey and disposal of unsurveyed lands, keys, and islands belonging to the United States, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

SETTLERS ON RESTORED RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. BOOTH. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 6256) for the relief of certain settlers on restored railroad lands, to report it favorably and without amendment, and to request its present consideration.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir, I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont objects to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. BOOTH. I file with the Senate the report of the House Committee on Public Lands, which the Senate Committee has adopted.
Mr. EDMUNDS subsequently said: After explanation by my friend from California, [Mr. BOOTH,] and on his responsibility and not mine, I withdraw the objection I made to the present consideration of the bill he reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from California renews his request that the Senate may consider at this time the bill reported

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 6256) for the relief of certain settlers on restored railroad lands. It provides that all persons who shall have settled and made valuable and permanent improvements upon any odd-numbered section of land within any railroad withdrawal, in good faith, and with the permission or license of the railroad company for whose benefit the same shall have been made, and with the expectation of purchasing of such company the land so settled upon, which land so settled upon and improved may, for any cause, be restored to the public domain, and who, at the time of such cause, be restored to the public domain, and who, at the time of such restoration, may not be entitled to enter and acquire title to such land under the pre-emption, homestead, or timber-culture acts of the United States, shall be permitted, at any time within three months after such restoration, and under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of the General Land Office may prescribe, to purchase not to exceed one hundred and sixty acres in extent, by legal subdivisions, at the price of $2.50 per acre, and to receive patents therefor.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading read the third time and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BAYARD (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1959) for the relief of Charles H. Frank; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to intro-duce a bill (S. No. 1960) to amend section 5171 and repeal section 5176 of the Revised Statutes, in relation to the circulation of national banks; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BAYARD. This bill was prepared by the Department, and I move that it be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1961) to establish a post-route in Missouri; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on

Mr. WINDOM asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1962) appropriating money for the purchase of a site and the erection of a suitable building for a post-office and other Government offices in the city of Minneapolis, State of Minnesota; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BOOTH asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1963) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BLAINE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1964) for the relief of Greenleaf Cilley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BROWN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1965) to appropriate money to remove obstructions and improve the navigation of the Chattahoochee River, in Georgia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

CIVIL-SERVICE REFORM BILLS.

Mr. RANSOM, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and

Resolved, That 500 extra copies of Senate bill No. 1914 and Senate bill No. 1915-be printed for the use of the Senate.

COUNT OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to call up the resolution I offered at the last session of Congress relating to the power of the Vice-President of the United States or President of the Senate in counting the votes of electors for President and Vice-President; and at the conclusion of some remarks which I propose to submit upon that subject, if no other Senator desires to debate the question, I shall ask the Senate to consider the resolution and act upon it; otherwise I shall move its reference to the select committee on that subject.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator from Alabama will not call up that resolution this morning. I think that after what the Senator shall say—of course I know in general his views upon the subject—it may be desirable that something further should be said on the same occasion, and I think there are matters of greater urgency at this research research that leat days of support the same occasion. this present moment, the last day of our present sitting, than that one. Therefore I hope the Senator will not ask the Senate to take up his resolution this morning but defer it until the first day of our next meeting.

Mr. MORGAN. I will state that it is a courtesy seldom denied to a Senator to allow him to call up a resolution for the purpose of making remarks upon it. I submitted this resolution at the last session of the Senate; I think it is now important that the subject should be brought to public attention, and I desire to have the action of the Senate upon it; but if any Senator wishes to debate it and has objection to its consideration, I will not move its consideration at this time, but will consent that it go over until such time as Senators can have an opportunity of making such remarks upon it as they choose. But I really regard the subject as one of importance, and I much prefer to proceed with my remarks now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is undoubtedly one of importance, but I hardly Mr. EDMUNDS. It is undoubtedly one of importance, but I hardly think that any complaint of want of courtesy can justly be made when it is proposed to enter upon an important debate on the last day of our present sitting, and when practically there would be no fair and convenient opportunity for immediate reply. That is my point, and that is why it is that I ask the Senator not at this last moment to take up the resolution and debate it from his point of view without there being any practical opportunity for further consideration at this time. The Senator I am sure knows that I would not wish to be guilty of the slightest want of courtesy to him; but in the interest of a fair consideration of all views of the question I do not think that the resolution ought to be taken up at this modo not think that the resolution ought to be taken up at this moment, and have one set of views presented without the reasonable possibility of having another set of views presented, if there should be another set of views

Mr. MORGAN. I think the Senator from Vermont will find, after he has heard my remarks, that he has really nothing to urge against them, unless, indeed, he takes up the record of his own course on this subject in the Senate and undertakes to demolish that. I think that my remarks will be entirely in the line of the course which the Senator has heretofore taken on this question in the Senate, and so I expect not to find in him an antagonist in the course of the views which I shall express before the Senate, if I am permitted to go on.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator, if it is agreeable to him, what length of time he thinks he will occupy?

Mr. MORGAN. I think not more than forty minutes.
Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is aware that from particular considerations to which I cannot here refer, it is desirable that important public business connected with the administration of the Government should be done to-day before we adjourn and before we find ourselves without a quorum. I think it would be a great misfortune to the public interests to run any risk of doing what it is necessary the Senate should do for a little while by a discussion of a topic of this character; and I should be glad to submit a motion at the present time, but I will not take the Senator off his feet.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask leave to have an order made, which will take

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will receive morning business, after which he will recognize the Senator from Alabama.

REPORTING FOR COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, from the "miscellaneous items" of the contingent fund of the Senate, for reporting any testimony which may be taken in connection with appropriation bills, &c., for the Committee on Appropriations, the vouchers to be approved by the chairman of said committee and andited by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask for the present consideration of the resolu-

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that to be a standing order?
Mr. ALLISON. It is to be an order for the present session.
Mr. EDMUNDS. Then you had better insert the words "at this session."

Mr. ALLISON. I will insert "at the present session."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa asks the Senate to consider the resolution at this time. Is there objection?

Mr. MORGAN. I object.

Mr. ALLISON. I trust no Senator will interpose an objection to the seolution. It is rather important we should take some testimony— Mr. MORGAN. I withdraw my objection.

By unanimous consent, the resolution was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and

COUNT OF ELECTORAL VOTES.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, as to the especial matter suggested by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] I think he will find that there will be no necessity for being apprehensive about that. I will therefore ask permission of the Senate to proceed briefly to deliver my remarks on the resolution which I now call up.

Mr. President—*
Mr. EDMUNDS. The resolution is not up yet, is it?
The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not. The resolution will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the following resolution, submitted by Mr. Morgan June 15, 1880:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That the President of the Senate is not invested by the Constitution of the United States with the right to count the votes of electors for President and Vice-President of the United States so as to determine what votes shall be received and counted or what votes shall be rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama,

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is the resolution now before the Senate?
The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is; and the Chair recognizes the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I introduced the resolution at the last session of Congress in anticipation of a state of affairs which has already been realized, and that is, the assertion on the part of a large number of gentlemen in both Houses of Congress, as I believe, of the doctrine that the Vice-President, when acting as President of the Senate, has a right to count the electoral votes for President and Vice-President. I will read such portions of the Constitution of the United States as I think bear directly upon this question. Article 1, section 2, provides that section 2, provides that-

The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature.

Section 3 of the same article provides that-

The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have

Article 2, section 1, provides that-

Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof shall direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an elector.

to the age of thirty-five years, and been fourteen years a resident within the United

In case of the removal of the President from office, or of his death, resignation, or inability to discharge the powers and duties of the said office, the same shall devolve on the Vice-President, and the Congress may by law provide for the case of removal, death, resignation, or inability, both of the President and Vice-President, declaring what officer shall then act as President, and such officer shall act accordingly, until the disability be removed, or a President shall be elected.

Before he enter on the execution of his office, he shall take the following oath or

Fore the enter of the execution of his office, he shall take the following office affirmation:—
"I do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my ability preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States."

Then the twelfth article of amendment to the Constitution pro-

The electors shall meet in their respective States and vote by ballot for President and Vice-President, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same State with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as President, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as Vice-President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as Vice-President, and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as Vice-President, and they shall sign and certify, and transmit sealed to the seat of government of the United States, directed to the President of the Senate. The President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted;—the person having the greatest number of votes for President, shall be the President, if such number a majority of the whole number of electors appointed; and if no person have such majority, then from the persons having the highest numbers not exceeding three on the list of those voted for as President, the House of Representatives shall choose immediately, by ballot, the President. But in choosing the President, the votes shall be taken by States, the representation from each State having one vote; a quorum for this purpose shall consist of a member or members from two-thirds of the States, and a majority of all the States shall be necessary to a choice. And if the House of Representatives shall not choose a President whenever the right of choice shall devolve upon them, before the 4th day of March, next following, then the Vice-President shall act as President, as in the case of the death or other constitutional disability of the President.

I will also read section 1756 of the Revised Statutes, which con-

I will also read section 1756 of the Revised Statutes, which contains the oath of office which the Vice-President of the United States is required to take:

Every person elected or appointed to any office of honor or profit, either in the civil, military, or naval service, excepting the President and the persons embraced by the section following, shall, before entering upon the duties of such office, and before being entitled to any part of the salary or other emoluments thereof, take and subscribe the following oath: "I.A. B., do solemnly swear (or affirm) that I have never voluntarily borne arms against the United States since I have been a citizen thereof; that I have voluntarily given no aid, countenance, counsel, or encouragement to persons engaged in armed hostility thereto; that I have neither sought, nor accepted, nor attempted to exercise the functions of any office whatever, under any authority, or pretended authority, in hostility to the United States; that I have not yielded a voluntary support to any pretended government, authority, power, or constitution within the United States, hostile or inimical thereto. And I do further swear (or affirm) that, to the best of my knowledge and ability, I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion, and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which I am about to enter, so help me God."

"Mr. President, the true construction of the parts of the Constitution."

Mr. President, the true construction of the parts of the Constitution above quoted presents the most delicate and dangerous question in American politics. The wide diversity of opinion which has existed for nearly a century in the minds of the most eminent jurists and statesmen of the country on this subject, and the frightful dangers with which it has so often beset the course of government, are enough to compel every true citizen to give his assistance toward some satisfactory remedy of this difficulty.

No man can afford to say that the way to the ascertainment of the result of a presidential election is entirely clear and plain. The language of the Constitution does not furnish a positive, distinct, and express rule, either as to the tribunal that is empowered to count the votes of the electors, or as to the manner of ascertaining what votes have been rightfully and lawfully cast, or as to the tribunal that is to decide upon the eligibility of the electors to hold that office, or the qualification of the person who receives a majority of the electoral vote to hold the office of President or Vice-President. All these matters and many other like questions depend for their solution, not upon the express language of the Constitution, but upon its proper construction.

There is a most unfortunate obscurity of meaning in the organic law which is constantly exposing the country to the danger of having a President counted in or counted out of his election through the mere construction of the Constitution by men whose passions are aflame with partisan zeal or hate, or whose most vital interests are involved in the election of their favorite. We must forget all the history of our race before we can be content while such dangers are lurking in our system of government.

lurking in our system of government.

But owing to the obscurity of the text the true meaning of the parts of the Constitution above copied can only be settled by construction and the instinct of self-preservation, if no other motive requires us to adopt a just and reasonable construction, and to adhere to it in any and every event. The moment when an election is to be ascertained and declared is of all other times the least propitious for coming to a wise, just, and true conclusion as to the meaning of the Constitution. This should be settled in advance of a presidential election. In May, 1880, before either of the great political parties had made its nominations for President and Vice-President, the Senate declared its construction of the Constitution in reference to some of the most important of the questions that have heretofore arisen The Congress may determine the time of choosing the electors, and the day on which they shall give their votes; which day shall be the same throughout the United States.

No person except a natural-born citizen, or a citizen of the United States at the time of the adoption of this Constitution, shall be eligible to the office of President; neither shall any person be eligible to that office who shall not have attained of the most important of the questions that have heretofore arisen on these clauses of that instrument; but the House of Representatives failed at its last session to act on the proposed measure or to send any other to the Senate for its action; and the measure still hangs in doubt in that body, so that we are still left without any agreement upon any of these grave and difficult matters unless we are required to meet and conduct the count of the votes of electors cast on the 2d day of December, 1880, under the twenty-second joint rule, which the Senate has discarded, but which the House has never agreed to rescind. Either horn of this dilemma is needlessly dangerous to the tranquillity of the country. Some agreement should be made before the Houses meet in February to count the votes of the electors by which it shall be determined who is to count the votes, and also as to the procedure of the Houses when they are brought together.

together.

If the Senate and House of Representatives fail to make such agreement, then we are to be left to all the hazards of an obstinate or violent controversy over a subject that has never failed in all the nations of the earth to excite and alarm the people—the right of succession to the supreme executive power. When the Houses have failed to agree, then safety requires that the people shall agree as to the proper construction of the Constitution, so as to give the valuable and effectual support of public opinion to that party or body which the people believe has the right of the matter. It is time that the respect cheeple enterties.

which the people believe has the right of the matter. It is time that the people should consider this question.

What is the proper construction of the Constitution as to who must count the votes of electors? Does it mean that the vote shall be counted by the President of the Senate without control or direction, or shall it be counted by the direction of the Senate and House of Representatives?

of Representatives?

The office of all words found in the text of a law, whether it is organic law or ordinary legislation, is to define and explain the intent of the law-giver, and if the words used do not clearly define that intention, it must be gathered from the nature of the object or purpose to secure which the law was enacted. The guiding light, therefore, which we should follow in our effort to ascertain the true meaning of the parts of the Constitution which touch this controversy where other lights have failed should be the great object or purpose intended to be secured by their ordination.

The general purpose of our electoral system for the choice of the President and Vice-President of the United States is (I) that these officers shall be elected, and not that they shall be appointed; (II) that they shall be elected by the votes of the chosen representatives of the people of the respective States, and not by the direct vote of the people or the choice of one man. It is expressly required by the Constitution that a President and Vice-President shall be voted for by electors "appointed" in each State in the manner prescribed by the Legislature thereof, and that the votes of the electors shall be by ballot. This is the indispensable preliminary proceeding through which a title to the office of President or Vice-President is to be acquired. But this is only a preliminary step in the election of these efficers. The power of the electors ceases when they have voted by ballot, and have certified and transmitted their votes to the President of the Senate. It is a final and irrevocable act, and if they should all die the moment after this act is completed, and before their votes were counted, it would not affect the validity of the vote.

Another and distinct agency is created by the Constitution to take up the matter of the election of a President and Vice-President at the point where the power of the electors has ceased from exhaustion.

When the authority of that agent supervenes, it is only the power to further conduct an election that is partially completed. It is not a power to appoint a President, or to declare who is elected President, but the power to do the particular thing which the Constitution provides shall be done to complete the proceedings which the electors inaugurated, namely, to open the votes of the election, also required by the Constitution, that "the votes shall then be counted." It is the President of the Senate who is expressly required to open the certificates of the votes of the electors. As in the case of the electors, this is all that the Constitution requires of him, and he exhausts that power in its exercise. This is an important provision, and is necessary to the programme of the election arranged in the Constitution. It is necessary that the President of the Senate, to whom the votes of electors are required to be transmitted, should be able to identify the certificates that were sent to him by lawful authority, and that he should open all that had been so delivered to him.

If he should refuse to count the votes after opening them, that would not end the election; or if he should resign or die before they were counted, the election would be incomplete until they were counted; but his resignation or death would not stop or defeat the election. The Constitution requires that "the votes shall then be counted," and this must be done or else there can be no completed election. This proposition is not answered nor is its force impaired by the suggestion that another person could be chosen as President of the Senate to complete the work of the person who, while he held the office, refused or was disabled from performing it. If the President of the Senate is empowered to count the votes of electors, as well as to open the certificates when he begins the process of counting by opening the votes, he must complete it. If the power to count the votes is conferred upon him, as well as the power to open the certificates, the powers are not separable, and the same person who opens them must count them. If the Constitution commands him to count the votes as well as to open them, the mandate is that he shall perform both acts, and not that he shall do one thing and may do the other or omit to do it at his option. He must proceed with and complete both duties. He must do all that the Constitution requires him to do. If he can take a recess between the act of opening and the act of counting, or if he can resign or should die in that interim, the same thing could as well occur after he had commenced the count and had counted five of the thirty-five votes of New York, leaving the remaining thirty to be counted or not as his successor might determine.

counted five of the thirty-live votes of New York, leaving the remaining thirty to be counted or not as his successor might determine.

The act of opening the packets containing the certificates of the votes of electors and the act of counting the votes are separate and distinct acts, and each is separately provided for. "The President of the Senate shall "" open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted." The reason of distinguishing and separating between these acts in the grammar of this sentence is, clearly, that the acts to be performed are of different natures and were intended to be performed by different officials. The power conferred on the President of the Senate is given in definite, distinct, and express terms. This was done so as to limit his authority to the particular act required, and to prevent him, as President of the Senate, and in virtue of his office, from exerting a power to count the votes in the presence of his colleagues in the Senate and his peers in the House, and thereby exclude them from uttering a word for the protection of the people that they represent. Opening the certificates is only a ministerial act requiring no exercise of judgment above that required to open a snuff-box; while the counting of the votes is essentially the exercise of a judicial power, and one that demands the highest exercise of judgment, the most perfect integrity, and the purest impartiality, of any other in the whole range of moral or official duty. If it was intended to confer this highest reach of judicial power on one man, to be exercised in the presence of three hundred and sixtynine dumb representatives of the States and of the people, who are required to be present, and are only permitted to remain and look on while he mentally counts the vote, and then states it, why was the expression in this sentence changed from the express mandate that "the President of the Senate shall open all the certificates" to the less definite and more general form of expression which would apply as well

It was so easy and natural to have said grammatically that "the President of the Senate shall open all the certificates and then count the votes," that it is utterly incredible that language should have been used to convey this meaning, which violates the plainest rules of syntax, and condemns its authors as wanting the capacity to express the simplest thought in an intelligible way. The true construction is that after the President of the Senate has performed his ministerial function of opening "the certificates," then the election is to be completed by counting the votes. Now, whether this act of counting the vote is more or less judicial than it is ministerial in its nature, it is part of the procedure required by the Constitution in holding an election. An election consists in voting and counting. The various parts of the machinery requisite to provide for voting and for counting the votes are necessary facilities in holding an election. The election is a result lawfully attained through various acts of different persons in voting and counting the votes, and the election is not complete until the votes are counted and the result is ascertained.

Is the President of the Senate the only person who can count the votes of electors and ascertain the result? Is he the one person who alone can complete the election in which the electors do all the voting, and in which he is expressly prohibited from voting? Is this the true construction of the Constitution? The answer which logically interposes itself as an immovable barrier to this construction of the Constitution is, that the whole purpose of the Constitution, in its provisions touching the election of a President and Vice-President of the United States, is to secure to the people of the States, respectively, the right to elect these officers through their chosen representatives—men chosen for that purpose. This right is secured to them when their representatives in the electoral college vote for President and Vice-President, and when their representatives in the Senate and in the House complete the election by counting the votes and ascertaining the result. It cannot be secured to them when a Vice-President, elected to an executive office, and not to a representative office, completes the election by counting the vote according to his will and pleasure, unconstrained by the responsibilities attaching to a representative of the people; nor is it secured when a Senator from Ohio, being President of the Senate by the election of that body, and not by the vote of the people of any other State except Ohio, may complete the election by counting the votes. In a construction of the Constitution which allows the President of the Senate to count the votes of the electors, and to ascertain the result, the whole idea of the representation of the people of the several States in the election of President and Vice-President is sunk out of sight.

Constitution which allows the President of the Senate to count the votes of the electors, and to ascertain the result, the whole idea of the representation of the people of the several States in the election of President and Vice-President is sunk out of sight.

A construction of a clause in the Constitution which destroys a right expressly secured to the people in another part of the instrument, or by its general tenor and effect, cannot be sound or safe. To prevent a failure of the people to elect a President through their chosen representatives, two electoral bodies are expressly provided for in the Constitution, and each of them is a representative body. The first is the colleges of electors chosen in the States, and the second is the membership of the House of Representatives, elected directly by the people of the respective States. The second electoral body is the counterpart of the first as a representative body, but it votes on a different basis. The Senate is excluded from this body, but the States are made exactly equal by the method of voting, so that Rhode Island and New York have the same weight in electing a President.

In construing the Constitution we certainly are not at liberty to ignore this important exemplification of the great principle that the ignore this important exemplification of the great principle that the people have kept in the hands of their own representatives all the power relating to the election of a President and Vice-President. In the second electoral body the House represents the people and the States, not as a Legislature, but as a great and peculiar constitutional tribunal, "a high council of state," with full power to elect a President, but not a Vice-President; yet confined in their selection to not more than three men for whom the people through their first body of representatives have voted. They not only represent the people in voting, but they must follow their nomination of the persons to be voted for.

In the case of an election by the House of Representatives, it would be as reasonable to say that the Speaker of the House should count the votes cast by the States, and at his pleasure refuse to count such as he might choose to reject, as to say, in the other case, that the President of the Senate should have such powers because he is required to open the certificates.

Many other reasons could be assigned in opposition to the construc-tion of the Constitution which claims for the President of the Senate the right to count the votes of electors without the aid or direction the right to count the votes of electors without the aid or direction of the two Houses, but I will present only one other view. It cannot be truly said that the power to count the votes of electors is expressly granted to the President of the Senate by the Constitution. The Senate has, by solemn resolution, which it had the right to adopt, declared that its President, when elected by it, holds his office at the pleasure of that body, and may be removed at any time. It cannot be that this great power to count the votes for the Presidency and to ascertain the result of an election was intended to be given to the office of "President of the Senate" without any reference to the fact that the Senate can remove its incumbent at any moment. that the Senate can remove its incumbent at any moment. Have we lodged a power that involves the whole destiny of the people and the fate of their government in a mere office whose occupant comes and goes like a shadow of the clouds, according to the will or caprice of the Senate?

If the President of the Senate, in counting the votes of the electors, should thwart the will of a majority of that body, they could, in the absence of the Vice-President, return to their Chamber and depose him; and put a man there with a more pliant conscience who would do their bidding. In that case the Senate would virtually elect the President; or it could force the election upon the House of Representatives by deposing their President and refusing to elect his successor. The absurdities that follow this doctrine are so numerous and gross and have been so often exposed that there is no need to and gross and have been so often exposed that there is no need to call further attention to them. It is the present danger in which this doctrine threatens to involve the country that needs to be disoussed.

It may be conceded, for the sake of argument, that a President of the Senate, whether he is Vice-President, or a Senator, would act fairly and wisely in counting the votes; but "the one-man power" is hoshie to the spirit and genius of our popular government.

The President of the United States comes nearer than any other person in our Government to the possession of autocratic power. But he is guarded at every point with the requirement of obedience to the laws and the Constitution fastened upon his conscience by the obligations of his cath and even by severe penalties for their violation. tions of his oath, and even by severe penalties for their violation. The Supreme Court cannot be held by one man, and the legislative department consists of two Houses and many men. The electors of department consists of two Houses and many men. The electors of President and Vice-President are collections of numerons men in the several States. The one-man power is an alien enemy to our system. No more complete description could be given, however, of the one-man power than is presented in an exact statement of the power to be exercised by a "President of the Senate" when he is deciding the result of an election for President and Vice-President of the United States. No man can point out the clauses of the Constitution or of the laws that are to control him in arriving at his conclusions when he counts the vote; or that provide for his punishment if he makes a corrupt decision; or for the correction of his errors or mistakes, however gross they may be. He can silently count the vote in his own mind, and state a conclusion that is as little open to question as the ukase of a Russian czar. The Houses of Congress, though required to be present, are merely the accessories to give state and dignity to the expressions of the will of one man, whose will is the supreme law of the land.

They have no right to question his judgment, or to deny the consupreme law of the land.

They have no right to question his judgment, or to deny the conclusiveness of his decrees, or to require him to inform them of the reasons for his action in admitting or excluding the votes of electors. His unexplained will is made the sole arbiter of the greatest event in government, and the people are required to bow to it while they declare that the President of the Senate "can do no wrong." The construction of the Constitution that makes it necessary to find warrant in its provisions for such a monarch as this must destroy every other part of the instrument which alludes to the republican form of the government, or the right of the people to rule through their selected representatives. When any party attempts to crown a mere despot to rule the people in the great and vital act of electing their President, and to solemnly proclaim his right thus to determine their destiny according to his own unaided judgment and uncontrolled will, it must create a degree of alarm and agitation in the country that will be disastrous if persisted in.

There cannot be the same degree of security in the count of the votes of electors by the President of the Senate as is guaranteed by a count under the direction of the two Houses of Congress. These tribunals that the three tool of the two Houses of Congress. These tribulars have a direct responsibility to the people, and are in full sympathy with them, and hold toward them the responsible relation of Representatives them, and hold toward them the responsible relation of Representatives chosen directly by them. If there is any doubt, therefore, as to the meaning of the clauses of the Constitution in question, every consideration of respect for the theory of the Government and for the supreme power of the people to begin, conduct, count, ascertain, and declare an election of President and Vice-President, through their chosen representatives, should influence us to resolve that doubt in favor of the power of the people's representatives. It cannot be safely or justly resolved in favor of the "one-man power" lodged in the hands of a man who is not in any constitutional sense a representative of the people, when he is holding an office to which is merely attached the ex officio duty of presiding over the Senate. The settled practice of this Government to count the votes by tellers appointed in each House that has prevailed since the second term of Washingin each House that has prevailed since the second term of Washington's administration, without exception, is a strong declaration against the power of the President of the Senate to count the votes. It may not be an authority as to the manner in which the two Houses may proceed to settle an objection that may arise to the counting of a vote, but it is a clear assertion of their right to participate in the count through their previously elected officers.

This question has been frequently mooted in Congress, and the opinion has always largely prevailed when the question has been brought to a test that the President of the Senate has not the right to count the votes of electors. The first actual test of the question was made on the 6th of February, 1865, in the adoption of the twentywas made on the 6th of February, 1865, in the adoption of the twentysecond joint rule by the concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress. It was then affirmatively decided that the power to direct what votes should be counted and what votes should be rejected resided in the two Houses, each voting separately. That rule declared that "no question shall be decided affirmatively and no vote objected to shall be counted except by the concurring vote of the two Houses." Language could not be more definite to exclude the power of the President of the Senate to count the votes of electors. Under this rule the second election of Mr. Lincaln and both elections of Genthis rule the second election of Mr. Lincoln and both elections of General Grant were counted. When the election in 1876 was to be counted the republicans were afraid to risk this twenty-second rule because the House of Representatives was democratic. A dead-lock between the Houses would have carried the election into the House of Representatives was democratic. sentatives, and the majority of the States were democratic. The movement to get rid of the twenty-second joint rule was begun in the Senate on the 20th of January, 1876, when it was known that the House of Representatives would be democratic in February, 1877, when the presidential election was to be counted.

The rule was not repealed or rescinded, but was dropped by the Senate on the ground that the House had not adopted any joint rules to govern the Forty-fourth Congress; and that the adoption of joint rules by each Congress was necessary to keep them in force. Under rules by each Congress was necessary to keep them in force. Under this view there remained no law or rule governing the count of the electorial vote, and the way was opened for the enactment of the law creating the electoral commission. That law expressly negatived the right of the President of the Senate to count the votes of electors. This should be enough, it seems, at least to abate the zeal of republicans for the establishment now of a power which that party has uniformly denied to the President of the Senate, and from party has uniformly denied to the President of the Senate, and from which they have expressly excluded him by joint rules and by law. Having thus counted four elections in defiance of the supposed power of the President of the Senate to count the votes, they now suddenly claim that power for him and defy the Houses of Congress to deprive him of it. This is done for a purpose that will be of importance four years after date, and only for that purpose. The danger to the country of a course so vacillating and so destitute of respect for principle in dealing with a great constitutional question is forcibly stated in the following extract from the celebrated report of Oliver P. Morton from the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, of which he was chairman, on the 28th of May, 1874:

Of which he was chairman, on the 25th of May, 1874:

Upon the hypothesis that the President of the Senate has the power to open and count the electoral votes, and that the two Houses are to be present merely as witnesses and have no jurisdiction over the subject, either jointly or separately, everybody must perceive that it is a vast and dangerous power to repose in the hands of one man, especially when he may be ardently devoted to the fortunes of a great party, or when he may be personally interested, sitting as a judge in his own case; for it has happened six times in the history of our Government that the President of the Senate has opened and counted the votes for himself either for President or Vice-President. In 1737 John Adams, as Vice-President, opened the votes for himself and declared himself elected President. In 1801 Jefferson, as President of the Senate, opened and counted the votes for himself when he and Burr were the candidates for President.

In 1821 Vice-President Tompkins, as President of the Senate, opened and counted the votes for himself, he being a candidate for re-election; and in 1837 Mr. Van Buren, then Vice-President and declared himself elected. In 1841 Richard M. Johnson, then Vice-President, opened and counted the votes for himself as President, opened and counted the votes for himself selected. In 1841 Richard M. Johnson, then Vice-President, opened and counted the votes for his re-election as against Mr. Tyler, the opposing candidate; and in 1861 Mr. Breckenridge, then President of the Senate, opened and counted the votes for himself as a candidate for the Presidency.

Clearly the framers of the Constitution did not contemplate that the President of the Senate, in opening and counting the vote for President and Vice-President, should exercise any discretionary or judicial power in determining between the votes of two sets of electors, or upon the sufficiency or validity of the record of the votes of the electors in any State; but that he should perform a merely ministerial act, of which the two Houses were to be witnesses and to make record.

If it should happen upon the recurrence of any one of the cases we have been considering, that the decision of the President of the Senate should determine the result and give the Presidency to the candidate who would otherwise have been defeated, or throw the election into the House of Representatives, where the candidate who had been rejected by the people should be elected by the vote of the States, all can understand the imminent peril in which the nation would be placed. In 1801, when Mr. Jefferson, as President of the Senate, counted the vote as between himself and Aaron Burr for President, it turned out to be a tie vote, and had there then been a question or contest in regard to a single vote, such as exist to day in regard to several, he might have decided himself elected, and the nation would have been without redress. Such a temptation, springing lion-like upon a man of less patriotism and weaker virtue, backed by a great party, in a season of high excitement, might have proved fatal to the peace of the nation.

When we have passed the question of who shall count the vote the dangers of violent disagreement as to how the vote shall be counted are not formidable. On several occasions such questions have been settled by the Houses without any previous agreement as to the methods of procedure. However strong the strife may be between the members of Congress, they always gain enough of equa-nimity at the supreme moment to remember their direct responsibility to the people; and their keen sense of gratitude for favors to come nerves them to render obedience to the Constitution and the laws and nerves them to render obedience to the Constitution and the laws and the will of the people.

There is a broad and potential distinction between assuming the brunt of personal responsibility for an unconstitutional course of action, and upholding a bold usurper after he has violated the Constitution by assuming to do a thing which others dread to attempt. One of the Houses of Congress might obstinately protect a President of the Senate in counting the votes of electors so as to secure the election of their favorite, when, if they were compelled to decide the count for themselves, they would shrink from assuming such responsibilities. It is safer to intrust the power to count and ascertain an election in the hands of any one man.

hands of any one man.

Much diversity of opinion has always existed, and between men of the greatest ability and experience in public affairs, as to the precise character in which the Houses of Congress must act when engaged in counting the votes of electors, or in directing the count. On one point, however, there is little or no disagreement, namely: that whatever decision the Houses may arrive at it is final and conclusive, and beyond the power of any other tribunal or department to review or reverse it. This would not be true of a decision of an election made by the President of the Senate in which the Houses should refuse to concur. This refusal to accept a final decision at his hands would destroy its effect, and the people would stand by the Houses. If the Houses should disagree as to the validity and correctness of a count of the votes by the President of the Senate, the House of Represent-atives would be compelled to count the vote for itself, and by itself, in order to determine whether the votes of the electors had, in fact, elected a President, and to determine whether the constitutional duty of electing a President had devolved upon them as the second electoral body.

If this decision of the House of Representatives should reverse the action of the President of the Senate the people would be most likely to sustain their own immediate representatives in their action. They would say that an election had been made by a constitutional body of electors, voting by States, and that such an election is of higher authority and more clearly rightful than an election in which one man has interfered under a merely constructive authority, and has decided without advice or assistance from either of the Houses. So that it will turn out that every such controversy will end in the ac-ceptance by the people and the Government of the decision made by both Houses, or when they fail to agree upon a count of the votes cast by the first body of electors, it will result in their acceptance of an election of the President by the second body of electors.

The two Houses can and always will control the President of the Senate, and will, at their option, accept or refuse any decision he may make as to the counting of the vote of any elector; and their decis-ion will be accepted by the country as final and conclusive. There is then nothing but a theory involved in the question whether the Houses shall act by concurrent resolution or by joint resolution or by bill in the prearrangement of the rules and regulations which shall govern them in counting the votes of electors.

Mr. Lincoln, with whom a great number of our most eminent constitutional lawyers have agreed in opinion, in the most self-abnegating and patriotic spirit, disclaimed the right, as President, to participate, directly or indirectly, in the government of the two Houses in this high and delicate duty. If his view was correct, it is undeniable that the only way in which the Houses can adopt rules for their government, in advance of their meeting to count the votes of electors, or even to witness the count, is by concurrent resolution. But as the decision of the Houses when reached will be final as to every the decision of the Houses, when reached, will be final as to every question involved in the election of a President, and will settle the title to the office, it cannot be a vital matter whether they have been governed by a law, or joint resolution, which is a law, or by a con-current resolution, which is only a rule or an agreement in reference to the procedure, by which the decision was had. When the Houses are met they can, if they choose, disregard or nullify a law or joint resolution, or a concurrent resolution, established for their government in counting the votes, without affecting the validity of the election, which they may ascertain and declare. It is far better in every way, and especially for the tranquillity of the country, that some rule should be agreed upon in advance of the count for the government of the Houses when met to discharge their constitutional duty.

The absence of some such agreement might, in a moment of pas sionate excitement, expose the country to fatal injury. The attitude of the democratic party in this matter, so far as it is declared by the vote of the Senate on the joint rule now under consideration in the House, may be thus stated: They prefer a joint rule to a joint resolution or a law to be approved by the President, because it better secures the Houses from the interference of the Executive in a matter where the greatest temptation would be present to give a personal bias to his action in the enactment or repeal of such a law. They agree with Mr. Lincoln's view, that the Houses are not constitutionally subject to the power of the Executive in the discharge of this great duty. They insist that the President of the Senate and the great duty. They insist that the President of the Senate and the Senate and House of Representatives, being expressly mentioned in the Constitution as participants in the counting of the votes, the President of the United States is as clearly excluded from any participants. ticipation in that power and duty as the judges of the Supreme Court or the General of the Army, because they are not mentioned in the

The two organized Houses, when met to count the vote, constitute "a high council of state and discretion," with powers both judicial and ministerial, adequate to the duties imposed upon it by the Constitution, acting independently of every other tribunal, and having exclusive jurisdiction of that particular matter. Its decrees are final and conclusive, and its free right of judgment is above the direct control of any other power or tribunal, and is only regulated or controlled trol of any other power or tribunal, and is only regulated or controlled by its sense of duty and its responsibility to the people whose repre-sentative it is. If this council is not able to ascertain that a Presi-dent has been elected by a majority of the votes of electors rightfully cast under the Constitution, then immediately the power to elect a President is devolved upon the House of Representatives, in which the vote is cast by each State through its Representatives in the House. If the two Houses, when met to count the votes fail, from any cause, to ascertain that an election has resulted from the votes of electors, the constitutional power of the House of Representatives of electors, the constitutional power of the House of Representatives to elect a President at once becomes perfect; and thereby the Government is saved from the danger of a vacancy in the office. So long as we adhere to the system of electing a President by electoral bodies, the voice of the people, that is now too indirectly expressed, should not be entirely silenced in the election by depriving their immediate representatives not only of power to guard their rights and to secure the execution of their will, but of power even to enter a protest against the act of one man, who may entirely disregard and annul their choice of a President and Vice-President.

Mr. President, if any Senator desires to debate this resolution now, I will consent that it be kept before the Senate; otherwise I shall move to refer it to the select committee on the subject.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I do not wish to debate this resolution at this time, but I wish to say two things. I wish to say in the first place that I agree with the Senator from Alabama that the President of the Senate has no power to count the vote for President in the sense of deciding anything about it. I wish to say also, and as part of the same phrase, that the House of Representatives and the Senate, together or separately, have no more power to count that vote, under the Constitution, than the President of the Senate, and that neither of them and not all of them together, as such, have power that neither of them and not all of them together, as such, have power to count the vote for President and Vice-President in the sense that I have described as undertaking to decide. The Constitution of the United States says that when these great public documents from States, presumed to be formal and right, have been opened, they shall be enumerated, footed up. Then the Constitution says that the man who has the greatest number of votes (under qualifications that I need not stop to consider now) shall be the President—not the man who the President of the Sensite serve has the greatest number of who the President of the Senate says has the greatest number of votes; not the man who the Senate and House of Representatives votes; not the man who the Senate and House of Representatives say has the greatest number of votes; but the man who on these documents being opened and displayed, has in fact the greatest number of votes, shall be the President. And I wish to add that I think he will be on this occasion, whether the House agrees to the unconstitutional and otherwise injurious proposition that the Senate passed at its last lession, or not, whether the House of Representatives agrees with the Senate to meet here or elsewhere, if there be any constituwith the Senate to meet here or elsewhere, if there be any constitutional power to compel the President of the Senate to go elsewhere to open the votes (about which I say nothing now) or not. When the day fixed by law comes, I have no doubt the votes will be constitutionally opened and that some constitutional count, if a count be constitutionally necessary, will be made; and the person who appears from those votes from States to have a majority, qualified as the Constitution qualifies it, will be the President, for the Constitution says that he shall be, and he will be.

The remarks of the Senator about the power of the President of the Senate and about the necessity of a jointrule—which is just as good in my opinion as a town meeting, and I think the Senate was unan-imously of that opinion when we agreed it ought not to be revived remind me of a remark imputed to the late President Lincoln. He was elected, as was agreed on all hands by gentlemen of all parties, fairly and squarely under the forms of the Constitution; I am not speaking of the political grievance of his election; but so far as the form and the method went he was known to have been elected. Having been elected, certain misguided persons over the country here and there said that he should not be counted in and that he should not be inaugurated, and so on. This being called to Mr. Lincoln's attention, he is reported to have said in his homely phrase "suppose the two Houses didn't meet and didn't proceed to attend on the constitutional occasion" he thought that the people who elected the President would see to it that he was set up. That was his homely and western phrase; and on this occasion when there is no possible question that any honand on this occasion when there is no possible question that any honest or intelligent man of any party will say exists, as there did exist four years ago, when no possible question exists, I wish to prophesy with firm faith that peacefully, constitutionally, and rightfully the President-elect of the United States of America will have the votes that have been returned to the Vice-President of the United States opened on the day fixed by law and a constitutional law, and that if the House of Representatives does not choose to attend they will be opened nevertheless on that occasion; and that if it appears, as we all understand the fact to be, that James A. Garfield, of Ohio, has the greatest and the constitutional number of votes, he will be, as the Constitution says he shall be, the President of the United States, and I have my friend from Alabama will not fash his heard, as the phrase is hope my friend from Alabama will not fash his beard, as the phrase is, on the subject of the necessity to guard against political calamities which may happen of having his joint rule adopted, which I believe and which the Senate when there was no bias of interest about it I think unanimously, certainly very nearly so, and certainly without regard to party, thought was wholly indefensible both in respect of its constitutional sway and in respect of the fitness of the thing itself.

I am willing now that this resolution shall be referred.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I am a little surprised to have heard from the Senator from Vermont this morning that the rule which passed the Senate at the last session in his opinion is unconstitutional.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I said so then. Mr. MORGAN. I did not remember that the Senator had made any point of unconstitutionality against that rule. If unconstitutionalit can only have been because of the manner of its adoption, not of the

with the bill the Senator himself brought forward.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is precisely the point. The Constitution declares that every bill and resolution requiring the assent of the two Houses, before it becomes operative shall be presented to the President of the United States. I maintain as I maintained when the electoral hill was before Congress that the power of making near the electoral bill was before Congress that the power of making necessary regulations where they are necessary, (as none are now happily,) resided in the law-making power of this Government; which is not the Senate and House of Representatives by a joint rule, but it is the law-making power, and that includes not merely the representatives of the States and of the congressional districts, but also the one representative of all the States and all the people fixed by the Constitution, the President of the United States. I stand in favor of the legislation of 1877 upon the ground that the Constitution required this thing to be done, and did not point out the specific way and method and regulations under which it should be done, but it did say that every power lodged in every department of the Government should be carried into effect by necessary and proper legislation by Congress,—laws passed by Congress to carry into effect every power vested in every department of the Government. That was my position then; that is my position now, that if you are going to interject into this, what was supposed to be, formality of the arithmetical computation of the votes of the States, regulations which are to take the character of decisions, not judicial in my opinion as the Senator says, but administrative, like those of a canvassing board in a State—if you give to those regulations any vitality you must give it to them by a law that the Constitution says Congress may pass to carry on every one of the operations of the Government. way and method and regulations under which it should be done, but ernment.

The Senator from Vermont has quoted a remark Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Vermont has quoted a remark of Mr. Lincoln, rather because of his expertness in trite sayings than his knowledge of constitutional law. He said that though the Houses might not meet for the purpose of counting the votes the people who elected the President would set him up. I am very happy that Mr. Lincoln did not say "although the President of the Senate might not count the votes." The Senator says also that he has no doubt at all that on the proper day fixed by law the two Houses will assemble, and that by some means or other they will ascertain the votes of the electors which have been cast in the recent election, and that they will state the result, and when that result is ascertained and stated the Constitution will go into effect and Mr. Garfield, who and stated the Constitution will go into effect and Mr. Garfield, who he says is elected, will then become the President of the United States without more.

Now, there is some regulation necessary for the conduct of the two bodies when they get together. Questions may arise. Particularly I cite the Senator's attention to a difficulty that is spoken of in reference to the count of the vote of Georgia. Difficulties may arise. The Senator thinks it the power and duty of Congress to provide by law in reference to the count of the votes, and he does not think we have any right to make a prearrangement of a joint rule through which these difficulties may be settled. He puts us in the position of having a President, counted by a method that he does not designate and does not attempt to describe, in the presence of the two Houses without any previous agreement and without any law. It seems to me that if the two Houses have the capacity thus to count the votes cast at an election and declare the result, they surely have the right and power to regulate their own conduct and action in advance of such meeting, and that too, without the assistance of the executive department. ing, and that, too, without the assistance of the executive department. The Constitution does not mention the President of the United States as being a participant in an election for President. If the language of the Constitution needs any construction on this subject at all, that construction must necessarily amount to his exclusion, unless the honorable Senator from Vermont can draw his power into this matter through the clause of the Constitution which he has cited in reference through the clause of the Constitution which he has cited in reference to the duty of Congress to enact laws for the purpose of carrying into effect all the provisions of the Constitution conferring proper and just powers on each department. But surely the President of the United States is not mentioned in the Constitution in this connection; he is to be drawn into it by construction; and I think I have cited an authority which even the honorable Senator from Vermont would de well to consider, an authority that stands very high in this country, especially among the republicans of this country, to show that in the opinion of a great committee of the Senate when it was presided over by Mr. Morton, and when there appears to have been little or no dispute about the propriety of the conclusions at which he arrived, it was asserted that the Vice-President of the United States ought not to be admitted to the exercise of this dangerous power under circumstances of great temptation, unless there was a clear and positive command to that effect in the Constitution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, my friend from Alabama I think has done injustice to the late Senator Morton in representing him as having such views as he has now expressed; but I do not mind about My learned friend from Alabama answers the suggestion that I made by saying that I am very expert in trite sayings.

Mr. MORGAN. I beg pardon, I said the Senator quoted Mr. Lincoln more because of his expertness in trite sayings than his knowledge of constitutional law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understood my honorable friend from Alabama to say—and there is no offense in it certainly—that I was used to trite sayings. He, I trust, will take no offense if I resolve the statement by saying that he is somewhat trite in what he has said, in what may be called expert sayings. The case perhaps is true both

My friend has given us a very able dissertation, but the most of it has been discussed over and over again and stated not with as much grace and force as the Senator from Alabama has stated it, but put forward as the views of a great many men. But we come back every time to this simple proposition, and that is the one the Senator states, that it is clear that the Constitution has not reposed in the President of the Senate, who is to open these votes, the power to count them in the sense of deciding. So say I, because the Constitution does not say that the President of the Senate shall then proceed to count and decide who is President and who is not. I say that the very same argument demonstrates from the fact that the Constitution says that shall be done in the presence of the two Houses, that neither nor both of them have any power to decide anything about the election of President and Vice-President of the United States until that power is given to them by law, as it might be given to anybody else, and not given to anybody else in the sense necessarily of a judicial decision but in the sense of an administrative one which stands good until some competent power, as we know in all cases, brings it into review and reverses it. But I do not care to prolong this discussion now; perhaps it is not very profitable because it has been all gone I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eighteen minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

CHANGE OF A BANK'S LOCATION.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4006) authorizing the Blue Hill National Bank of Dorchester, Massachusetts, to change its location and name, to report it without amendment; and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. No. 4006) authorizing the Blue Hill National Bank of Dorchester, Massachusetts, to change its location and name was considered, as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

D. T. KIRBY.

Mr. LOGAN. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to take up

Senate bill No. 965.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I do not rise to object to the Senator's motion; but it will be recollected that the day before yesterday, when the regular business of the Senate was superseded, Senate bill No. 877 was the regular order and was laid aside informally, subject to call. It will be recollected that yesterday we gave way to

Mr. LOGAN. What bill is that?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The bill to relieve the Treasurer of the amount deposited with the States, which was under discussion and laid aside when we went into executive session.

Mr. LOGAN. This bill will take but a moment.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I said that I did not rise to object to the Senator's bill, but I wish the Senate to understand that the bill to which I have called attention is the regular order subject to

The Chief Clerk read the bill (S. No. 965) for the relief of D. T. Kirby; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to strike out all the bill except the part that provides for Mr. Kirby's appointment in the Army.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is an amendment in the nature of a substitute reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LOGAN. Let that he read.

Mr. LOGAN. Let that be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

and insert:

That the provisions of law regulating appointments in the Army by promotion in the line are hereby suspended for the purposes of this act, and only so far as they affect D. T. Kirby; and the President can, if he so desire, in the exercise of his own discretion and judgment, nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint said D. T. Kirby, late a captain, to the same regiment, with the rank of captain, in any vacancy occurring in the grade of captain in said regiment: Provided, however, That no pay, compensation, or allowance whatever shall ever be given to said Kirby for the time between the dismissal of the said Kirby and the date of appointment hereunder: And provided further. That the acceptance of any benefit under this act by the said Kirby shall be taken and construed to be by his election a bar to any claim for pay or allowances from the date of his discharge to his acceptance of a commission, if one be granted him under the provisions of this act.

Mr. LOGAN. That is the substitute, and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. LOGAN. That is the substitute, and I hope it will be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the

SURPLUS REVENUE DEPOSITS.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Several Senators are asking for the floor. It is understood, if anything can be understood in the Senate, that the regular order is the bill referred to by myself, the bill to relieve the States of the $28,000,000 deposited with them. I shall not object to any bill coming up now unless it brings on a long debate, if that is the understanding of the Senate. If not, we ought to take up that bill.
Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator from West Virginia yield

Mr. JONES, of Fioria. Will the Senator from West Virginia yield to me for a moment?

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The matter may not be in proper form for a yielding; but if it is understood that that bill is the unfinished business, I am willing to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed by the Chief Clerk that it has not been treated as unfinished business.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I feared that might be the case; but as it was the unfinished business when we were last regularly at business, I want it now understood that it is the unfinished business which I hear no objection from any one and if the Chair cases. ness, to which I hear no objection from any one, and if the Chair so announces, I shall be satisfied.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia asks that the bill to which he refers be considered as the unfinished business of the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be so regarded.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That will do.

B. S. JAMES.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 60) for the relief of B. S. James. It will not require, in my judgment, three minutes. There is a very short report in the case which explains it fully. It is reported unanimously.

The bill was read for information.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not think we ought to take up that bill at

Mr. BUTLER. I am sure that when the Senator from Vermont hears a brief statement made by the Senator who has the bill in charge [Mr. GROOME] and a very short report read, he will not object to it. It involves an amount of about $400, which has been passed upon by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, who, passed upon by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, who, as I understand, unanimously reported in favor of the allowance. I think there can be no objection to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This bill is a bill which does not limit the amount the claimant is to have. It allows whatever the accounting officers of the Treasury may say he is entitled to.

Mr. BUTLER. But the Senator will understand that the accounting officers of the Treasury have reported the amount I have stated.

ing officers of the Treasury have reported the amount I have stated, as the report shows.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That may be true; but the accounting officers of the Treasury have a happy or unhappy way sometimes of reconsidering their reports, and I do not think we are in the habit of passing bills in this form. I am not now speaking of the claim at all, which may be perfectly correct; but at the tip-end of this present session to pass the bill in that form is going to do no good; but I should not be write willing to agree to it in the form passet. quite willing to agree to it in the form presented.

Mr. BUTLER. It can be amended in accordance with the sugges-

Mr. BUILER. It can be amended in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator, not to exceed a certain amount.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the way it usually goes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate take up the bill for consideration at this time? Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee. of the Whole

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is pretty quick. Let it be read, then, if we are to have it.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, de., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to B. S. James, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such sum as shall, upon reference to the proper accounting officers, be found justly due and payable to him for transportation of the mails over route numbered 5610 in the years 1869 and 1870.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now let us hear the report.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. GROOME May 20, 1880:

May 20, 1880:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 60) for the relief of B. S. James, report that they find the facts to be as stated in House Report 373, second session Forty-fifth Congress, which is as follows:

"In 1866 B. S. James became the lessee of the Laurens Railroad Company in the State of South Carolina. In 1867 the Laurens Railroad Company (James being lessee) contracted, by Joseph Crews, its superintendent, to carry the United States mails on route 5510 for $1,200 per annum. In 1869, Crews having been discharged from the superintendency, a controversy arose in regard to the rolling-stock of the road, which resulted in litigation, and the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post-Office Department, by a letter dated August 19, 1869, informed the claimant that Joseph Crews having written to the Department 'that H. R. Scott was the owner of the rolling-stock of the Laurens Railroad, and that he, Crews, was his agent, the account of the railroad company cannot be settled until this difference is adjusted between you.

"The decision of the court was in favor of claimant, but in the mean time the unexpended balance of the appropriation for the postal year in which the service was rendered was covered into the Treasury. The statement of the account furnished by the Post-Office Department shows a balance due for mail service on that route to September 30, 1870, to the amount of $408.03. The present bill provides that the claimant be paid such sum or sums as, upon reference to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, shall be found to be justly due and payable to him for transportation of the mails over said route between the 1st of January, 1869, and September 30, 1870. This is just and reasonable, and the committee report back the bill, with the recommendation that it do pass."

Your committee report back the bill and recommend its passage.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In order to make this bill conform to the usual form of such bills, I move to amend it by inserting in the proper place "not exceeding four hundred and eighty dollars and three cents." Mr. BUTLER. I have no objection to that amendment. Mr. GROOME. I accept that amendment on behalf of the committee

Mr. EDMUNDS. With that amendment on the report of the committee I do not see but that the bill is perfectly just.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Shall the bill as amended be reported to the Senate?

of the Senate?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The amendment must be agreed to. I have no doubt it will be; but it cannot be accepted in the technical sense.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported. The CHIEF CLERK. In line 5, after the word "sum," it is proposed to insert "not exceeding $408.03."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (H. R. No. 5384) granting permission to the Chamber of Commerce of New York to erect a statue on the sub-treasury building in the city of New York;

A bill (H. R. No. 1760) amending section 1852 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 6593) to provide a suitable pedestal to the monu-ment erected in honor of the late Admiral Farragut in Washington

City;
A bill (H. R. No. 6539) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to change the name of the yacht Stephen D. Barnes of Philadelphia;

A bill (S. No. 54) to enable the Secretary of War to purchase land to enlarge and protect the San Antonio arsenal.

STEPHEN POWERS.

I should be glad if the Senate would allow me to call up the bill (S. No. 1541) for the relief of Stephen Powers. It will take but a very few moments to consider the bill; and it is a meritorious bill, as I think I can show to the satisfaction of any Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to taking the bill up for consideration?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the bill be read for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read for informa-

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, dc., That the United States Court of Claims, before whom the said Stephen Powers was lately plaintiff against the United States, in cause numbered 9835 of the docket, for professional services, be, and is hereby, required to grant a new trial therein, and proceed to adjudicate the claim therein involved according to the principles of justice and equity, anything in any law of limitation to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That bill involves the question of removing the Mr. EDMUNDS. That bill involves the question of removing the statute of limitations, which has been a subject of debate in this body. There is one committee, I am sure, that, I think unanimously, without regard to party, has for the last two or three years, at least, reported against removing the statute. I hope that my friend from Texas will not call up that debatable subject at this time.

Mr. COCKRELL. To what committee does the Senator refer?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. COCKRELL. This bill was reported from the Judiciary Committee.

mittee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I never heard of it before.

Mr. MAXEY. The bill comes from the Judiciary Committee; and I wish to make a statement which I think will fully satisfy the Senator from Vermont or anybody else that the bill ought to pass.

The Supreme Court, in the United States vs. Lippitt, (10 Otto, 663,) conclusively settled the question that so long as a claim is pending before the proper Department the statute of limitation does not run. This suit was instituted in the Court of Claims within sixty days after the Department had finally decided adversely to the claimant. Hence the court was wrong in determining the question against him. The Supreme Court has decided in substance that question in the decision to which I refer. decision to which I refer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to taking up the bill at this time?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir; I object.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont objects.

CEMETERY LAND AT VICKSBURGH.

Mr. LAMAR. I ask to take up House bill No. 460. It is a very simple bill, recommended unanimously by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The Chief Clerk read the bill (H.R. No. 460) granting the right of way to the county of Warren, in the State of Mississippi, and to the Memphis and Vicksburgh Railroad Company, through the United States cemetery tract of land near Vicksburgh, Mississippi; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded mous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is there a report?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a report.

Mr. LAMAR. Let the report be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. Randolph December 14, 1880:

This act passed the House of Representatives at the last session of Congress. The object of the bill is to grant the right of way for a wagon-road through the military cemetery grounds, near Vicksburgh, Mississippi.

The Military Committee of the House, in its report favoring the passage of The Military Committee of the House, in its report lavoring the passage of the bill, says:

"A part of that tract is not included in the cemetery, because unfit for such a purpose. It lies between the wall and the water of the Mississippi. It is through it that the right of way is asked.

"The Government is making a road along the bank of the river from the city to the cemetery. The county, which has contributed two handsome bridges to this work, wishes to extend the road into the Yazoo Valley. The same route would be very advantageous to the railroad company, by enabling it to avoid high and steep hills which are on the other side of the cemetery."

As the rights to be conferred by the passage of this act are subject to the approval of the Secretary of War, the committee feel justified in recommending its passage, with an amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the amendment referred to in the report? The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the fellowing proviso:

Provided, That the right of way granted by this act shall not exceed fifty feet in width: And provided further, That said roads shall not be laid off so as to in any manner interfere with the plan of the cemetery.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator from Mississippi whether this fifty feet proposed will disturb any grave?

Mr. LAMAR. It will not; it will disturb nothing whatever. The proposed road is between the inclosure and the river.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is outside of the place of burial, then?

Mr. LAMAR. Yes, sir; it is not only outside the place of burial, but it is incapable of being made part of the cemetery.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amend-

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. F. King, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 358) appropriating $2,500 to meet the expenses of the international sanitary conference, invited to meet in Washington on the 1st of January, 1881; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

MRS. S. A. WRIGHT.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 730) for the relief of Mrs. S. A. Wright. It will, I think, occupy the attention of the Senate but a moment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read at length for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report read for information. The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. Ker-NAN May 22, 1880:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 730) for the relief of Mrs. S. A. Wright, widow of the late George Wright, which asks for remuneration for the use of his patent linchpin, adopted and used by the United States Government, make the following report:

May 20, 1862, George Wright invented a linchpin for field-artillery carriages, and shortly thereafter obtained a patent for said linchpin. The invention was adopted by the Ordnance Department and approved by the Secretary of War, under date of September, 1863, and since has been used by the United States.

There are filed with the record letters from five colonels commanding regiments of the United States Artillery. They regard the Wright linchpin as a meritorious invention; that it has answered its purpose in preventing such accidents as wheels coming off of field artillery in rapid traveling, or in traveling over rough ground. They are confirmed in this belief by their extended experience of the past war. Brevet Major-General R. B. Ayers, United States Army, commanding Second Artillery, states as follows:

"1st. That the use of the patent safety linchpin of George Wright did materially advance the public interests during the war of 1861, and was a great benefit to the Government.

"2d. I would consider $5,000 as a fair compensation from the Government for the use of said linchpin."

Brevet Brigadier-General H. R. Jackson, United States Army, commanding Light Battery K, First Artillery, late commanding Artillery Brigade, Tenth Army Corps, in his report recommends—

"That $20,000 be paid by the Government for the use of said linchpin; that it decidedly did advance the public interests materially during the war of 1861, and the public interests are being advanced by it at the present time."

Brevet Brigadier-General I. Vogdes, United States Army, commanding First Artillery, in transmitting the report of Jackson to the Secretary of War, states as follows:

"Capitaling Jackson has commanded the light battery of his regiment since August, Ithlery, in transmitting the report of Jackson to the Secretary of War, states as follows:

"Captain Jackson has commanded the light battery of his regiment since August, 1873. He commanded a light battery during part of the war, and was also an inspector general, so that he has had ample opportunities of judging of the merits of the linchpin referred to."

Brigadier-General S. V. Benét, Chief of Ordnance, in his report under date of February, 18, 1880, to the Secretary of War, relative to said linchpin, says:

"The views of experienced artillery officers who have used and are now using this invention, and whose opinions are of great value in determining the amount to be paid, deserve careful consideration. Colonel Ayers deems $5,000 'as a far compensation."

"I think the amount proposed to be given by the Senate bill No. 730 a fair and liberal compensation."

The views expressed by the Chief of Ordnance are concurred in by the Secretary of War, under date of February 20, 1880.

As no compensation has been awarded for the use of said patent linchpin, which has proven to be a valuable auxiliary to the artillery arm of the service, your committee report the accompanying bill, as amended, and recommend its passage.

A similar bill for the relief of George Wright passed both Houses of the Forty-first Congress without a dissenting voice, but failed to reach the President for his approval through lack of time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before this bill is taken up more Leak the above.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before this bill is taken up, may I ask the chairman of the Committee on Patents whether the Committee on Patents investigated the question as to whether this was really a new invention and the patent a valid one? The Senator of course, as the head of that committee, knows that about seven out of ten, probably, of all the patents that are granted turn out on judicial inquiry to be investigated in the patents.

all the patents that are granted turn out on judicial inquiry to be invalid, justly invalid.

Mr. KERNAN. We did not make any investigation beyond inquiring at the Patent-Office and the War Department. The officers there say the invention is useful and new, and advise payment. The claim has been pending in Congress here a long time, a bill having been reported once before which passed both Houses but failed to reach the Executive in time. There was no intimation to the committee but that it was a valid invention which the Government had used without the consent of the preparts. Indeed we are hardly compared. without the consent of the patentee. Indeed, we are hardly competent to investigate such a case like a court; we hardly have the means to go back and litigate a patent case. We heard no suggestion from the officers of the Government, or from the Patent-Office, or from what had happened in the two Houses of Congress when such a bill passed before, that the patent was not a valid one.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As to the fact that a similar bill had passed the two Houses of Congress before, I think that our experience at this moment would teach us that it did not make a very strong precedent moment would teach us that it did not make a very strong precedent or authority for passing it now. We know how such bills go through. Mr. KERNAN. Allow me to suggest that I only alluded to that fact to show that while the matter had been before Congress and had been talked about, no one suggested the invalidity of the patent. I do not mean to say that is the highest evidence, but the case did not go through without pending here a good while at a former Congress as

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator before he sits down, if he will be kind enough to tell us what this invention really consists of? I suppose every Senator knows what a linchpin is in general, but what is this particular device?

Mr. KERNAN. I do not know that I can describe it well. It was exhibited before us. Possibly my friend from Florida [Mr. Call] can state it. I cannot state what it is from memory, but I remember that it was exhibited to the committee. I am not a very good me-chanic, and I cannot give a description of it. It was brought in and was exhibited, I know.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Perhaps we had better wait to have the linchpin brought in here. [Laughter.]

Mr. PLATT. I wish to make a single remark.
Mr. KERNAN. I yield to my colleague on the committee.
Mr. PLATT. I think that the Ordnance Department in cases like this has always adopted the rule that where there was the slightest question about the validity of the patent it would require the patentee to establish the validity of his patent in a suit. I know that it has been done in a great number of cases. Where patentees have thought they were entitled to compensation because the Government had used their inventions, I know that the Ordnance Department has in a great many cases required them to establish the validity of their patents in a suit before it would listen to any compromise or proposition for payment. That induces me to believe that there can be sition for payment. That induces me to believe that there can be no question about the validity of this patent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Was Wright an officer of the Army?

Mr. PLATT. I cannot answer that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Perhaps the chairman of the committee can tell us whether this claimant was a person in the service of the United States when he made this invention?

Mr. KERNAN. I understand that he was in the service of the United States when he made this invention. [To Mr. CALL.] Am I right?

Mr. CALL. He was

Mr. CALL. He was.

Mr. KERNAN. He was in the employ of the Government.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Was he merely an employé, or an officer?

Mr. KERNAN. I think he was only an employé, and not an officer.

Mr. CALL. He was in the workshops.

Mr. KERNAN. It will be observed that when we sent to the Department they not only recommended the payment, but some of the officers advised a much larger sum. The Department recommended that there he payment made. that there be payment made.

Mr. LOGAN. What is the amount?

Mr. KERNAN. Five thousand dollars is the amount named in the bill, but the committee propose, by an amendment, to pay $3,500.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The recommendation of a Department is undoubtedly entitled to consideration, but I wish to remind my friend, (if it is necessary to do so and I am sure it is not,) that the recommendation of a Department does not make an appropriation of money, and that it ought not to; that the Constitution happily has not vested in the Departments the power to part with the money of the United States. Therefore the fact that a Department has recommended it does not determine the question whether it and to be a recommended it. does not determine the question whether it ought to be paid or not.

Mr. KERNAN. I fully concur with the Senator, and yet in reference to an invention used in the Army it is very high evidence to have the War Department say that it is useful, that it is desirable to continue using it, that there has been no payment made; and that the patentee has a valid claim, whatever amount we may see fit to appro-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to taking up the bill at this time? The Chair hears none, and the bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LOGAN. Let us hear the bill read and see what it is. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, dc., That out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the Secretary of the Treasury pay to Mrs. S. A. Wright, widow of the late George Wright, deceased, the sum of $5,000, in full consideration for the entire past and future use by the Government of the United States of the patent linehpin of the said deceased George Wright: Provided, That a full, sufficient, and legal transfer and license is executed and deposited with the War Department for the Government to use said linehpin for Government purposes, free of all charges of royalty.

Mr. LOGAN. The bill says "the linchpin of George Wright." I should like to know what use the linchpin is to be put to. Is it a linchpin to a wagon or what is it?

Mr. CALL. Artillery.
Mr. LOGAN. An artillery wagon?
Mr. CALL. Yes, sir.
Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I want to ask somebody who knows about this bill a question, or to make an observation which points to a question about it. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] said, and was quite warranted I have no doubt in saying, that when there has been a challenge of a patent the officers of the Government have required the claimant of the patent to establish it judicially. The Senator from Connecticut, who is more familiar with such things than I am, will observe that here is a patented article of which nobody is a customer or user except the Government. Private persons do not have carriages to carry cannon and ordnance; and therefore they do not use or investigate linchpins to go with such carriages. Many another article which the Government uses is used by other people as well. If it were worth while I could enumerate a good many of them. In all these latter cases there is competition, there is motive, there is probability that a patent may be challenged; but a man takes out a patent for an improvement in a cannon, a gas-check, for example, or a primer of a cannon; it is of no possible in-terest businesswise to any man in any branch of trade. The Government of this country or the governments of other countries are the sole parties who can become vendees, licensees of any such invention. So in this instance it strikes me that the fact that this patent has not been challenged, if it has not been, proves absolutely nothing.

We have been told that the description of this linchpin cannot be given. As the Senator from Vermont has said, we all know tolerably well what a linchpin is. There may be some very novel and extraordinary combination here to do the office of a linchpin, but without dinary combination here to do the office of a linchpin, but without anybody to say—for nobody does say in this report, there is no hint anywhere—that this invention in point of fact was new and original, different from anything which had been used before, as well as valuable, it seems to me that it would be proceeding with great hazard, considering the class of cases to which this bill belongs, to give compensation for its use by the Government, which, among other things, is itself a legislative declaration of the validity of this patent, a send-off which for numbers in foreign countries and everywhere else is off which, for purposes in foreign countries and everywhere else, is what Colonel Benton would have called "a very solemn certification of the validity of the whole thing." It is that, beyond the payment of the money involved, which it seems to me would make it rather loose legislation, without any committee investigating the validity of the patent, without anybody to say that it is a new or original invention, without any presumption, however slight, that this is one of those things which other persons would have investigated, would have challenged, would have disputed, would have had a motive to dispute if in reality it was not new and was not original—it seems to dispute if in reality it was not new and was not original—it seems to me it will be going upon a very narrow and insecure foundation to say that we will pay money for the Government for its use of such a thing, and more especially in view of another point upon which no comment has been made. One Senator has said that this inventor was at least in the employ of the Government; whether an officer or not he could not be sure, but he thought he was an employé. Ithink I am not mistaken—I appeal to the recollection of other Senators whether I am—the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Logan] more likely than almost anybody in an instance of this kind would remember. Am I mistaken in supposing that it has been the rule of the Senator Am I mistaken in supposing that it has been the rule of the Senate and of the House that no officer of the Army, no officer of the Government shall receive compensation from the Government for the use of ment shall receive compensation from the Government for the use of an invention which he made while his time belonged to the Government and while he had the apparatus of the Government with which to make experiments? Is not that so?

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator, perhaps, by my calling his attention to it, will remember a discussion that occurred here some years ago on that very point. It was then considered by the Senate, and I think almost unanimously, that a person in the Army or in the employ of the Government, receiving his pay, using the machinery of the Government for the purpose of experimenting, had no right to compensation from the Government for any invention made during that time. That has been the rule for years in the Senate and in Congress.

Mr. CONKLING. Not only so, but reported cases in the courts will show that where an alleged inventor was in the employ of an indi-show that where an alleged inventor was in the employ of an individual or of a corporation, and using the workshops, the tools, the laboratory, the opportunity of his employer, made experiments which led to an invention, a very grave doubt, to say the least, has been interposed how far in his own right he could claim the fruits of that invention.

I know little about this case, and certainly I have no disposition to put any impediment in the way of this claimant if she be meritorious; but there is one other thing on the face of the bill which strikes me, and I direct the attention of the Senator from Connecticut to it. Here is a bill which proposes to pay to the widow of a deceased inventor and patentee a lump sum for the use of this invention. Upon what principle is this sum to be paid to the widow? I submit to the Senator it should be paid to the legal representatives. The widow is not the legal representative of this deceased person unless in virtue of a will of which we have heard nothing. Suppose it turns out that there are assignees; suppose this patent or this invention inchoate before a patent issued, as in equity it may be, has been assigned to somebody else, this is not a good accord and satisfaction as between the Government and a person who might turn out to be the bona fide holder. My sole purpose is to draw attention to this because it seems to me as a precedent, if it is to become one, it has not been sufficiently considered.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I have not this bill in charge; but I ask the Senater who has it in charge, the Senator from Florida, [Mr.

CALL,] to indulge me in some suggestions by way of reply to the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING.]

The Senator from Florida, who has charge of this report, can much better describe this invention than myself; but as to the suggestion that the validity of this patent would not be questioned because it was in use only by the Government, I think that has very little force. My experience has been that the Government of the United States and the Departments of the Government do not recommend the payment of anything for the use of inventions by the Government avenue. ment of anything for the use of inventions by the Government except in the strongest and most equitable cases. Whether this linehpin was used by others than the Government I am unable to state; I have no doubt it will come out in this discussion; but it seems to me very much better for the Congress of the United States, in a case which the Government does not contest, where the validity of the patent is acknowledged by the Government, to pay a fair consideration by an act of Congress than to encourage the litigation which the Senator from New York is familiar with, which is now going on between patentees and Government officers who use the inventions of claimants. It does seem to me that we can safely at here when there has come to be an understanding between the patentee and the proper officers of the Government that he has a valid patent, and that the Government has used it and a proper compensation has been that the Government has used it and a proper compensation has been agreed upon. It seems to me that we can safely act, and it is very much better for us to act than to drive the patentee into the courts to sue some officer of the Government, and thus the Government have an expensive litigation and the patentee also.

With regard to one other thing, it is suggested that because this man was in the employment of the Government the Government may have a right to the use of his patent. I think that the rule is well established now that where an employé of a private individual, using the time and the tools of that individual, a manufacturer for instance, has made a valuable invention, while the patentee owns his invention, the manufacturer has a kind of equitable license to use it. I understand that in this case the claim was first made on the part of understand that in this case the claim was first made on the part of the Government that in accordance with that rule they had an equitable right to the use of the patent, that the whole facts in relation to the invention of this linchpin were brought before some of the law officers of the Government, and that after investigation they reported that the Government had no right to the use of the invention. I think I am not mistaken in supposing that this is the case which I have in mind. These things being true it seems to me that this is an equitable bill.

There is simply one other consideration, and that is suggested by the inquiry as to why the money should be paid to the widow. I believe investigation was made in this case, and it was found that there were no other heirs, and no other person so deserving of it as the widow, and I know that in numberless instances where patents have been extended they have been extended for the benefit of the widow. I think the rule is this in the extension of a patent, or in making compensation for it, for the committee to ascertain the meritorious party and make the bill to run in favor of that party.

Mr. LOGAN. This person comes to Congress with a claim for the reason that in law she has no right to it. If she had a right to this compensation she could get it from the courts; but because she has no right she comes to Congress claiming an equity that Congress may award to her. There is simply one other consideration, and that is suggested by

The objection that I have to allowing this compensation is this: without discussing it I believe the principle is a correct one that the employes of the Government are not entitled to anything except their salary or compensation while using the machinery of the Government for the purposes of invention. That has not only been established in Congress, but it has been established by the courts; and I can cite an instance where one of the officers of the Army had to come to Congress to get permission to obtain a patent because the courts had decided that he was not even entitled to a patent while he was in the employment of the Government. So you may take it in divers and sundry cases that have been before Congress. During the war there were officers of the Army who invented shells of different kinds, guns of different kinds. They came before Congress for compensation. Congress always refused to give it in every instance. There was a claim here for two or three hundred thousand dollars in one instance that it is not necessary to mention. It was discussed here one whole day, and Congress utterly refused to pay the claim. That was for the invention of one of the great guns during the war. So it was in other instances that I could mention. Congress has refused in every such instance to allow compensation.

I can cite you to a patent obtained by one of the employés in the Ordnance Department for an improvement on a gun. The Government claimed the use of it. He came to Congress to obtain compenment claimed the use of it. He came to Congress to obtain compensation for that use. Congress refused it. So another instance I might cite and give the name. A man who invented something that was considered very useful in the Ordnance Department came here years ago. I do not see the Senator in his seat now, but one of the Senators from Michigan argued the case before the Senate, and the Senate utterly refused to pay one cent.

So you can find in every instance since these cases have been brought to the notice of Congress they have refused to give compensation to employés of the Government for the use by the Government of their inventions. It is considered that the invention of a party in the employ of the Government may be used by other parties than the Government and he may receive compensation for that use or a royalty, but not from the Government, in whose employ he was at the time of the invention.

There are various inventions made in the Post-Office Department as to stamps, and the making and canceling of stamps. Everything of that kind, if made by the employés of the Government, they are not allowed a cent of royalty from the Government for the use of. It has been the rule time out of mind, in this country, that inventions are not to be paid for by the Government where they are made by the employes of the Government, but outside of that they are entitled to their patents and to their royalty for individual use.

I hope that in this case the same rule will be maintained by Congress that has ever been maintained in reference to matters of this kind.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LOGAN. Yes, sir.
Mr. COCKRELL. Do not these employés get their employment because of their supposed skill and facility to do this kind of work; and are they not paid accordingly?

Mr. LOGAN. That is the way I understand it. I know that a gentleman to whom I alluded a while ago without mentioning his name, a very skillful man in the Ordnance Department, one of the employés, used to come to my room and talk to me frequently about his inventional to the company. tion, the great use it had been to the Government. I said to him at all times that the Government would not pay a cent for it. He thought differently and came to Congress, and his case was maintained here with great ability, but Congress utterly refused, and almost by a unanimous vote, to give him one cent.

As far as this patent is concerned, I do not know anything about it, whether it is a good one or bad one, whether the Government has used it or not used it. That is immaterial to the principle involved. If this gentleman while testing his invention, while improving it, was in the employ of the Government, using the machinery of the Ordnance Department to complete his models, to perfect his invention, he is not entitled to one cent from this Government. Neither is ordnance Department to complete his models, to perfect his invention, he is not entitled to one cent from this Government. Neither is his executor or representative entitled to anything. Why did he not apply himself while he was alive?

Mr. KERNAN. He did.

Mr. LOGAN. Then he could not get it, and because he could not get it the presumption is that the widow can get it. That is not correct. It is not fair; it is not right. If he could not get it she is not entitled to it. Why? She would only be entitled to what he was entitled to it. Why? She would only be entitled to what he was entitled to. If he was not entitled to it, she has no claim to it, and he certainly was not entitled to it.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois—I did not hear the first part of his remarks; I came in while he was addressing the Senate—what are the facts in regard to the employment of this man by the Government?

Mr. LOGAN. I do not know; I only heard it stated that he was in the employ of the Government when he made this invention. That is all I know about it.

Mr. HOAR. There is nothing in the report on that subject.

Mr. CONKLING. It has been stated by a member of the committee that he was in the employ of Government.

Mr. HOAR. In what capacity?

Mr. CALL. I will state to the Senator from Massachusetts that I have sent for the papers in the case, but they cannot be had at this moment. The clerk of the committee is not within reach at the present moment. My impression is that the papers state that he was a laborer in the employ of the Government at the navy-yard.

Mr. HOAR. Now, Mr. President, I am a member of the committee that made this report, and I am unable to recall any evidence before the committee which indicated that this invention was one that became the property of the Government. I do not understand it to be the law in private employments, I do not believe it is expedient to assert the principle in regard to employment by the Government, that the mere fact that one man is in another's the mere fact that one man is in another a service gives the carpost a title to the invention created by that man.

Mr. LOGAN. Not at all, if the Senator will allow me; that is not the position that the Government gets title to it; but if the inventor is in the employment of the Government at the time he makes the invention and uses the material of the Government, the Government invention and uses the material of the Government, the Government will not pay him a royalty for the use of his invention. He may get his patent; he may have a title to the invention; he may get his royalty from other people, if he made the invention; but while in the employ of the Government the rule is that the Government will not pay for the use of the article.

Mr. HOAR. That comes to the same thing. If the party employed be employed to make inventions, or if the time expended in the invention belonged to the employer, or if it be fairly within the scope of the service, that is one thing; but a day laborer, who drives a wagon, inventing a linchpin, (which I understand is the suggestion here,) which is a valuable mechanical contrivance, is entitled to that property himself, and he is entitled to the entire property of the invention which is a variable mechanical contrivance, is entitled to that property himself, and he is entitled to the entire property of the invention himself, as it seems to me, and the fact is that he does not use any material of the Government in regard to the contrivance of the linchpin. It is not as if he had invented a new steam-engine which he had built out of iron of the Government and in which he had used the tools in a Government machine-shop to construct. Then it becomes tools in a Government machine-shop to construct.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Will the Senator give way for a moment? I wish to make a statement in regard to the joint resolution which came from the House a few moments ago.

Mr. HOAR. I would rather complete my statement, if the Senator Pleases.

Then it becomes his property, and I do not understand that the authorities of the United States have any rule, or can lawfully establish or act upon such a rule if they had, that they will proceed to take this property. The Constitution and the statute make the obtaining a patent for an invention the appropriation to the personal property of the inventor, the patentee, of the entire property in that invention against the Government and against all the world. Now, it is very clear that the various authorities of the United States, the officers who have made these several recommendations, including officers who have made these several recommendations, including Brigadier-General Benét, the Chief of Ordnance, do not understand that this comes within any principle which the Government has adopted of taking possession of the inventions of persons in its employ, for they all recommend the payment, as I understand.

Mr. LOGAN. I would merely say to the Senator, without any intention to reflect on any officer of the Army, that doubtless there are many officers of the Army who would be very glad to see this principle established. General Benét himself tried to get a patent, and the courts refused and said he had no right to it.

the courts refused and said he had no right to it.

Mr. HOAR. They would not fly in the face of a recognized rule of the War Department in like cases.

Mr. LOGAN. Not at all; but I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that it might be an important rule for Congress to establish. He could not get a patent because he had invented a cerestablish. He could not get a patent because he had invented a certain something, I do not know what, while he was serving the United States; he was refused a patent on that ground; he had to come to Congress to get a resolution for that purpose. It has been the rule in the Government that persons obtaining patents for inventions while they were in the employ of the Government could not have a royalty from the Government. That is the rule in every Department. It is the rule in the Army; it is the rule of Congress, for Congress has refused on divers occasions to allow one cent by way of royalty in such cases. Leadly name on its a number for I took part in the dissuch cases. I could name quite a number, for I took part in the discussion. Let me state to the Senator an illustration. During the war we used to a very considerable extent what was called the Dyer shell. General Dyer was then Chief of Ordnance. He was supposed to have invented that shell; that point I will not now discuss; I have my own opinion about it, but that makes no difference now. The royalty on that shell would amount to hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator were making a speech I should interrupt him, but as he is interrupting me, I do not know that I can

Mr. LOGAN. I was only stating the reasons that caused Congress to take the position that it did. There is one illustration. He was not entitled to royalty because he was at the head of the Ordnance not entitled to royalty because he was at the head of the Ordnance Department when he invented that shell. I could give you fifty illustrations; I do not have them all in my mind now.

Mr. HOAR. Now, Mr. President, taking that illustration and that rule, how is it applicable to this case? The fallacy, if it be a fallacy, of the argument of the Senator from Illinois lies in his use of the phrase "in the employment of the Government." The Chief of the Ordnance Department, whose duty it is to recommend, to direct, to improve the construction of ordnance for the use of the Government, under the direct of the minute of the department. undoubtedly in every exercise of his mind upon a question like that is a man in the Government's employ in that thing. But is a team-ster obliged by his official duty to give to the Government service the exercise of inventive power and intellectual faculty which results in the invention? It is very proper, therefore, that General Benét or General Dyer should not be permitted to be speculating in ordnance inventions. But that is not the case of a laborer who gets $20 a month, if that be his compensation, for driving mules and feeding them. He was a mere laborer; he was under no obligation whatever to improve the Government's wagons or the Government mechanism is a man in the Government's employ in that thing. But is a teamto improve the Government's wagons or the Government mechanism of any kind any more than any other citizen of this country; so that he did not invent this while in the employ of the Government in any he did not invent this while in the employ of the Government in any correct legal sense of that term. He invented it in his own right and in his own time, and the invention was his own property, and is just as foreign, as alien to that employment as if the Senator from Illinois, twenty years ago, when in a private capacity, had made the same invention. It has nothing to do with his being a teamster. And that is the law in regard to all private employments.

Now, Mr. President, I deem this to be a very important matter, and I deem it to be of infinite importance to the Government that the principle mon which this report and bill go should be established principle upon which this report and bill go should be established as its rule of action. I concede to the fullest extent everything that as its rule of action. I concede to the fullest extent everything that I understand the honorable Senator from Illinois to have said as applicable to such officers as General Benét; but if this Government is to excel other nations in war as it has in peace, it cannot afford to do without the resource of the inventive faculty of its people. That is the distinction which separates the American brain of the poorest, of the common people, of the uneducated people alike, or rather far more than that of our men of science and our men of education and our men of property, it is in this maryleous inventive featlets. our men of property; it is in this marvelous inventive faculty; and

I hold it to be one of the most shameful things, among the many shameful things that have happened in some departments of our administration, that the Government has failed to avail itself of this marvelous resource of the inventive genius of this people.

Sir, what is the history of inventions? It is not Professor Agassiz or Professor Baird alone or chiefly, or Professor Henry, although he had an illustrious place among the inventors of the world, who make the great inventions which tend to the comfort of man, to the growth of civilization. More of those inventions have been made within the life-time of the honorable Senator from Illinois, and by his country-men, than by all the world and all past ages beside put together. They come from the poor workingmen of America, on the farm and in the workshop, to whom some suggestion of the mode by which they may save the daily drudgery and the daily toil to which their lives seem to be condemned is a great inspiration, and from the poor, illiterate, uneducated operative in his shop in Massachusetts, or on the farm in Illinois, or in the manufacturing establishments which are growing up there and into which the East is moving its capital and its brain and its inventive resources. They come from these men; and everything which denies or limits the hope of just compensation for the blessings that these inventions have given to mankind is a fatal mistake in public policy.

Again and again soldiers from the Northwest and the Northeast

Again and again soldiers from the Northwest and the Northeast went to the Ordnance Office during the late war and pointed out inventions and methods of strengthening our arms, improving the comfort of the soldier in the field, relieving his toils, diminishing his danger, increasing his effective power, and persons whose names have been mentioned in this debate, but whose names I will not name, turned their backs on those inventions. Now, here, Mr. President, is a case of the widow of a man of whom I never heard before, a teamster driving mules for fifteen or twenty dollars a month. He gives to the Government of the United States an invention for which, as Brigadier-General Jackson said, he ought to have been paid the sum of $20,000 for the use during those few years of the war alone; and twenty years, nearly half a generation, have gone by, the poor man who rendered that service to the Government is dead and in his grave; his widow comes in her poverty. Army officer after Army officer, the Chief of Ordnance included, recognizes that this little pittance of Chief of Ordnance included, recognizes that this little pittance of $5,000 should be granted. Is it not a good thing that a teamster, if he be a man of genius, should have the hope that at least a tithe of the benefit which he confers on mankind shall come to him or to his wife or his widow? We guard sacredly the millions which the speculator in stocks or in gold makes by his stock gambling. Is it not fair to do something for the useful product of the brain of the poor inventor of the country?

Why, Mr. President, an inventor in my own neighborhood came before this very committee a year ago, a man who invented an improvement in the matter of canister-shots, and first it was tried by a board of ordnance officers, and when they had gone so far that this board of ordnance officers, and when they had gone so far that this shot turned out to be five times as effective as that the Government had in stock, they broke off suddenly the experiments and would not go any further with it. Then Secretary McCrary ordered a new board of officers, on which he put some men from other branches of the service, and they tried the experiment again, and they reported that this canister-shot had five times the effective power of any that was known, and the Government has discarded all its old stock and adopted this, and there is an elaborate illustrated description of it in the report of the Ordnance Officer, and General Benét reports that not only has it increased largely the efficiency of canister-shot, but it saves the necesincreased largely the efficiency of canister-shot, but it saves the necessity of having two or three smooth-bore cannon in every battery of twelve rifled cannon, because it does no harm to the rifling, which the old canister did. That man came here to Congress for a little petty compensation, and they turned him from one door to another; this was the wrong place for such things!

Sir, do we wish to banish from the resources of this country in war its greatest reserves event that of the country and Sir, do we wish to banish from the resources of this country in war its greatest resource except that of the courage and bravery and military science of persons like the honorable Senator from Illinois, to which I always desire to pay my homage? The next resource to the spirit and courage of her sons is the inventive brain of her workmen; and I hold that it would be poor policy to establish the principle, when an invention like this is made, that the mere fact that the man happens to be a mule-driver at the time, getting his ten or fifteen dollars a month, should deprive him of his title to a reasonable compensation. compensation.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I appreciate very fully what the Senator from Massachusetts has said. I am as much in favor of compensating the inventive genius of this country as any one; but it is not the question in this case as to whether the man was a mule-driver or whether he was the General of the Army. The question is whether the Government shall adopt the policy of paying a compensation to persons for inventions created or made while they were in its employ. That is the proposition. So far as the man being a mule-driver is concerned, he was as much entitled to compensation for his inventive genius as if he was the greatest statesman in the land, and I should certainly at all times give to a poor man that which I would give to any other.

I shall detain the Senate only a few moments; but I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to one fact. If this precedent is established in the Congress of the United States that you will make compensation for inventions made by parties in the Government employ, whether general officers or mule-drivers, during the war, for the improvement of ammunition or arms or anything else connected with the service, this Government can commence emptying its Treasury now.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, that is not the principle I state. The principle I state is that where the employment is totally disconnected with the invention then the man stands as a the general officer whose duty it is to improve all the resources of the Army, like the General of Ordnance, improves one of them, he cannot take a patent for that, I agree; but suppose, for instance, a paymaster in the Army should invent a rifled cannon, taking nothing paymaster in the Army should invent a rined cannon, taking nothing from the time due to the Government, I should say he was not the employé of the Government. That is my proposition.

Mr. LOGAN. I disagree with the Senator right there. If a paymaster invents a gun while he is in the employ of the Government of the United States, he is no more entitled to pay or compensation for that as a royalty from the Government than if he invented something in connection with the Pay Department; at least that is my indement

Now, to illustrate what I desire to arrive at, suppose that I or any other Senator am the Chief of Ordnance; I find something that is other Senator am the Chief of Ordnance; I find something that is very important in connection with the ordnance of the Government, but there is no patent for it. It is an improvement on ammunition or something of that kind. The rule of the Government is that I, being Chief of Ordnance, or an officer in the Army, cannot have a royalty from the Government. That arm in the service is heavy ordnance; from the Government. That arm in the service is heavy ordnance; hence it will not be used by common people, and can be used only by the Government. I cannot obtain a royalty for it; but I have a man who is a good laborer in my employment who, upon the theory of the Senator from Massachusetts, may obtain a royalty from the Government if he invents it. Then I give my secret to him, and he gets the patent and I receive my royalty. There is exactly where the principle of the Senator from Massachusetts would lead.

Mr. HOAR. Such a fraud as that, for it is nothing but a fraud, could be done equally by the Chief of Ordnance getting somebody outside the Government service. There is no argument in supposing outside the Government service. There is no argument in supposing such a fraud as that. Mr. LOGAN. Very well; there is the chance. Call it a fraud or what you please, it is a way to avoid it. The true rule is, as has been established years and years gone by by Congress and by the Departments, that no person in the employ of the Government shall have compensation for his invention made while in the line of his duty. If a paymaster invents something in connection with the Pay Department while he is in the employ of the Government in that service, I ask the Senator if then he ought to be entitled to pay for it? Mr. HOAR.

Mr. HOAR. No.
Mr. LOGAN. If a mule-driver, then, in the line of his duty driving wagon, invents a linchpin, why should he be paid for it? That is in the line of his duty.

Mr. TELLER. If he invented a method of driving the mule he might not be entitled.

Mr. LOGAN. No matter, it is a method of protecting the wagon; the principle is just the same; it is as broad one way as it is the other; it is in connection with the article that he is employed in other; it is in connection with the article that he is employed in charge of. I do not desire to deprive a poor man of compensation; but I do hope the rule now proposed will not be established. There were claims presented to the Congress of the United States after the war was over that would have amounted to a million of dollars for the very kind of inventions spoken of here-improvements on guns, the very kind of inventions spoken of here—improvements on guns, improvements on ammunition, improvements in wagons, improvement in tents, improvement in everything that pertained to the Army and the war; and such applications were all refused. Why, a gentleman down South who served his term of years in the rebel army had a claim before Congress for the invention of an improved ammunition while he was in the Army of the United States prior to passing over, amounting to two or three handred thousand dollars. All this character of claims has been before Congress, and has been refused. I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate but I will refused. I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate, but I will say to Senators that so far as this question is concerned it does not appear to be well understood by the Senate. How this man was employed, I do not know, whether he was a mule-driver or a gun man-

Mr. KERNAN. Allow me to say that I could not remember all the facts, not having the papers before me, when the bill was called up; we have a good many cases before the Committee on Patents. I have had the paper since. Mr. Wright appears to have been a master mechanic in some of the shops of the Government. I think the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WINDOM] made a report in favor of this claim some years ago, and the gentleman now in charge of the bill finds in the papers an opinion of Judge-Advocate-General Holt discussing this case and holding that Mr. Wright was not within the rule which would prevent his getting compensation. Now allow me to say further, because this is an important question ther, because this is an important question-

Mr. CONKLING. Is Judge Holt's opinion there?

Mr. KERNAN. The Senator from Florida [Mr. Call.] has it in the papers. I have not had a chance to look at it. As I understand the law, where a man is in the employ of the Government at a salary and uses its material and its machinery in making experiments, as was the case in some applications which have been before the committee, that would be one thing; but the precedents to be in the past are that where a laberer or mechanic, without using the Government materials and without using the time which he is paid for by the Government, makes an invention for which he is entitled to have a patent, he may enforce it and be paid for it. The question is one of importance, and I desire that the gentleman who has charge of this bill, and who has the papers now, shall state more particularly the facts with reference to the employment and the opinion of Judge Holt about it. I want to say in regard to myself that this allowance

Holt about it. I want to say in regard to myself that this allowance being recommended in former reports I concurred in this report, believing that this was a case where the rule which has been alluded to ought not to and does not apply.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, if the rule is as the Senator from New York [Mr. Kernan] states it, we ought to have the evidence, because the presumption certainly is if this gentleman was in the employ of the Government. We then should have the evidence to exclude that presumption. The evidence should be to show that this invention was made not in the Government shows, that the material of the was made not in the Government shops, that the material of the Government was not used by this individual, and that the time of the Government was not used by this individual. We should have that in order to get on a proper basis to discuss the question.

that in order to get on a proper basis to discuss the question. The Senator from Massachusetts says this gentleman was a mule-driver; the Senator from New York says he was a master mechanic. Now, which was he? I want to know.

Mr. HOAR. I only caught what I heard stated by some Senator on the other side of the Chamber on that point. As I said, I never heard of the case before. I do not disagree with the Senator from Illinois in his present position, if I now understand it. The point which I desire to insist upon, and on which I have a very deep feeling as to what is for the public interest and what is righteous and just in itself, is that the mere fact of being in the employ of the Govjust in itself, is that the mere fact of being in the employ of the Government should not deprive a man of his right in an invention which has no connection whatever with his employment by the Govern-

That is all that I insisted upon.

Mr. LOGAN. I will answer that, too. The invention of a linch-pin for a wagon to bear a cannon does belong to the Ordnance De-partment; and if this man was a master mechanic in the Ordnance Department, anything connected with ordnance wagons was in the line of his duty. If he was a master mechanic in the shops of the Government, using the material and time of the Government in making this invention, he is not entitled to compensation according to the rule.

Now, I desire to call attention to a very strong case, the case of a man whose name, I think, was either Taylor or Nailor, but I believe it was Taylor, who was a master mechanic in the ordnance shops in this city. He made a very important invention in connection with some of the ordnance machinery, I do not remember what. He came to Congress with the same kind of recommendations that this man comes with. Congress with the same kind of recommendations that this man comes with. comes with. Congress utterly refused to give him one cent because he was a master mechanic in those shops and invented the thing dur-ing his time of service for the Government. That is the rule, and not only the rule in Congress but it has been established by the courts, and it is the rule in all the Departments of the Government. So if this man occupied this position and invented anything connected with the Ordnance Department, he is not entitled to pay. That is with the Ordnance Department, he is not entitled to pay. That is the proposition I state.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, it is said the passage of this bill will establish a very dangerous precedent. There has been one already passed that has established the precedent, Isuppose. At the last session of Congress we passed here, practically without dissent if not entirely so, a bill appropriating $50,000 to the heirs of a Mr. Shreeve, who had invented a snag-boat. There was not any doubt but that he invented it when in the employ of the Government; that he used it for the Government several years before he got the patent; he got his patent after he had used it in the employ of the Government; he invented it while he was in the employ of the Government. And yet the Committee on Claims, looking the matter over, said that his heirs were entitled to some compensation inasmuch as the Government had used this snag-boat for many years with great advantage. In had used this snag-boat for many years with great advantage. In that case we appropriated $50,000. I believe the committee reported the bill unanimously, and it passed the Senate without any great opposition; indeed I do not know that it had any at all. So if this it to extall the present of the senate without any great opposition; is to establish a precedent, let me say that the precedent has been already established, and I am credibly informed that there have been several other cases similar to Shreeve's that have passed this body several other cases similar to Shreeve's that have passed this body and passed the House and have become laws. There can be no rule to govern this body upon such a question. If we think the discovery or invention is of importance to the Government and that the party is entitled to it, we have a right to make an appropriation to compensate him. I do not understand that there is any law which prevents the authorities from issuing a patent because a man was in the employ of the Government, unless his case falls within the rule laid down by the Senator from Massachusetts. It seems to me this case does not fall within the rule. If it did and if you want a pre-case does not fall within the rule. If it did, and if you want a precedent, you can go back to the precedent of the last session.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, when a few moments ago I ventured to call attention to some of the features of this case, I did so in utter ignorance, not of the case, but of the possibilities of this occasion. I had no idea that a linchpin could give rise to so large and luminous a view as has illustrated this consideration. We have heard a very eloquent oration touching the trials, the tribulations, and the pangs of inventive genius. I listened for one, not now so much as a good many years ago at different times, to such a presentation of the struggles and the merits of men who evolve out of their own consciousand weave upon the loom of their own brain those great results which benefit mankind; and when sometimes I have heard a distinguished Senator, whom I do not see, talking about the wrongs which have been perpetrated upon his neighbors by some man who insisted upon a monopoly of the right to bore into the ground and put a particular tube in to be used as a pump, I have felt like remonstrating somewhat

Mr. DAWES. That came from the West.

Mr. CONKLING. My friend says that came from the West; I believe that particular patent right did not come from Massachusetts. I say that when I have heard these things I have felt like mildly interposing against the austerity with which the claimants of patents and patent rights have been now and again visited. So that in associating my name, as I am ambitious to do, with this debate, which I cannot doubt will become historic as it has been so eminently rhetorical, I wish to be linked with those who sympathize most fully and deeply and energetically with all the trials, rewarded and unrewarded, deeply and energetically with all the trials, rewarded and diffewarded, especially of the poor, of the mule-drivers, who, out of the little germ of some suggestion of their own, filled the world with fruits and results which promote civilization and carry forward the great ends of the human family.

But really, Mr. President, when I come to take the measure of this case and see what it is, I humbly conceive that some very odd propositions of law, of ethics, and of casuistry are presented. I hear one Senator say that if a man in the domain of his employment makes senator say that it a man in the domain of his employment hakes an invention, he ought to receive nothing for that from the Government. Why not? Again, I venture to ask why not? If a man, not wandering out of the domain of his employment, not appropriating time which the Government owns to things touching which he is not employed at all, but in the faithful prosecution of the very direction in which he is employed, invents some new and useful thing, why should he not be paid for that?

Again, we are told that if a man in the employ of the Government outside of that domain invents something, he should be paid for it. Upon that proposition I venture to inquire why? If a man employed as a mechanic by the Government, devoting his time as a side-show and by-play to studying problems in chemistry, dabbling in a labor-atory, wandering away from what he is employed to do, discovers something, why should he be paid by the Government for the use of

Now, against these two propositions, both of them fallacious, as I humbly conceive, I venture to state a proposition of my ewn, not being sure that it is sound, but being very confident that it comes nearer being sound than either of these two positions. If a man in the employ of the Government, no matter for what employed, makes an invention, no matter of what, whether lying within the domain of his employment or foreign to it, and that invention is made by the application of time not within the hours of his employment, but beyond those hours—in those hours which belong to himself—I can see a very broad distinction of merit, not because the invention concerns the mules which he drives or the gun-carriage on which he rides or the ordnance belonging to the Department of which he is chief, nor because it does not concern any of these things, but simply because it cause it does not concern any of these things, but simply because it is one of those glories and privileges of our system, to which allusion has not been made, that between the employer and the employed, has not been made, that between the employer and the employed, whether the employer be the Government, a corporation, or an individual, nothing belongs to the employer except a rendition of the time and attention for which he or it pays. And accordingly, when the Government attempts to follow one of its employes, be he an office-holder or anybody else, beyond the limits of the hours which belong to the Government and undertakes to tell him whether in hours which holder or anybody else, beyond the limits of the hours which belong to the Government and undertakes to tell him whether in hours which are his own he shall devote his time to the efforts of inventive genius or whether he shall attend religious or spiritual meetings or political meetings, or shall do anything else, the Government, in my opinion, is a tyrant—not a petty tyrant, as an individual might be, but a bald, insolent usurper—and it is the birthright of every American citizen to stand against such insolent intrusion.

It has happened sometimes; I have heard of it; I have heard of an executive order which undertook to visit the employé of the Government, not in business hours, not in respect of the time belonging to the Government, but to follow him into the privacy, the solitude, the secrecy of his own personal life and opportunity, and dare to oversee him as to the disposition he should make of his time and his whereabouts. If any Senator will draw a distinction here, if he will say that in case General Dyer after his Department was closed, after for that day he had rendered fully and faithfully to the Government all the time, all the labor, all the thought, all the effort which belonged to it, in hours which were his own, devised a gas-check for a cannon or a machine which should rifle a cannon with a shorter or a longer wind so as to prevent the clubbing of projectiles or their vacillating in their traverse, which was and is one of the great problems in gannery, he should be entitled to compensation for his invention, there would be a distinction which would be somewhat palpable to me, a distinction which I think I might venture to say ought to be regarded by the law and by the Government. But I can see no distinction, certainly no distinction favorable to the claimant, between a man who adhering to his duties and doing those makes an tween a man who adhering to his duties and doing those makes an invention in the line of them, and a man who instead of adhering to his duties and attending to those is experimenting apart, aside from his duties, away from the thing which he is employed to do. The distinction, if there be one, it may be said I think truly, is rather shadowy, rather refined, rather fine-spun; but if you shall find a distinction discernible to the naked and to the legal eye, with my imperfect perception it would militate rather against than for the man who while employed to do a particular thing was experimenting with other things and in that way hits upon some contrivance or combinaother things and in that way hits upon some contrivance or combina-tion or new motion or new something which should be the topic and the essence of value to him.

Now, as I first, I believe, ventured to suggest the point to which I have been alluding, I wish to come back to this case as I find it now to be, not the case of a mule-driver, not the case of a poor and humble and struggling genius clamoring in the twilight of great and peculiar difficulties, beclouded by poverty and appealing for sympathy in such lively and attractive forms as have been presented to us, but the case of a man a master mechanic, an inventor not of linchpins alone but of other things, of other things for which it seems he has already re-ceived compensation from the Government, the inventor, for example, of a fuse-mold.

Mr. EDMUNDS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is better than a mold of fuse.

Mr. CONKLING. Yes; a fuse-mold invented while this claimant was a master mechanic, made from the materials of the Government, manufactured by the machinery of the Government, used in the service of the Government, and paid for from the public Treasury, that is with the money of the people. Therefore he was not a mule-driver and he was not a day-laborer in the sense in which that term has been employed.

Mr. Wright

I am reading now from what Major Benton says, Major Benton being the ordnance officer to whom was referred an application for pay, who refused that application and assigned reasons for his refusal-

Mr. Wright claims to have invented this linchpin May 20, 1862. He states he did so without instructions or orders from his superior officer, but merely from a desire to correct a serious defect in the linchpin then in use in our field artillery. The invention was made while Mr. Wright was employed as master machinist at a compensation of $3.73 per day. He states he

He was undoubtedly a day-laborer in the same sense as Senators always were until, I believe, by the act of 1856 the per diem allowance, which from time immemorial had been paid to them was turned into an annual salary. In no other sense that I can see was this man a day-laborer. Now, I beg the attention of the Senate to what I am about to read :

The linchpin was made in the Government shops, by Government workmen, and from Government material In the spring of 1863, Mr. Frances, of New York, called General Ramsey's attention to the fact—

General Ramsey is not the present Secretary of War, but General Ramsey, whom we all know so well. My friend from Illinois [Mr. Logan] says General Ramsey at that time was Chief of Ordnance.

Mr. Francis, of New York, called General Ramsey's attention to the fact that a similar linehpin was in use in France, and afterward sent him a sample, a drawing of which is herewith inclosed. Mr. Wright states that he was not aware of such a pin, and has sworn to his statement in a patent which he took out for it on the 9th

That is three years, lacking eleven days, after the invention was

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask whether it appears in that report that the description of the French invention had been printed in any of the description of the French invention had been printed in any of the public prints of France?

Mr. CONKLING. I have no right to say that that appears; but it does appear that Mr. Frances, who called attention to this, was a resident of the city of New York; he was not in France, and as far as one can infer he called attention to it by reason of information which he had, not of a local character from being present himself and seeing it in the French army, but because he knew generally that here was this thing. Then there is the more pregnant fact which this report states, that a sample of this pin and a drawing had been furnished, which, unless it had appeared in some scientific or some other periodical, journal, or publication, it is hardly possible anybody would have been able on the spur of the moment here to produce.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would make an end of the case between private parties?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would make an end of the case between private parties?

Mr. CONKLING. Of course it would make an end of the man's case between private parties, and if the Senator from Vermont will pardon me, much less than this would make an end of his case between private parties. If the thing had never been patented in France at all, if it never had appeared in any publication, public or private, and if it had only been used not by an army, but by one single man and that fact could be established, that would put an end to his claim. The Supreme Court so said recently in a case in which Coffin was a party. I do not stop to remember the volume. It was the case of a door-latch. Judge Nelson, giving the opinion of the court, said that if it could be shown that one single man in one single instance had used the same thing anterior to the invention of the patentee, it was as fatal to it as if everybody had used it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If he did not do it covertly, meaning to keep it? Mr. EDMUNDS. If he did not do it covertly, meaning to keep it?

Mr. CONKLING. Oh, of course, if he stole it from the other man or concealed it, or there was something which impaired the effect, of course the effect would not be as I intend to state it.

Now let me read the rest of this indorsement of Major Benton:

Mr. Wright claims that his pin is superior to the French pin-

That would look as if the French pin had not been used in a corner; he seems to have known about it-inasmuch as it is stronger from having no slot in the body.

Now I turn to what was said by Mr. Wright. Mr. HOAR. Before the Senator from New York departs from that point, if I heard his reading correctly all that he read was that some-body said that there had been a similar pin invented in France. Does it appear that it was in any way established that this invention was the invention in France, or was it something similar, which was not this invention?

Mr. CONKLING. Knowing that the honorable Senator from Massachusetts is not afflicted with any defect of hearing, I must attribute entirely to myself the blunder which so misinformed the Senator. I have not said, I have not read, that anybody had invented this article in France; I have not read that somebody said anything about it; I have read that Mr. Frances of New York called the attention of the Chief of Ordnance to the fact that in use in the French army then and theretofore had been and was a pin similar to this, of which not only a sample but a drawing was forwarded to him, and that this claimant said that he thought his pin was a better pin than that which the French army used because, in the first place, it was stronger, and, in the second place, it had no slot in its body, from which I infer that the French linchpin had a slot. The Senator says he understands me to say that somebody said that such a thing had been invented in France. Mr. CONKLING. Knowing that the honorable Senator from Masinvented in France.

I come now to read what Mr. Wright said. Mr. Wright on the 17th of March, 1866, sent to the Secretary of War a paper, whether it should be called a petition, an application, or a protest, will appear from so much of it as I shall read. He is assigning reasons why they ought not to refuse to pay him.

6. In Mr. Wright's own person, and within the last three years, both the Navy and War Departments have acted upon this rule—

That is the rule he insisted upon-by giving him compensation for another of his inventions, namely, his patented

As he says there not another invention but "another of his inven-As he says there not another invention but "another of his inventions," in the plural, and as the language is his, I think we have a right to assume that not only the linchpin and not only the fuse-mold but at least something else had been invented by Mr. Wright as far as that is important. Then follows a variety of matter which I have not had time to read, including a statement from Judge Holt to the effect that as he understands it the mere circumstance that a man was in the employ of the Government and was at the same time an inventor had not been held of itself enough to render it inadmissible or unsuitable or improper to allow him some compensation. Lest I may vary the sense of this by my abbreviation of it, I had better read something to indicate what it is:

In the second report it is set forth that for the use (past and future) of a patent for a mold for casting fuses, there was in March, 1864, ordered to be paid to Wright by the Secretary of War, upon the recommendation of the late Chief of Ordnance, the sum of $1,500, (the amount of the present claim,) and the same sum was, for a similar use of the patent, paid to Wright by the Navy Department;—

That is $3,000, I infer-

That is $3,000, I infer—but in this report it is not stated whether or not this invention was made in a Government workshop or at Government expense. In the views of the Ordnance Department in regard to the validity of this claim, this bureau is unable to concur. On the contrary, the opinion is entertained that the fact that an invention has been perfected by a Government employé at a public workshop, and with the tools and materials in use there, as well as at a period when the time and labor of the party were at the disposal of the Government by virtue of its contract with him, should not of itself be deemed conclusive against a claim interposed by him to be paid by the United States for the permanent use of such invention, especially where (as is proposed in this instance) the patent right is upon such payment wholly transferred.

I understand I also will be the support of the patent of the pate

I understand Judge Holt to say that the mere fact that the man was an employé should not prevent the entertainment of the queswas an employe should not prevent the entertainment of the question, should not be conclusive, but that it should still be a fair question of inquiry whether if he made over his patent entirely to the Government it ought to give him compensation for it. That was alluded to by my colleague, and I call attention to it because as far as it goes it certainly makes in favor, in any case to which it is applicable, of considering the claimant's case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does he refer to the question of the originality of the patent in that statement?

the patent in that statement?

Mr. CONKLING. No, sir; on the contrary, as the Senator reminds me of that, I had a report here,—I suppose I have it now—which developes rather a curious thing in that connection. The Senator from Massachusetts said it was not at all likely that officers of the War Department, in vielation of the rule of the Department, would do anything like recommending payment to this claimant. I think anybody who reads these answers of the military officers will see that they had before them no such question as the Senator from Massachusetts supposes in his remark, and that they made no expression on that point at all. See what Major-General Ayers said:

I would consider $5.000 as a fair compensation from the Government for the use

I would consider $5,000 as a fair compensation from the Government for the use of said linchpin.

I think it pretty clear that that came in answer to the question, how much would you consider fair, how much would you think just compensation? An honest man would answer that without, as I conceive, the slightest reference to whether he understood that the Government would under its rules or otherwise be likely to entertain such a claim or not. What would be a fair price for the Senator from Vermont to pay the Senator from Colorado for such a piece of property? Answer, so much; but the answer would not I think imply that the person who made it had any knowledge one way or the other, or expressed any opinion one way or the other upon the point whether at that price or any price the Senator from Vermont would buy that property

So General Jackson:

That $20,000 be paid by the Government for the use of said linchpin; that it decidedly did advance the public interests materially during the war of 1861, and the public interests are being advanced by it at the present time.

That is an expression by this gentleman that the man ought to be paid, and he recommends that as a reasonable and proper amount, but I do not understand that he could be convicted of any impropriety for saying that, although he might know never so well that as a rule, even an inflexible rule, if it turned out that this invention was made by a person in the employ of the Government, with the materials of the Government or the tools of the Government, in the time of the Government, it would not pay anything by way of royalty at all. So, without reading these different answers, I think it can hardly be argued without straining a point that these officers have undertaken, one way or the other, to state their understanding of what was or was not the rule in this respect, or even that they knew anything about this invention having been made by this man at a time when he was employed by the Government, and with the materials and tools of the Government.

Senators will observe in this connection, that in the report Judge Holt observes that in the case of the fuse-mold it never appeared, whether the invention was made with the materials of the Government, in the workshops of the Government, with the tools of the Government. ernment, or not. Who knows that the officers to whom this question was put understood or had ever inquired anything about the point whether this invention was made at one time or at another time, with materials of the Government or with materials of his own, in the workshop of the Government or in somebody else's workshop?

Mr. President, although this claimant is a widow and although it would disquiet me if I doubted that I am as sensitive to the claims of the needy, of the defenseless, of the helpless as other Senators, I understand this case to be that of a man who while employed by I understand this case to be that of a man who while employed by the Government and employed in respect of such things, not only then made this invention, but that other workmen of the Government were employed upon it; that the tools, machinery, opportunities, capital belonging to the Government were employed. Three years afterward lacking eleven days he took out a patent. He applied for compensation from the Government. The case was investigated and that compensation was refused. Pending that it turned out that a fact existed fatal to this claim as against an individual, for two reasons. It turned out that this same thing in substance, although this claimant said his pin was stronger and had no slot whether though this claimant said his pin was stronger and had no slot, whether invented or not, whether patented or not, was actually in use by the French army before all the eyes of military observers; and after-ward having received compensation for one other invention at least, those who represented this impeached invention come here and insist that now, without any investigation judicial or otherwise, whether this patent was good or not, with the patent on the face of those papers presumptively bad and valueless, by a legislative decree a lump sum is to be paid over in violation as I understand of the law applicable not peculiarly to the Government but applicable to all applicable not peculiarly to the Government but applicable to all private persons as well.

Here I wish to disclaim for myself a position implied by the Senator from Massachusetts, if I understood him aright, in respect of those who doubted the propriety of this claim. He said (I think everybody will agree with him, certainly I shall) that the fact that one man employs another does not invest the man who employs him with a sint to the weak employed. I did not right to the product of the brain of the man employed. I did not suppose it had ever entered into the wit of man, lawyer or layman, to deny that proposition. I will state the proposition which I maintain; and I will take to illustrate it the instance of a private employer, that there need be no magic or necromancy or confusion about its that there need be no magic or necromancy or confusion about its being the Government. A man in the employ of another who, during the time contracted to that other, using the machinery, apparatus, and material of that other, makes an invention, which invention is applicable to and used in the business of the employer, does that which gives to the employer an equitable license, to formulate it in legal phrase, to the use of that invention. The right to it, the property in it, belongs to the inventor under the statutes, and the Constitution, to which reference has been made. He has it against all comers. But the right concurrently and continually to employ this invention in the business in which the inventor was engaged, as I understand all the cases I can remember bearing upon that question, has been held to be one of the incidents and results of such tion, has been held to be one of the incidents and results of such circumstances. I have in my mind one or two cases in which that has been carried very far. Transplanting the illustration to an office-holder, to an agent, a servant of the Government, he during the war, for example, as here, suggests an experiment to be tried in the improvement of a linchpin for gun-carriages. It is tried by him and by other workmen as well, as the report shows, and with the machinery of the Government, out of the iron of the Government, heated by the fuel of the Government, and the whole proceeding conducted by the Government in the only way in which the Government can conduct a proceeding, that is, by living, mortal men who are its agents. When that takes place the Government has a right concurrently and afterward to continue to make this linchpin and to put it upon its gun-carriages, and to use it; and although the inventor owns the inven-tion, although it be a valid invention, new and original and unknown before, and he may patent it not only here but in every foreign realm and may defy all comers so far as any inventor can, as to the Government whose agent he was, whose machinery he used, whose materials he used, whose workmen besides himself he used in carrying it on, ne used, whose workmen besides himself he used in carrying it on, he cannot turn around and say, "You must pay me for the privilege you have exercised in the use, in the enjoyment, in the convenience for the time being of this invented thing." I do not think the Senator from Massachusetts will say that I overstate the law in that regard, as it prevails between individuals.

Mr. HOAR, (in his seat.) The Senator does not state it at all, as I understand the law.

Mr. CONKLING. I accept that courteous remark of the Senator from Massachusetts

Mr. HOAR. I certainly did not propose to make a discourteous re-

Mr. CONKLING. I do not understand what the Senator means when I was making or attempting to make a distinct statement, and he retorts that it is not a statement at all.

he retorts that it is not a statement at all.

Mr. HOAR. I made the remark in haste, and if I have made in any human being's mind a suggestion of discourtesy, I wish to take it back.

Mr. CONKLING. Very well.

Mr. HOAR. I sat in my seat; the learned Senator said, "the Senator from Massachusetts will not say that I overstate the law;" to which I replied from my seat substantially, "I do not understand that the Senator is stating it at all, it seems to me that that is not the law as he states it." Now I differ with the Senator from New York. That of course no Senator considers a discourtesy. I had no idea that the expression would be conceived to be discourteous by him; and if it is, I desire that it shall not have been said.

expression would be conceived to be discourteous by him; and if it is, I desire that it shall not have been said.

Mr. CONKLING. I regret that I misundertood the Senator in his reply; I know he is quite sincere in disclaiming it. Without attempting to state very exactly perhaps, without making the effort at precision that I should endeavor to make if I were drawing points to be printed and submitted to a court, I endeavored to state in a general way and no doubt somewhat inexactly, the result, as I understand it, of the cases, not quite coincident, perhaps not conflicting but somewhat varying in their expressions on this subject, but the result of the cases in which have been considered as between employer and employé the rights of the one touching the use of inventions made by of the cases in which have been considered as between employer and employé the rights of the one touching the use of inventions made by the one in the employ of the other. If I have not been so fortunate as to make myself intelligible, that fault is of course my own. I understand the law to be as I have endeavored in general terms to indicate. As to the case of the boat to which the Senator before me [Mr. Teiler] referred, I inferred from his remark that there was no debate, no discussion. He said that he did not know that anybody objected to it.

Unfortunately a good many bills pass here which are not scrutinized. The only wonder is that there are not more. I regret that there are so many. Notwithstanding that case, I cannot doubt that a most dangerous and a most expensive if not vicious principle of action would obtain whenever it is established that the officers, the agents, the servants, I care not of what grade or denomination, of the Government may expend the time which belongs to the Govern-ment while in its employ, make use of all the vast opportunities for observation and intercourse, which official positions give, employ the money, the materials, the workmen, the opportunities of the Government to make experiments, and then when they achieve something allow the Government to go on for years and make use of the invention, and come in afterward without ever establishing a patent in a court of justice and ask for a legislative decree paying them a lump court of justice and ask for a legislative decree paying them a lump sum, jumping accounts, for what some officer can be found to certify or some committee can be persuaded would on the whole be a pretty fair and generous gift between this fortunate experimenter and the Government which has profited by his experiment.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the question whether this particular sum of money shall be granted to this claimant is a question important only to her. The question of principle upon which Congress will act in dealing with such cases is a question of vast importance to the public. I came into the Senate Chamber while the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Logan] was addressing the Senate in regard to this case, and I inquired, while he was making his remarks, hearing this principle which was interesting to me, under discussion, what was the relation to the Government of the person who had invented this linchpin, and the answer which was made was that he was a this linchpin, and the answer which was made was that he was a

Mr. LOGAN. Not from me.
Mr. HOAR. Not from the Senator from Illinois, but some Senator having the matter in charge made that answer. The Senator from Illinois, if I understood him, thought the proper general rule was that while persons were in the employ of the Government in any capacity their inventions ought not to be the subject of compensation by the Government if they were taken and used in military or other service of the Government.

Mr. LOGAN. For the use of the Government, not of private parties.
Mr. HOAR. I understand; for the use of the Government. To that proposition I addressed myself, deeming that it was a proposition which would be of exceedingly unfortunate consequence, not only to the people that I especially represent, but to the Government itself. The doctrine, notwithstanding the ingenious statement of the Senator from New York, seems to me to be a very simple one. He says it is claimed that if a person in the employ of the Government says it is claimed that if a person in the employ of the Government makes an invention in the scope of that employment he ought not to be compensated for it, and asks, why not?

Mr. CONKLING. I did not say that.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator said that that statement was made, and put the question "Why not?"

Mr. CONKLING. I submitted the statement; I did not assert it.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will hear what I say. The Senator from New York said that it is asserted that if a person in the employ of the Government make an invention in the scope of that employment. New York said that it is asserted that if a person in the employ of the Government make an invention in the scope of that employment he is not entitled to compensation; and, "why not," asked the Senator. It is said that if a person in the employ of the Government make an invention not within the scope of his employment, he ought to be paid for it; and, "why," asked the Senator. It seems to me that the answer to both those questions is very simple. If a person make an invention within the scope of his employment, as in the case of the Chief of Ordnance, whom I put as an illustration, what the Government purchases and pays for is the capacity of the man to do that very thing. The Chief of Ordnance is employed at large compensation because of his mechanical and scientific skill and knowledge. He is employed to devote himself to the improvement of the ordnance service of the Government and the mechanical appliances of that

Mr. CONKLING. Is he employed to make inventions?
Mr. HOAR. If he can. If the making an invention tends to discharge the duty of his office he is employed for that, and the invention becomes a part of a service which he owes to the Government. If, on the other hand, a teamster or a master machanic make an invention which is not within the scope of his employment but relates wholly to a different matter, he has as much right to devote his spare leisnre time to such an invention as the person who is not in the employment of the Government at all, or as the office-holder has to discharge his duty as a citizen, in regard to which I quite agree with the Senator from New York.

the Senator from New York.

But now the question is in regard to the application of this principle. The honorable Senator from New York states, as I understand him, in the close of his remarks, that he conceives the result of the cases as between private employers and employés to be that where the employé using the time, the tools, the material of the employer, makes up in that time from that material and with those tools a certain mechanical invention, the employer is entitled to use that invention, and not merely to use the particular article which is made of his material but to senest reiters to that inventions from time to time. his material but to repeat, reiterate that invention from time to time

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator mean to state my proposition?
Mr. CONKLING. Then he will pardon me for putting in a very important element.

Mr. HOAR. That is a proposition which I intended to say I did not understand.

Mr. CONKLING. That proposition the Senator will see is wide open to the idea that the employer may go on and make the article and vend it and sell it to others.

Mr. HOAR. I said "use it."

Mr. CONKLING. My proposition was, provided the invention was applicable to, incidental to, belonging to the business which was there being carried on. I do not mean that if a man engaged in making mowers and reapers had in his employ a man who should invent a telephone or some other extraordinary or external thing, the employer telephone or some other extraordinary or external thing, the employer might go on and make telephones and sell them.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will hear the illustration, I think he will see precisely where I desire to challenge his general principle. Suppose the engineer of a manufacturer using a steam-engine make in his employer's time, with his employer's tools, from his employer's iron and copper and brass, a new steam-engine and an improvement, and then takes out a patent on it. That undoubtedly is an implied license to the owner to use that particular article, but it is not an implied license to him to replace it with another of the same kind when the first article is used up. That is the limit, as I understand, of the right of the employer under those circumstances.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator pardon me a moment?

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator pardon me a moment?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. Shall I understand him to say that if in an es AIR. CONKLING. Shall I understand him to say that if in an establishment where a dozen steam-engines are at work, the servant of the owner of those engines invents a new governor or a new throttle, although the employer has a right to use that governor or that throttle on the particular engine on which the inventor put it and tried it, he cannot put it on the other eleven engines and use them?

Mr. HOAR. I so understand it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Suppose he was employed to build engines?

Mr. HOAR. Undoubtedly if he be employed to build engines so that he owes to his employer his best skill in the construction and devising of such engines, that is a very different thing, and that comes within the statement that I have made; but supposing the scope of his employment requires no such service, but all that happened is that he has used the time the using of which in that way is a theft, if I may apply that term to the using of the time of the employer by the employe, or has appropriated material of the employer, that only goes to the extent of an implied license to use the particular thing which he has put into his employer's service. That is what I understand to be the well-settled law. well-settled law.

Mr. President, in regard to the application to this case, I do not understand that the document read by the Senator from New York establishes the proposition which he seemed to be impressing upon the Senate. All that I understand from it is that while the Secretary of War, according to one report, and these several Army officers have certified to the great value of this invention to the Government, somebody called the attention of the officers of the Government to the body called the attention of the officers of the Government to the fact that a similar—not the same invention but a similar invention—had been used before that time in France. It is spoken of as the fact. Whether that assertion of this gentleman in New York turned out to be the fact or not nobody knows, except that that particular pin was used, to which the claimant replied that his invention was better than this French article, being stronger and having a particular distinction, no slot in the linchpin. If this French article in use was substantially the same, if this was not a new, valuable, and different invention, it is incredible that these Army officers should not have known it and it should not have appeared, and that they should have madethese recommendations. It is incredible also that the fact would not have appeared before this time. The phrase is not that it is the same invention, but only a similar thing that has been used in France. The inventor could not have obtained his patent if the invention used there was exactly the same.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion in reference to the incredibility of the fact being known? I remember very well an investigation here once, for I was on the joint commit-reference to the incredibility of the fact being known? I remember very well an investigation here once, for I was on the joint committee of the Senate and House of Representatives to investigate the question of ordnance and ordnance patents. It turned out in evidence that one of the materials used during our war, which was invented or purported to be invented during the war, and used very extensively, had been used for fifty years in Germany, and that right in the Patent Office where the patent was granted was the drawing of that very article.

in the Patent Office where the patent was granted was the drawing of that very article.

Mr. HOAR. But that is where it was plain. The document which the Senator from New York read does not speak of this as the same invention in a legal and technical sense; it is only that a similar thing had been used in France, to which the claimant replied that it was different. Therefore it seems to me, in the application of the principle which has been stated, there is no objection to this claim unless on the broad principle of the Senator from Illinois, to which I do not understand that any other Senator has given his adherence, that the fact of being in the Government employ in whatever capacity entitles the Government to use the invention of whatever charity entitles the Government to use the invention of whatever char-

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator-

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator—
Mr. HOAR. If I am stating that too broadly—
Mr. LOGAN. The Senator will remember that I said at the time that if this person in the Government employ made this invention during the hours that he was not employed, not in the time of the Government, proof of that fact would dispel the presumption that he was in the employ of the Government and used the Government material at the time he made the invention.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator does not claim, then, that if a teamster invents a new rifled gun the Government can use that invention because he happens to be a teamster in the employ of the Government?

Mr. LOGAN. Oh, no; that was not the point at all. The proposition was that where the invention was made in the direction of his duty the Government could use it; and I followed it up by stating that this man was a master mechanic, that the fact was developed that he was, and that the making of linchpins or anything else connected with ordnance, cannon, wagons, or anything relating to the mechanism of the Ordnance Department was a part of his duty. I said that as far as being a teamster was concerned, if he was in any connection with wagons, perhaps an invention of that kind would be said that as far as being a teamster was concerned, if he was in any connection with wagons, perhaps an invention of that kind would be in the line of his duty, but I said nowhere that where an invention was outside entirely of any connection with the employment of the inventor and outside of the time of the Government the Government had a right to the use of the invention. I made no such statement; at least I did not intend to do so.

Mr. HOAR. Then it all depends upon the application of a principle upon which, so far as applicable to this case, every Senator is agreed, and that is that if it were a violation of his duty to the Government for the man to have made this invention as an invention for himself, his own property, he is not entitled to pay; and if, on the other hand, his duty did not require him to give his best service to the Government at that time in an improvement of this character, then, I understand, we are agreed he is entitled to compensation. The report, it is true, is indefinite in that particular, but we have the fact of the recommendation of these officers and of the Secretary of War.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator will remember that Mr. Benét, who was in charge of the Ordnance Department at that time, states that this man did make it out of the material of the Government, that he made it out of Government iron, and made it in the time of his service. All that is stated in Mr. Benét's amended statement, who was acting in charge of the Ordnance Department at that time.

Mr. HOAR. I do not understand that to be so.
Mr. LOGAN. That is the statement he makes.

NTERNATIONAL SANITARY CONFERENCE.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Evidently we shall not get through with this bill to-night, and I wish to make a statement to the Senate. There is a joint resolution now on the Vice-President's table which There is a joint resolution now on the Vice-President's table which came from the House to-day, making an appropriation of $2,500 to bear the expenses of the international sanitary commission called for the 1st of January. I, of course, understand that the joint resolution can only be considered to-day by unanimous consent. I will state that it is deemed to be a pressing matter. I have a letter here from the Secretary of State asking that it be passed; also, two or three members from the other end of the Capitol say that its passage is pressed upon them. I desire to ask unanimous consent to take up the joint resolution and that the Senate now pass it. I will state further that a majority of the Committee on Appropriations, whom I have consulted, agree to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should not object to its being taken up and read

Mr. BLAINE. There is.
Mr. BLAINE. There is.
Mr. EDMUNDS. In order to test the question of whether there is a quorum here or not, I move that the Senate adjourn.
Mr. HARRIS. I appeal to the Senator from Vermont to allow the letter of the Secretary of State to be read, and if that be satisfactory to the Senator from Vermont, then let the suggestion of the Senator from West Virginia be entertained.
Mr. EDMUNDS. Lengthfield that there are less than thirty Sen

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am satisfied that there are less than thirty Senators in this Chamber. I believe that I have pledged myself in a very solemn manner to obey the Constitution of the United States, and that requires that we shall not do any business without a majority present. In order to find out whether there is a quorum present, I will take the simplest means of moving that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HARRIS. Upon which question I ask for the yeas and nays, in order that we may test the question and ascertain the fact.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is right.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have no wish to press this joint reselution if any Senator objects to it. If the Senator from Vermont objects to it, I shall not press it. One objection carries it over.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator from Vermont only objects on the ground that he thinks a quorum is not here. Mr. EDMUNDS. I am satisfied that there are less than thirty Sen-

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator from Vermont only objects on the ground that he thinks a quorum is not here.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I said I did not object to its first reading. I do not think it will hurt anybody to wait until Wednesday after New Year's. Whether I shall object to the second reading of the joint resolution depends on what it is somewhat.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I so understood the Senator from Vermont, and I say to him now that if he has objection to the joint resolution, I should like to have it read the second time and referred

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection to its being referred. That is a mere matter of form.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then I ask that the joint resolution be read and referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will lay before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 358) appropriating $2,500 to meet the expenses of the international sanitary conference invited to meet in Washington on the 1st of January, 1881, was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HARRIS. Before the reference, in order that the communication from the Secretary of State may be before Senators, I ask that it may be read so that it shall go into the RECORD.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be printed and referred. That is much cheaper than it is to put it into the RECORD.

Mr. HARRIS. Very well.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I understand the Senator from Vermont to object to any further proceedings.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We cannot have any further proceedings until it is reported.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is true, but I can ask unani-nous consent. I ask unanimous consent to take up the joint reselution now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has not the joint resolution been referred ?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered on that motion.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think it hardly worth while, unless some Senator insists upon it, to call the yeas and nays. I am aware that the joint resolution cannot pass now unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. CARPENTER. Debate is out of order.
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I do not see the necessity of calling the yeas and nays, and hope the call will be withdrawn.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll-call will continue.
The Secretary concluded the call of the roll.
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, (after having voted in the negative.)
I change my vote from "nay" to "yea." I think we had better adjourn.

The result was announced-yeas 29, nays 14; as follows:

Wednesday, December 22, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

The SPEAKER. The Journal of yesterday's proceedings will be read.

mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. BOWMAN. After the disgraceful proceedings of yesterday, the House immediately and without any intervening business adjourned.
Now, I desire to ask of the Speaker—
The SPEAKER. If the gentleman has any matter of privilege, or

Mr. BOWMAN. I think this is a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The Chairwould prefer that the gentleman should submit it after the Journal has been read.

Mr. BOWMAN. But the point I wish to make is in regard to the reading of the Journal. I wish to ask the ruling of the Speaker on the question whether under clause 5 of Rule XIV the reading of the Journal would be regarded as such intervening business as would cut off the appplication of the rule. The clause is as follows:

He [the member] shall not be held to answer, nor be subject to the censure of the House therefor, if further debate or other business has intervened.

My parliamentary inquiry is, whether the reading of the Journal would be regarded or construed as such "intervening business" in the language of the rule as would cut off any further proceedings by the House for the gross violation of its dignity by the words spoken in debate yesterday. I raise this point because no other member has raised it; and it seems to me an important point; for if the Chair rules that the reading of the Journal is "intervening business," then further proceedings on account of that disgraceful affair, and the opportunity of punishment by the House, may be entirely cut off.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the reading of the Journal does not take from the House any privilege that it now possesses.

The Journal was then read.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the Journal will be approved.

Mr. WEAVER. I wish to correct the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Journal or the RECORD?

Mr. WEAVER. The RECORD—the publication of remarks.

The SPEAKER. That will not interfere with the question of the approval of the Journal.

Mr. WEAVER. Very well. I wish to be heard upon the point just

Mr. McLANE. I did not understand the request made by the gen-a moment.

Mr. McLANE. I did not understand the request made by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. Weaver.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman desires to make a statement by way of correction of the Congressional Record. The first question is on the approval of the Journal of yesterday.

The question being taken, the Journal was approved.

Mr. McLANE. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Weaver] asks to correct the Congressional Record; the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] rises to a question of privilege. The gentleman from Maryland will state his question of privilege.

Mr. WEAVER. My statement will not take more than a moment. Mr. McLane. I want to refer, Mr. Speaker, to the scene of disorder which occurred yesterday in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union; and without going into any detail at all, without attempting to measure and assign to either the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Weaver] or the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sparks] his respective share in any censure that it may be proper to pass upon that scene of disorder—

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McLANE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. McLane. Yes, sir.
Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Did not the transaction to which the gentleman refers occur in Committee of the Whole? The House, as I understand, has no knowledge of that transaction?
Mr. McLane. The House has every knowledge of it.
Mr. WEAVER. I prefer that no technical objection should be made to anything the gentleman may state.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland baving now indicated his purpose in addressing the Chair and claiming the floor upon a question of privilege, the Chair would state that whatever might have been his decision touching that part of the rules to which the gentleman from Massachusetts has directed the attention of the Chair—clauses 4 and 5 of Rule XIV—the Chair finds warrant for the recognition of the gentleman from Maryland in the terms of Rule IX, which declares: IX, which declares:

Questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings.

This matter, in the opinion of the Chair, relates, beyond controversy, to the dignity of the House. The Chair therefore rules the question one of privilege, and recognizes the gentleman from Mary-

Mr. McLANE. Without attempting to take any measure of the relative blame which might be attached to either of those gentlemen—ignoring that altogether—I want to call the attention of the House to the scene of disorder of which the House had full knowledge, since the Speaker took the chair to restore the House to order and called the attention of the House to the scene of disorder that had called the attention of the House to the scene of disorder that had occurred.

Now, to avoid any further proceedings, to avoid any necessity for any committee of inquiry or investigation as to the facts, but taking the facts as they notoriously existed, taking the notorious fact that every man, including the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Illinois, will recognize that scene of disorder as discreditable and derogatory to the character of this House, I rise to a question of privilege and submit to the House the propriety, the absolute necessity of those two gentlemen anticipating any proceedings on the part of this House by making to the House a full, complete, unqualified apology for the part they respectively took in that scene of disorder. That is the demand which I make upon those gentlemen if I have the unanimous consent of the House to make that demand; and for one I wish to divest myself of all responsibility as to the scene itself, as to the relative measure of fault on either side. I recognize, Mr. Speaker, that all that passed between those two gentlemen which was personal concerns them and them alone; and all that this House has to deal with is that which is offensive and derogatory and discreditable to its own character as a parliamentary body. I have great confidence (although I have no knowledge upon the matter) that both gentlemen, without hesitation, without waiting to require this House to determine which of the two should make the apology first, will feel that they, independently of their relations to each other, have each for himself offended and insulted this House and that before any further question is dealt with they should relieve themselves of that offense. That offense can only be obliterated by the apology of those gentlemen, one and the other, to this House. That is the proposition I make with the unanimous consent of the House—that before any other question is entertained, before we go into any question of inquiry—that we shall divest this House of the insult and the outra

Mr. McLane. If they do not do it, then it will be for any man in this House to propose any remedy he pleases.

Mr. CONGER. I do not think the gentleman from Maryland has raised a question of privilege. It is not a question of privilege for a member to intercede with this House to give time to and to arge gentlemen who have offended against the dignity of the House to make apologies. That is not a question of privilege at all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposed the gentleman from Maryland would accompany his statement with a resolution.

Mr. McLane. I do not propose to leave it voluntary with gentlemen, but I am asking unanimous consent of the House to require an apology of those gentlemen.

Mr. Conger. I do not know it enhances at all the dignity of this House that it supplicates offenders to apologize to it for their conduct, and therefore I think the question of privilege is not well taken.

Mr. Weaver. Mr. Speaker, I reiterate—

Mr. Bowman. I rise with extreme reluctance, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. McLane. I have not surrendered the floor. I yielded, I suppose, to the gentleman from Michigan, but I did not hear a word he said.

The SPEAKER.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will protect the gentleman from Maryland in whatever rights he may have.

Mr. McLANE. I was actually in the act of explaining to the House that I did not submit it at all as a proposition voluntary on the part of those gentlemen, but I asked the unanimous consent of the House that we should make that disposition of the question, that these gentlemen should be required to make to this House an apology. That was the question I raised. You may do it by resolution, but quite as efficiently and effectively by unanimous consent of the House.

The SPEAKER. A question of privilege does not require unanimous consent.

imous consent.

Mr. BOWMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise with reluctance as a younger member of the "House," and I had hoped that the unpleasant task would have fallen upon some of the older members which I now deem it my duty to assume, and that is to point out what seems to be the only dignified course for us to pursue. The night has passed, and we have had opportunity for calm reflection. We sit here as judges to-day, not to hold the scales between these two men, not to decide which day, not to hold the scales between these two men, not to decide which was guilty of the greater wrong or the greater provocation—we care nothing for their quarrels; but the crime, for it is a crime, we are considering to day is an insult offered to this House and all the gentlemen of this House individually, to Congress and the country.

There is hardly a man here who yesterday did not hang his head with shame and take it as a personal disgrace to himself that such an occurrence should take place on the floor of this House. And it is our duty before the people and the country to put the stamp of our condemnation upon that occurrence. We feel it as a personal disgrace. To-day all through this country and in foreign lands they are reading that a pot-house brawl, a gambling-house quarrel, a fight with fists, only prevented by force, took place on the floor of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. REAGAN. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. REAGAN. I rise to a question of order. Mr. BOWMAN. I offered my resolution as a substantive proposition.

Mr. REAGAN. That is the point of order I intended to make—that there was nothing before the House.

Mr. McLANE. I did not yield for that or any other resolution.

Mr. BOWMAN. I have the floor, recognized by the Speaker.

Mr. McLANE. I hope I can have the attention of the House for

Mr. BOWMAN. I have the floor, recognized by the Speaker.
Mr. McLane. I hope I can have the attention of the House for one moment. I ask unanimous consent—
Mr. BOWMAN. I object; it cannot be done.
The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the resolution to be read.
Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I beg to suggest that perhaps both of these gentlemen are willing of their own motion to make an apology to the House. If so, certainly it will be more agreeable to them, and equally so to the House, and therefore I think they ought to be given an opportunity for a personal explanation, to determine the question for themselves, whether they desire of their own motion, from their own sense of justice to themselves, to the House, and to the country, to make this explanation before any proceedings are taken which look toward a threat or coercion against them on the part of the House. It will certainly be more agreeable to them to do it now than then, and therefore I hope, if the two gentlemen feel so disposed, and feel they have infringed on the rights of the House, they will make an apology now under the head of personal explanation before any proceedings are taken, or before any resolutions are read.

Mr. BOWMAN. Read my resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Virginia that it is not in order to interrupt a question of privilege by a member claiming the floor for personal explanation, and thus to have two subjects before the House at one and the same time.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. That is a question of high privilege, too.

Mr. BOWMAN. I offered a substantive proposition, the only one

The SPEAKER. The Chair will in due and proper time decide whether the resolution embraces a question of privilege.

Mr. HASKELL. I say if the gentleman from Maryland will yield for a moment, since he asks unanimous consent of the House, I desire to state that for one I shall withhold my consent from the inauguration of any proceeding or the adoption of any motion by this House that looks to the selection of two of the offending parties engaged in the tumult of yesterday and holding them up as an example. I shall oppose any motion which proposes to single them out for condign punishment to the neglect or exclusion of other parties that in that scene of tumult might be deemed, and were, equally guilty. I see in the proceedings thus far a certain drift toward that action, and in my judgment it is due to the dignity of this body to determine whether any other party or parties are not equally worthy of the censure of the House as those who are specially named by the gentleman in his remarks. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that there was a tumult here in which other parties were engaged just as offensively to the dignity of the House as the gentlemen mentioned. And therefore I shall object to giving my consent, at least, to any action or proposed action which singles them out.

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BROWNE. I wish to ask if there is any substantive proposition before the House. gaged in the tumult of yesterday and holding them up as an exam-tion before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland stated that he rose to a question of privilege. Having stated to the House the subject-matter of what he regarded as a privileged question, the Chair decided under Rule IX that it was a question of privilege.

Mr. BROWNE. Ought not a substantive proposition be submitted for the action of the House before the question is discussed?

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposed the gentleman from Maryland would formulate his proposition in some way so as to bring it before the House for action.

land would formulate his proposition in some way so as to bring it before the House for action.

Mr. BOWMAN. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOWMAN. My point of order is, that having been recognized by the Chair, having made a few remarks, and having offered a substantive proposition, which has been sent up to be read by the Clerk, whether under these circumstances I have not still possession of the floor?

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposed the gentleman from Maryland to have yielded to the gentleman from Massachusetts, under which supposition the Chair recognized the gentleman.

Mr. BOWMAN. I got up and was recognized by the Chair.
The SPEAKER. Under the impression stated by the Chair.
Mr. McLANE. I have not given consent to the introduction of any such proposition, nor have I yielded the floor for any purpose, and the House will bear me witness to that statement.
The SPEAKER. After the gentleman from Maryland makes his proposition, the Chair will entertain the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts as an amendment thereto.

from Massachusetts as an amendment thereto.

Mr. McLANE. Mr. Speaker, I desire, if it be possible, to dispose of this question by the unanimous consent of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] makes the point that there is no substantive proposition before the House. If the gentleman from Maryland has any proposition to submit, the Chair thinks he had better submit it so as to avoid the question which is resized.

Mr. McLANE. I am quite aware that my proposition ought to be submitted in writing, and I should have done so, such being my purpose, as soon as I had completed the few remarks that I intended to make by way of explanation. I now submit a proposition which I ask to be read.

The SPEAKER. The proposition of the gentleman from Maryland will be read.

will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That the gentlemen from Iowa and from Illinois be required to now apologize to this House for their conduct of yesterday in this House.

apologize to this House for their conduct of yesterday in this House.

Mr. McLANE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say in reply to the inquiry of the gentleman from Kansas that it was altogether unintentional on my part to exclude every other member of this House from his share in that disorder on yesterday. I am quite as well aware as he or any other member upon this floor that if we enter upon that question at all that almost every member of the committee, with the exception of a very small number, is more or less responsible for that disorder, and I supposed that I could have appealed with confidence to the general sense of this House that nearly every honorable gentleman now sitting here would feel that he was in some degree responsible for the disorder on both sides of the House for more than sponsible for the disorder on both sides of the House for more than sponsible for the disorder on both sides of the House for more than an hour and a half of yesterday's proceedings, and—

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Maryland will make some exception. I for one interrupted the gentleman from Iowa and made an effort to bring him to the discussion of the bill under consideration; but the committee did not sustain me in my effort, but permitted the discussion to drift on, involving extraneous matters, which culminated in what was in my opinion the most shameful exhibition that any man on this floor has ever made.

made.

Mr. McLANE. Mr. McLANE. Out of respect for the gentleman from New York personally, I will permit him to interrupt me to that extent. But I stated nothing which justified that interruption. I did not say that every member was responsible for that disorder, but I did not say that every member was responsible for that disorder, but I did say that nearly every member of the committee was to a greater or less degree responsible for it, and I think the gentleman from New York might very well content himself with being one of the small number that I excepted. There were, Mr. Speaker, very few members that did not participate in that scene of disorder. It was not as discreditable as the climax, certainly. I am willing to admit that; but, sir, if the climax had not occurred the country would have been at no loss to stigmatize the conduct of the Committee of the Whole as discreditable and disgraceful. As for the chairman of that committee, whom I do not see at present in his seat, if he were here I am sure he would bear me witness that it was beyond his power to prevent the disorder which occurred or to have any effect whatever upon the committee in that respect. He will bear me witness that gentlemen on all sides quit their seats, came down and crowded into the area here in front of the Speaker's seat. Although I did not participate in it myself any more than my honorable friend from New York, yet I do not feel it necessary to make any personal exception in my own favor. I sat here and shared with this body the responsibility for this misbehavior, as I think every gentleman did who failed to remonstrate and call to order and insist upon the enforcement of the rules of the House, which should be as much respected in committee as in the House.

Mr. KENNA. Then the gentleman ought to include his own name in the resolution.

Mr. McLANE. No, sir; I do not think I ought to include my name in that resolution; because there is a very great difference of degree in the offense that was committed. I did not either quit my seat to assault a fellow-member, nor did I exert myself to load down with the weight of my person either of those two honorable gentlemen who did quit their seats with such an intent.

Mr. FORT. I would suggest to the gentleman from Maryland—

The Strands. The Chair will keep his and wishes to the trules of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland states he does not

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland states he does not yield.

Mr. McLANE. Let me remind the gentleman from Illinois that if I yield to any such interruption I would deprive myself of the advantage I now possess, which is that of appealing if possible to the unanimous sentiment of this House. I will endeavor not to say a word, and I am sure that up to this time I have not said a word, from which any man on either side of this House can dissent.

The scene of disorder to which I have referred was such a scene as I have described. The great majority of the House participated in that scene of disorder—encouraged that debate which finally led to that offensive and insulting conclusion.

I wish to say to my friend from Kansas [Mr. Haskell.] that that is precisely why I propose this resolution. The reason why I content myself with an apology and why I want this whole transaction to be effaced is because I recognize there is a great responsibility resting upon this House for the encouragement it gave to that scene. My desire is, without entering any further into an inquiry as to the matter, to assert the privilege of this House by demanding an apology. That is all I do by my resolution. And I exclude everybody else who was guilty of more or less disorder, because the two gentlemen I have named, the honorable member from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] and the honorable gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. Weaver,] were the only two members who did reach that crisis to which I have referred. It is from them alone I would ask the apology; and I do it not only because it is a quick and to me a satisfactory conclusion, but because I am perfectly satisfied that it would be impossible by any inquiry this House could make to apportion to every member his share in that disorder.

Now, sir, that is all I have to say in support of the resolution which Now, sir, that is all I have to say in support of the resolution which I propose for the adoption of this House.

Mr. FORT. I desire to make an inquiry.

Mr. McLANE. I will only add, with the permission of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. FORT,] that having said all I have to say and being desirous that the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Iowa should give consent to this adjustment, I now yield to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. Weaver,] from whom I took the floor on this question of privilege. I yield to him that he may answer this inquiry: Will he make voluntarily such an apology?

Mr. HASKELL. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HASKELL. The resolution of the gentleman from Maryland implies a censure by the House of the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FORT. Of all the gentlemen from Iowa and of all the gentlemen from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. The resolution has been modified, and will be read as modified.

Mr. FORT. I would like to know when it was modified.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk informs the Chair that it has been modified by authority of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] so as to include only the one member from Iowa and the one member isided by authority of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] so as to include only the one member from Iowa and the one member from Illinois, who are directly involved.

Mr. HASKELL. I desire the attention of the House to this point: the gentleman from Maryland has introduced a resolution which is now pending, in which the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Iowa are made the subjects of intended or implied censure. He then yields the floor to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Weaver] for a personal explanation, which he has not the right to do. The gentleman from Iowa has no right to the floor, and cannot take the floor while he is the subject of the deliberation of this House. And, Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted, I desire to call attention to the declaration of the gentleman from Maryland that a large number of the members of this House have been guilty of disorderly conduct on this floor, and to the further fact that of this large number of gentlemen who have been disorderly on the floor of the House of Representatives his resolution singles out but two. Sir, I deem it better due from this House as a body that they make their apology to the country rather than, having suffered an adjournment of the session of yesterday to take place, they should now seek to shoulder from their own persons the obloquy that belongs there and single out two members upon this floor as the scape-goats of their sins.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.
Mr. HASKELL. That the gentleman from Maryland has no right to yield to the gentleman from Iowa, and that the gentleman from Iowa is not entitled to the floor either by the gentleman from Maryland yielding to him or in his own right until this resolution is acted upon.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is a clear line of distincupon.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is a clear line of distinction between a question of privilege and a personal explanation, which the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. McLane,] in view of the statement of the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. HASKELL,] had better statement of the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. HASKELL,] had better recognize.

Mr. McLane. I cheerfully submit to the ruling of the Chair. I really did not intend to yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Weaver] for any personal explanation. But having in my mind the fact that by my question of privilege I had taken the floor from that gentleman, I thought it was only courteous and proper that I should yield to him before I concluded, and give him an opportunity to say what will after all be a personal explanation.

But under the ruling of the Chair I make no such yielding, nor shall I continue my remarks further than to say to this House what I have already said, that I have singled out the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Weaver] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sparks] in that resolution for the reason that on my conscience as a gentleman and a member of this House I believe those two gentlemen were the principal ones offending, and I believe it would be trifling on my part to attempt to confound them with honorable gentlemen who were more or less responsible for promoting that discussion. There can be no comparison between those two gentlemen and any other members of this House who participated in that disorder, whether they are honorable gentlemen who sate in their seats cheering offensive epithets, or whether they are the other class of honorable gentlemen who rushed to the area and made themselves so conspicuous in preventing a collision. For one I do not believe that we had any right to do either. I was just as careful not to interfere with what took place in the area as I was just as careful not to interfere with what took place in the area as I was just as careful not to interfere with what took place in the area as I was just as careful not to interfere with what took place in the area I was just as careful not to interfere with what took place in the area as I was sitting in my seat not to encourage either of those gentlemen men.

Mr. BOWMAN. I object—
Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOWMAN] will pardon me; I desire to say a few words.

Mr. BOWMAN. I shall take but a few moments, a very few. [Cries of "Go on!"]
I object to the resolution of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. McLane,] and I propose to offer a substitute therefor. A gross outrage, which the experienced gentleman from New York [Mr. Fernando Wood] criticises as the worst he ever witnessed upon this floor has taken place. The two gentlemen concerned in it bandied Nando Wood criticises as the worst he ever witnessed upon this floor, has taken place. The two gentlemen concerned in it bandied between themselves the vilest and most opprobrious epithets that could pass from one man to another. They led up to a personal quarrel; they boasted of their fighting weights, [laughter;] they treated it as a joke. Not content with their words, they came down into the area, endeavored to strip off their coats, and, as they were held by men on each side, swayed back and forth and were separated only by force. Now, what is proposed by the gentleman from Maryland? It is proposed to do nothing, to administer no punishment, to allow those men to get up and simply say that they are sorry, to pass over this disgrace upon Congress and upon the country. If those gentlemen had been two boys fighting upon the sidewalk, they would have spent the night in the Tombs and in the morning would have been brought to a police court and fined or imprisoned. But they are Congressmen, belonging to the highest legislative body in the country, to which the people look for calm and dignified discussion of great matters affecting their lives, their property, and their interests. And I say that for the insult offered to us all, for the disgrace to Congress, such punishment should be inflicted as will demonstrate to the country and to members that the dignity of Congress and its claims to the respect of the people shall be maintained and these abuses must end. There have been many of these fights, many of these differences, though none quite so gross. I believe it is due to us and due to the country that we should express in the strongest terms our sense of indignation and of condemnation of these acts, and should write upon our record-book a warning for the future government of this Congress. I speak this with no feeling of anger. I believe that these gentlemen do regret it; I believe they have the true manliness and bravery to stand up here and say they did wrong and are sorry for it, and that they apologize to the House.

But the offense has been committed; the wrong has been submitted to. I believe that if we pass over this, if we allow it to go unpunished, if we do not show to the country and to the people that we value the dignity of this Hall above all personal feelings for these gentlemen, we shall do a great wrong. If I may say it without its being taken in a ludicrous sense, this Hall is a sacred tribunal. But that assertion is almost Indicrous because by the course of proceedings in Congress we show that it is anything but sacred. The Judges of the Supreme Court administer the laws—we make those laws—on which the people depend for life and liberty and happiness. The effects are felt in every household.

Now, when we allow this Congress to come into contempt, to be made the scene of personal brawls and pot-house fights, when we allow the dignity of the House to be tampered with, we lower it in the opinion of the people, and we disgrace ourselves in the act and are false to our high duty.

With personal feelings of friendship for these gentlemen

GRESSIONAL RECORD.

The SPEAKER. It will be read as a part of the gentleman's re-

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Sparks. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. Weaver. Yes, sir.

Mr. Sparks. A short time ago some little trouble occurred between the gentleman and myself, and may have arisen from a misapprehension. My remark to the gentleman was this, that during the time this vicious legislation which had been referred to was being adopted by the republican party be was a republican; namely, when the law of 1868 was passed, and when the laws of 1871 and 1873 were passed. I did not of course mean to charge the gentleman that since he had become a member of what is known as the greenback party he had been inconsistent at all. But the gentleman misunderstood me. I simply meant to state what is on record, and to say that while this vicious legislation was being adopted on the money question, the law of 1869, then the law of 1870-71, and then the silver demonetization law of 1873—during all that time the gentleman was aiding the republican party by being a member of it.

Mr. Weaver. That is true. I do not yield further.

Mr. Sparks. The gentleman is as much interested in this as I am.

Mr. Weaver. I will say that I never allow myself to get excited in debate. There were two gentlemen talking at the same time, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bland] and the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Sparks.] I understood the gentleman from Illinois to refer to some remarks which I had made during the campaign, and that is why I made the remark I did. The gentleman replied were offensively that that was a falsehood. Now, having been compelled once to apologize to this House, the gentleman should be very careful about using language of that kind. I did not take it as a personal insult; I did not take it as applying to me. If the gentleman ever does apply such language to me, and does it within the reach of my arm, I certainly shall personally chastise him. [Laughter.] But as he does not do so now—

Mr. Sparks. This man certainly will not make that remark here and refuse to let me answer it. I was told had affed the republican party during the time when this vicious legislation was adopted.

Mr. Weaver. I understand all that now.

Mr. Sparks. To relieve the gentleman from that I made my statement. The gentleman talks about what he will do within the reach of his arm. Sir, that gentleman could not do anything "within the reach of his arm." I spurn with contempt the reach of his arm. The reach of his arm would affect me about as little as it affected the last presidential election. [Laughter.]

Mr. Weaver. That is sufficient. Does not the gentleman now see that he ought never to open his mouth at all when he is excited? He spurns the reach of my arm. He can well do so in the temper I now am in. I would not hurt a hair of his head. His apology was ample, and I accept it as such. But I only caution him against the further use of such expressions as, "That is a falsehood," "That is a lie." In Kentucky, I believe, such an expression is regarded as the first blow, and even if I was not as large as a monse, I would show a proper spirit. And the gentleman is mistaken about my fighting weight; it is one hundred and eighty-five pounds. [Great laughter.] Does the gentleman say that I said he was a liar?

Mr. Weaver. The gentleman said it was a falsehood, which is the same thing.
Mr. Sparks. You said so.
Mr. Weaver. No.
Mr. Sparks. Yours were the first offensive words.
Mr. Weaver. No, you cannot make that out.
Mr. Weaver. No, you cannot make that out.
Mr. Weaver. Well, we are all right now.
Mr. Weaver. Well, we are all right now.
Mr. Sparks. You misunderstood me and said that I was stating that which was not true, and wanting the qualities of a gentleman you failed to remedy it.
Mr. Weaver. Oh, no.
Mr. Sparks. That is all about it. I think it was developed at the last election that you wanted those qualities.
Mr. Weaver. I denounce the gentleman personally as a liar on the floor of this House.
Mr. Sparks. You are a scoundrel and a villain and a liar. [Mr. Weaver then approached Mr. Sparks in a menacing attitude.] If you get within wreach I will hit you.

approached Mr. Sparks in a menacing attitude.] If you get within my reach I will hit you.

The members of the committee generally rose to their feet, and many came to the front, some of them interposing between the parties.

The Speaker took the chair and called the House to order, saying: The Speaker has taken the chair for the purpose of restoring order, believing that parliamentary propriety and practice justify him in so doing.

The Sergeant-at-Arms, (by direction of the Speaker,) with his mace of office, moved about the floor of the House, and order was restored.

Mr. McLANE and Mr. REAGAN addressed the Chair.
Mr. BOWMAN. I retain the floor.
Mr. REAGAN. I want to call attention to the necessity of a correction in the RECORD. There is an error which does an injustice, and I am sure no one will object to making the correction.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman hereafter to correct the RECORD.

to correct the RECORD.

Mr. REAGAN. I will make the request at the proper time.
Mr. BOWMAN. I understand that I hold the floor.
Mr. McLANE. I want to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question.

question.

Mr. BOWMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. McLANE. I want to know from that gentleman why he commenced reading this RECORD on page 23?

Mr. BOWMAN. Because, as I said, it is not for this House to hold the scales balanced between these gentlemen, and say which had the greater provocation or did the greater wrong.

Mr. McLANE. Very wall

Mr. McLANE. Very well.

Mr. BOWMAN. I only cared to have that part of the RECORD read which showed that both of them had grossly insulted the House and the country. We do not care which was right or which was

Mr. McLANE. The gentleman has not answered my question.

Mr. BOWMAN. That is not for us to determine. We are not settling the quarrels of either, or the charges of either against the other.

Let them settle those for themselves, and between themselves. As independent a high tribunal we are trying here the question of an insult Let them settle those for themselves, and between themselves. As judges of a high tribunal we are trying here the question of an insult offered to our body in its collective capacity; and I have had read only enough to show that those two gentlemen by gross language and grosser actions had insulted the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States. If the gentleman from Maryland thinks he can swing this great inquiry off into the petty inquiry, which was wrong and which was right, and into a settlement of the personal quarrels of these individuals, he misunderstands the magnitude of the question and the enormity of the offense. I ask that my resolution be read. tion be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That, for gross breach of the privileges, rules, and decorum of this House, James B. Weaver, of Iowa, and William A. J. Sparks, of Illinois, be, and they hereby are, expelled from the House of Representatives of the Forty-sixth Congress of the United States.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I make the point of order that this resolution cannot be offered now; and I will give my reasons if the Chair will hear me.

Mr. McLANE. I do not understand that the gentleman from Massachusetts has yielded the floor.

Mr. BOWMAN. No, sir.

Mr. McLANE. He has not answered my question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia makes a point of order on the resolution.

Mr. McLANE. The resolution is not yet submitted; it was only read for information.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Massachusetts to submit the resolution.

Mr. BOWMAN. I understand that I hold the floor, and I submit

Mr. BROWNE. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to yield to me. That we get the whole question before the House, I desire to offer an amendment to the substitute.

Mr. McLANE. The gentleman from Massachusetts gave me per-

Mr. McLANE. The gentleman from Massachusetts gave me permission to ask a question.

Mr. BROWNE. He answered it.
Mr. McLANE. I beg pardon.
Mr. BROWNE. He tried to.
The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?
Mr. BOWMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] for the purpose he has indicated.
The SPEAKER. There is a point of order made against the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts.
Mr. BROWNE. Let me appeal to the gentleman from Virginia

[Mr. Harris] to withdraw that point for the present. When I offer my substitute he can make a point of order as to both.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I withdraw the point of order for the

Mr. McLANE. If the gentleman from Virginia withdraws his point of order I may be permitted to press my interrogatory addressed to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland will observe that the gentleman from Massachusetts yields at this time to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. Browne.]

Mr. BROWNE. As an amendment to the substitute I offer what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas on yesterday, when the House was in the Committee of the Whole, Mr. Sparks, a Representative from the State of Illinois, and Mr. Weaver, a Representative from the State of Iowa, used language and were guilty of conduct which, in the opinion of the House, was undignified and unparliamentary and a breach of the privileges of the House: Therefore,

Be it resolved. That a special committee of three be appointed by the Speaker to investigate the conduct of the Representatives aforesaid, and report to the House without delay what proceedings should be taken, if any, to vindicate its dignity.

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say simply a word. I hope that a committee will be appointed to investigate this matter, because much that occurred yesterday does not appear in the RECORD and could not be put in the RECORD. I desire to put not only the conduct of these distinguished gentlemen, but, if possible, the conduct of the whole House on the record that it may all be seen and adjudged the conduct of the words. I think it is impossible to get the convergence of year. by the country. I think it is impossible to get the occurrence of yesterday properly before the people unless the matter be referred to a committee, that it may report it all.

Mr. McLANE. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a ques-

Mr. BOWMAN. I will hear it.
Mr. McLANE. The gentleman from Massachusetts had read to the House a certain part of the RECORD from page 23, commencing where

Mr. Sparks addressed this interrogatory—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. BOWMAN. I yield for a question.

Mr. McLANE. Then follows a colloquy between those two gentlemen, in which the issue was who first uttered the offensive words, who first said it was not true. If the gentleman from Massachusetts had caused to be read from the Clerk's desk from page 22, he would have found a colloquy to which the subsequent words referred.

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

have found a colloquy to which the subsequent words referred.

Mr. BOWMAN. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. McLANE. Certainly.

Mr. BOWMAN. I have no objection whatever to its being read, but I do not think it has any bearing on this case whatever.

Mr. McLANE. I ask the Clerk to read from page 22.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks to have read a part of the Congressional Record of this morning. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLANE. Will the Clerk commence where Mr. Sparks says

"The gentleman from Iowa was aiding them at that time"? That is where the whole thing commenced. That is where the first offense

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Sparks. The gentleman from Iowa was aiding them at that time. Mr. Weaver. That is not true.

Mr. McLANE. That is where the first offense was given.
Mr. CONGER, Mr. WHITE, and others. "Go on and read further."
Mr. McLANE. Very well, let the Clerk proceed further.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SPARKS. Were you not a republican?
Mr. Weaver. I understand the gentleman to say that during the campaign I aided the republican party.
Mr. SPARKS. Were you not a republican, and as a republican did you not vote for the men that passed those laws?
Mr. Weaver. I understood you to say I aided the republican party during the

Mr. Weaver. I understood a republican.
Mr. Sparks. I said you were a republican.
Mr. Weaver. The gentleman is crazy.
Mr. Sparks. The gentleman states a falsehood.
Mr. Weaver. I rise to a question of privilege.
Mr. Bland. I bave the floor, and call for order in the House.
Mr. Weaver. I rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. BOWMAN. I demand the previous question on my resolution.
Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a question of privilege.
The SPEAKER. There is one question of privilege already pending.

Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a question of order. Does the gentle-man from Massachusetts demand the previous question on the adop-

The SPEAKER. He offers his as a substitute and then proposes further to admit an amendment as indicated by the gentleman from Indiana.

Indiana.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to state—
The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks under the rules he should treat the two latter propositions as amendments to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Maryland.
Mr. SPRINGER. I rise to a question of order.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. REAGAN. Let me ask permission to have a paragraph of the RECORD corrected. It is materially wrong as it is.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman propose to interject it here?
Mr. SPRINGER. I did not hear the gentleman.
Mr. REAGAN. I ask in justice to the facts that the third paragraph in the left-hand column on the twenty-fourth page of the RECORD be corrected, to show the facts. I desire to say that the language as it was used by Mr. SPARKS was, "You are a scoundrel and a villain and a liar," and that was the end of that sentence; but the words "and if you come within my reach I will hit you" are published in the RECORD as if they were a part of the same sentence, when they were not. The gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPARKS.] on completing the RECORD as if they were a part of the same sentence, when they were not. The gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Sparks,] on completing the part I have mentioned, paused. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Weaver] was then passing round through the aisle toward him and approaching him; and then the new sentence, "If you come within my reach I will hit you," was uttered. It was not a part of the same sentence; both were not spoken at the same time as reported in the RECORD. I ask it be corrected accordingly, if there be no objection. Mr. CONVERSE. I desire to suggest another correction of the RECORD. The statement as set out in the RECORD as made by Mr. Sparks is, "Perhaps the gentleman is not so much interested in this as I am." Mr. Sparks's language was, "Perhaps the gentleman is as much interested in this as I am." I ask that it be corrected. The RECORD states the reverse of what Mr. Sparks said.

Mr. SPRINGER. The point of order I raised is this: the proceedings to which the pending resolution refers took place in the Committee of the Whole House, and in order that this House may know what was said and done in committee the words spoken in the committee was said and done in committee the words spoken in the committee must be reported to the House, and the words excepted to must be read from the Clerk's desk and known to the House before we can read from the Clerk's desk and known to the House before we can act upon them as a question of privilege.

The resolution proposes to expel two members for disorderly conduct and for words used in debate. What are the words? The gentleman had something read from the RECORD as the basis of that action. Before gentlemen rise in their places and say that the RECORD is not correct the House must determine what were the words used in debate.

Mr. McLANE. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McLANE. My motion, to which the gentleman from Illinois is taking exception, has no reference to words spoken at all—not the slightest.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is listening to the gentleman and endeavoring to find out the point of order he desires to make.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the gentleman from Maryland will pay attention to what I am saying and the decision of the Chair he will not

The SPEAKER. The Chair entertained the resolution of the gentleman from Massachusetts as an amendment to that submitted by the gentleman from Maryland without objection on the part of any one.

Mr. SPRINGER. Very well; my point of order is that this is an adjudication as to words used in Committee of the Whole, when the words have not been reported to the House, and the House, therefore, has no information in reference to them for the reason that the alleged offense was not reported to the House, and that therefore under such circumstances the House could not take cognizance of them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not make any decision of this question or any decision touching this matter based upon clauses 4 and 5 of Rule XIV; but the Chair recognized the gentleman from Maryland in his right under the privileges granted by Rule IX. As to the point made by the gentleman that the House was not aware of what occurred in Committee of the Whole, the Chair has only to say that the officers in front of the Chair known as the official reporters of the House are sworn officers of the House and they have spread upon the Congressional Record what did occur, and therefore the House, the Chair thinks, in consequence of that official report, is fully advised as to the truth of what took place in Committee of the Whole on yesterday.

Mr. REAGAN. Before action is had I hope that the RECORD may be corrected in the manner that I have suggested as a matter of justice to both gentlemen, who agree as to the statement which I have made in reference to it.

The SPEAKER. Corrections can be made in the stereotyped edition of the RECORD.

Mr. McLANE. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The Chair has ruled upon the point of order raised by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SPRINGER. Do I understand the Chair as holding that objectionable words spoken in the Committee of the Whole can be taken notice of in the House without a report from the chairman of the Committee of the Whole and a statement of the facts in accordance. Committee of the House without a report from the chairman of the Committee of the Whole, and a statement of the facts in accordance with the rules of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair made no ruling directly upon that question, which view is based upon clauses 4 and 5 of Rule XIV; but, as already stated, he recognized the gentleman from Maryland under Rule IX, which refers to the privileges of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. Will the Chair be kind enough to state the question park before the House?

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the previous question be sustained on the several propositions pending?

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, before that is done I desire to ask the gentleman from Maryland to modify his resolution, that the gentleman from Iowa and the gentleman from Illinois be required to now apologize, by striking out the words "be required" and inserting "be permitted" to apologize. The objection is that it is alleged by gentlemen on the other side of the House, and by one or two gentlemen on this side, that in its present form it seems as if the House was seeking to avoid its responsibility by calling upon these gentlemen to apologize for the objectionable proceedings on yesterday, thereby placing the House in the attitude of asking or requesting an apology. Now, sir, I feel authorized to say that I know both of the gentlemen directly mentioned here feel their unpleasant relations to this House very keenly, and desire now to make an apology. And if it is permitted, I ask the gentleman from Maryland to modify his resolution as I have indicated.

Mr. McLANE. I have not the slightest objection to that indicated.

Mr. McLANE. I have not the slightest objection to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the modification suggested by the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. McLANE. Before the question is put, I desire to say a word further. Certain resolutions have been read for the information of the House. I do not understand that there is any resolution pending for the consideration of the House; neither the resolution of the gentleman from Massachusetts nor of the gentleman from Indiana are resolutions in order as amendments to the resolution which I have presented.

The SPEAKER. The resolutions which have been submitted are offered as substitutes to the proposition of the gentleman from Maryland. The resolution proposed by the gentleman from Massachusetts grows out of the power given by the first article of the fifth section and second clause of the Constitution of the United States. That requires a two-thirds vote.

requires a two-thirds vote.

Mr. McLANE. I ask that it be read again.
Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I make the point of order, and desire to have a ruling of the Chair upon it—
The SPEAKER. One point at a time.
Mr. McLANE. I ask for the reading of the resolution of the gentleman from Massachusetts.
The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.
The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That, for gross breach of the privileges, rules, and decorum of this House, James B. Weaver, of Iowa, and William A. J. Sparks, of Illinois, be, and they hereby are, expelled from the House of Representatives of the Forty-sixth Congress of the United States.

Mr. McLANE. I make no point on that.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the main question be or-

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I desire now, Mr. Speaker, to submit the point of order to which I have referred.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I make the point of order, and I wish to make it distinctly, that we cannot in this House call upon a member to answer for words spoken in debate after intervening business has taken place, unless the language to which objection has been made shall have been taken down at the time on the demand of the member objecting to it.

member objecting to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has practically overruled that by stating that he did not recognize the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] under clauses 4 and 5 of Rule XIV, but that he did recognize the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] under clauses 4 and 5 of Rule XIV, but that he did recognize the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] under clauses 4 and 5 of Rule XIV, but that he did recognize the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] under clauses 4 and 5 of Rule XIV, but that he did recognize the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] under clauses 4 and 5 of Rule XIV, but that he did recognize the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] under clauses 4 and 5 of Rule XIV, but that he did recognize the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] under clauses 4 and 5 of Rule XIV, but that he did recognize the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] under clauses 4 and 5 of Rule XIV, but that he did recognize the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] under clauses 4 and 5 of Rule XIV, but that he did recognize the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] under clauses 4 and 5 of Rule XIV, but that he did recognize the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] under clauses 4 and 5 of Rule XIV, but that he did recognize the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] under clauses 4 and 5 of Rule XIV, but that he did recognize the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] under clauses 4 and 5 of Rule XIV, but that he did recognize the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] under clauses 4 and 5 of Rule XIV, but that he did recognize the gentleman from Mr. McLane] nize him under Rule IX.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. If the Chair will pardon me for a moment, I desire to state that at the time the rules of the House were ment, I desire to state that at the time the rules of the House were enacted we had no short-hand reporters and in order that a man who was called to order might know the charge against him a shield was thrown around him that the objectionable words should be taken down at the time and that he should be protected so as not to be required to depend upon the memory of those persons who might have heard the language objected to. The objectionable words were required to be taken down at once; for, if intervening business took place it was not permitted to do so, and this was done in order that he might know the charge made against him and further that there might be no mistake as to the language used and the offense with which he was charged. The Speaker will see, if his judgment is a correct one upon this question, to what extent and to what grave results it might lead. Suppose the row which took place here on yesterday had taken place this afternoon just prior to the recess when the House will not be in session again for two weeks and there were no short-hand reporters to take down accurately the words as spoken and commit them to writing at the time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has never yet decided a point of order on supposition.

on supposition.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Suppose, then, this recess had taken place, and a trial of those gentlemen had come up two weeks afterward, the words not having been written down and the House trusting alone to human memory as to the accuracy of the words with which those gentlemen were charged. I make the point of order under the rules to which I have referred, and if the Speaker will allow me, for I do not occupy his attention often, I think I can show that the rule to which the Chair referred has no application. Clause 4 of Rule XIV says:

If any member in speaking or otherwise transgress the rules of the House, the Speaker shall, or any member may, call him to order.

The rule evidently contemplates that for every transgression the peaker, on his own motion, by virtue of the dignity of his position, Speaker, on his own motion, by virtue of the dignity of his position, shall call the member to order, or any other member may do so. And if neither the Speaker nor any other member calls the member to order, that is prima facie evidence he has committed no offense, and is at liberty to proceed. The rule goes on to provide that if a member is called to order he is required immediately to take his seat and the words shall be at once written down and read aloud at the Clerk's desk. Clause 5 of Rule XIV says:

If a member is called to order for words spoken in debate, the member calling him to order shall indicate the words excepted to.

He must indicate the words. Are there any words indicated here? They run over half a dozen pages of the Congressional Record. If you expel these two gentlemen or censure them in the language of the resolution, history will ask what were the words for which that proceeding was taken; and people will have to look through the musty Record, and one will conjecture one set of words and another another. We thus see the force and the sense of the rule which is intended to obviate this:

The member calling him to order shall indicate the words excepted to, and they shall be taken down in writing at the Clerk's desk and read aloud to the House;—

So that they may be corrected if there shall be error-

But he shall not be held to answer, nor be subject to the censure of the House therefor, if further debate or other business has intervened.

Why is that provided? What is the reason for the rule that he shall not be held to answer after further debate or other business has intervened? It is founded on the correct idea that afterward there may be error in regard to what was the language he used, and injustice might be done a member if before action was taken you proceeded one iota further than the commission of the offense.

I fall back upon this rule, then, and say it shows that Rule IX has no bearing on this question. Rule IX states what are questions of privilege, but does not determine the mode of procedure.

The SPEAKER. That the House will determine.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. It is for the Speaker first to determine the rules, and not for the House. The House can do it on appeal. It is for the Speaker to determine first.

Mr. BOWMAN. I desire to be permitted to make one suggestion.

Mr. MILLS. I wish to inquire of the Chair what is the pending question.

question.

question.

The SPEAKER. The pending question is the demand for the previous question, pending which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Harris] is on the floor on a point of order.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I submit it is fully competent for the House to give these gentlemen the opportunity of carrying out the idea I started with. If they desire to apologize to the House or have any explanation to make, they should have an opportunity to do it. Under the ruling of the Speaker, impliedly at least, they must sit with their mouths closed and locks on them, and cannot express their regrets for what occurred. I submit that under the rules they have a right to rise and debate this privileged question; and in speaking to it they have a right to say whether they regret what occurred and make their apology. Among the questions of privilege enumerated in Rule IX are: in Rule IX are:

The rights, reputation, and conduct of members individually in their representative capacity only.

The conduct of members now under investigation is therefore a The conduct of members now under investigation is therefore a privileged question, and, being a question involving individual rights, those members have a right to speak to it as much as any other member of the House. And if in speaking to that question they choose to make a personal explanation or to say something that will relieve them from the censure of the House, they have a right to do so.

Mr. BOWMAN. I wish to make one suggestion in regard to the point of order. The argument of the gentleman from Virginia falls utterly to pieces when you realize that the resolution is based not on the words spoken but on the acts of these members on the floor.

Mr. MCLANE. That is it; it is the disorder.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia insist upon the point of order?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I desire a ruling of the Chair on the point I have made.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I rise to make a parliamentary in-

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Is the pending question now upon the substitute offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOWMAN?

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the demand for the prewious question on all three propositions under the rule.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Very well; I make this point of order on the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts, that each one of the gentlemen named is entitled to be heard separately, and the gentleman from Massachusetts has no right to present their names jointly in a resolution for the action of the House. They are entitled to be heard separately and not jointly.

Mr. MILLS. I desire that the resolution on which we are to vote shall be read.

The SPEAKER. That can be done after the House has voted on the previous question.

Mr. MILLS. Is the proposition to expel?

The SPEAKER. It is what the Chair might term the middle proposition; the one to expel.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. It is a single proposition to expel two member

The SPEAKER. When that point is reached, the Chair will rule upon it.

my new my point is that these parties cannot be called upon to order yet. My point is that these parties cannot be called upon to answer, because the words were not taken down at the time of delivery, and because other business has intervened.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. The Chair has already stated that this proceeding is being conducted under Rule IX. He does not recognize as pending before the House any proceeding under the fourth and fifth clauses of Rule XIV. The Chair might go a little further and say that these gentlemen are really in contempt of the House. Therefore the House should have this matter under its control, which is what the Chair has very carefully permitted, only deciding on the direct question as involved in fully permitted, only deciding on the direct question as involved in the proposition of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. McLane] that it is a question of privilege. The entire subject is now under control of the House, because the House in its collective capacity is affected by this proceeding. Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. We are proceeding under Rule IX, not under Rule XIV; therefore is not the point well taken by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] that both the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Weaver] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sparks] have a right to speak to this question? They can be excluded from speaking only by a proceeding under Rule XIV, and we are now proceeding under Rule IX.

The SPEAKER. In regard to that point the Chair thinks that if the House desires to hear them it can so determine at the proper time by some proposition looking to a permission of the House set a allow by some proposition looking to a permission of the House so to allow. The Chair will take no responsibility or power or right from the House in this respect.

Mr. STEVENSON. I ask that by unanimous consent the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPARKS] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Weaver] be now heard.

Mr. BOWMAN. I object.

WEAVER] be now heard.

Mr. BOWMAN. I object.

Mr. BROWNE. Not until the previous question is voted on.

Mr. WARNER. I think they can claim it as a right.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks at some time the privilege of a hearing should be accorded. The permission, however, should be given by the House.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Does the Chair rule that they have no right to be heard upon a privileged question? that if they are heard it must be by the grace of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated that when this question came up he decided it to be a question of privilege. Having so decided the House has now the absolute and complete control of the subject, to be regulated by its votes.

subject, to be regulated by its votes.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. That ruling is very general; it does not say whether these gentlemen have the right to be heard or not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not decide that.

Mr. BOWMAN. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order raised by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HARRIS] being disposed of, the gentleman will state the point of order he now makes. point of order he now makes

Mr. BOWMAN. Can any one be heard now, pending the motion

Mr. BOWMAN. Can any one be neard now, pending the motion for the previous question?

The SPEAKER. Not if objection be made.

Mr. BOWMAN. I insist upon the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER. The first question is upon the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. Browne,] which will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows: The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas on yesterday, when the House was in the Committee of the Whole, Mr. Sparks, a Representative from the State of Illinois, and Mr. Weaver, a Representative from the State of Iowa, used language and were guilty of conduct which in the opinion of the House was undignified and unparliamentary, and a breach of the privileges of the House: Therefore,

Be it resolved. That a special committee of three be appointed by the Speaker to investigate the conduct of the Representatives aforesaid, and report to the House without delay what proceedings should be taken, if any, to vindicate its dignity.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were-ayes 90, noes 43.

No further count being called for, the resolution, as an amendment, was adopted.

The question was upon adopting the resolution as amended.

Mr. SAMFORD. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SAMFORD. Do I understand that we have just adopted an amendment to the eriginal proposition?

The SPEAKER. Yes, and the question is now on the proposition s amended.

Mr. SAMFORD. Is it the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. Bowman ?]

The SPEAKER. It is the proposition of the gentleman from In-

The SPEAKER. It is the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Browne.]

Mr. SAMFORD. That has been adopted as an amendment to the proposition of the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. Bowman?]

Mr. BOWMAN. That is all there is of it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Browne] has been adopted by the House, and the question now is on the original proposition as averaged.

Mr. BROWNE. That is simply my proposition.
Mr. CONGER. I think the time has now come, before the adoption of any resolution, when the ordinary opportunity should be given to the persons implicated to be heard, if they desire so to do.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman submit any motion?

Mr. CONGER. I move that the two gentlemen referred to have the privilege of stating to the House whatever they may desire to say on the subject.

Mr. McLANE. Before the vote on the resolution ?

Mr. CONGER. Yes.

There was unanimous consent, and leave was granted.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, there cannot be two opinions as to the propriety and necessity of an apology to the House for what took the propriety and necessity of an apology to the House for what took place yesterday. No one regrets the occurrence more deeply than I do myself. I know that I very rarely lose my temper at all either in public debate or in private life; and I had not intended to do so yesterday. I can only say to the House what is understood by every member and by the country at large, that the language used by myself was wholly unjustifiable under the rules of this House and the proprieties of debate, and was entirely out of order. I am not only willing, but I am anxious, to say so to this House; I am sorry I used such language in the presence of the House; and I make my apology. Such conduct is wholly unjustifiable. I certainly feel this as deeply as any other member.

as any other member.

I wish to say further that I had borne myself through a long runring debate, as I thought, with good nature; and the offensive language was used just before the close of my last remarks in reply to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. Bland.] The occurrence was wholly unexpected at the time. I thought the whole difficulty was

I do not wish to raise at all any question as to who was to blame. I say that, whether I was to blame or some one else, or both to blame, our conduct was wholly unjustifiable as members of this body. I apologize to the House for my part of it, and ask to be excused.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. Speaker, during the great confusion (I am warranted in saying it was great confusion) in the Committee of the Whole House, yesterday, I used language that I well know to be in conflict with the rules of this House. I do not on this occasion propose, nor indeed do I feel any disposition, to speak of the part taken in that confusion by a great number of other gentlemen of the House. I do know that my language was in contravention of its rules and unparliamentary. To this House, therefore, I feel that I owe an apology, and hereby tender it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. If it be now in order, I move to lay

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. If it be now in order, I move to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman [Mr. Browne] who introduced the substitute which the House has adopted in lieu of the original resolution has been suddenly called away by illness, and he requested me to see that the resolution was proceeded with in its proper order. If, then, the Chair will recognize me, I demand—

Mr. MILLS. There the resolution will now be witted away. [Cries.]

Mr. MILLS. I hope the resolution will now be withdrawn. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen insist on a vote.
Mr. MILLS. There is a motion to lay on the table.
Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I have moved to lay the whole sub-

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I have moved to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. McLANE. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. I want to know whether my original resolution is pending?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's resolution is pending as amended. That is the parliamentary form of the submission of the question.

Mr. McLANE. I beg pardon for not being able to hear; the noise around me was so great. I desire simply to know—

The SPEAKER. The House has by a vote adopted the proposition offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Browne] as an amendment, and the question now recurs on the proposition as amended.

Mr. McLANE. The original proposition as amended?

The SPEAKER. That is the form in which the question is presented.

sented.

Mr. McLANE. Then I withdraw the proposition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not control of it. Besides the House has ordered the previous question; and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Conger] asks that a vete shall be proceeded with. That is his right. But the gentleman from Illinois [Mr SINGLETON] now moves that the whole subject be laid on the table.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a privileged motion. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment to the original resolution was adopted, and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already recognized the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SINGLETON,] and that gentleman has submitted a motion in order under the rules.

Mr. CONGER. This would be a proper motion even if the other had been entertained, because this motion must be made within twenty-four hours.

SPEAKER. The Chair inclines to the opinion that the motion to table the whole subject is in order, even if the motion indicated by the gentleman from Michigan had been made in time, because the motion to lay the whole subject on the table gives the House the oppor-

Mr. CONGER. There is no question under the rules of the right to move to reconsider and to lay that motion upon the table.

The SPEAKER. If made in time. But it was not made in time. Mr. CONGER. The rule says it may be made at any time within twenty-four hours.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the rule to be read relating to the motion to lay on the table.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XVI.

ON MOTIONS, THEIR PRECEDENCE, ETC.

4. When a question is under debate, no motion shall be received but to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, to adjourn, to take a recess, to lay on the table, for the previous question, (which motions shall be decided without debate), to postpone to a day certain, to refer or amend, or to postpone indefinitely, which several motions shall have precedence in the foregoing order; and no motion to postpone to a day certain, to refer, or to postpone indefinitely, being decided, shall be again allowed on the same day at the same stage of the question.

Mr. CONGER. That does not refer to it. The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now read Rule XVIII.

The Clerk read as follows:

When a motion has been made and carried or lost, it shall be in order for any member of the majority, on the same or succeeding day, to move for the reconsideration thereof, and such motion shall take precedence of all other questions except the consideration of a conference report, a motion to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, to adjourn, or to take a recess, and shall not be withdrawn after the said steeceding day without the consent of the House, and therefore any member may call it up for consideration: Provided, That such motion, if made during the last six days of a session, shall be disposed of when made.

The SPEAKER. If the motion to reconsider had been made in time, the Chair would, of course, have recognized it; but the gentleman did not make it, and the Chair recognized it; but the gentleman did not make it, and the Chair recognized the gentleman from Illinois on a motion to lay the whole subject upon the table. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Michigan lost his opportunity under

Mr. CONGER. The Chair will bear in mind the motion to reconsider must be made within twenty-four hours—
The SPEAKER. If this question is voted down—

Mr. CONGER. And it therefore takes precedence of every other motion.

motion.

The SPEAKER. But the precedence claimed was not taken advantage of by the gentleman from Michigan. The House is now voting upon a notion to lay the whole subject upon the table.

Mr. CONGER. Very well, sir.

The SPEAKER. If that motion be voted down—

Mr. CONGER. I would rather withdraw my proposition than have the Chair to decide on this without further thought.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would have recognized the gentleman to make the motion to reconsider if he had made it in time; but it was not attempted until after the gentleman from Illinois had made his motion to lay the whole subject on the table and he had taken his seat. Sometimes a motion to reconsider is not made at all, and there Sometimes a motion to reconsider is not made at all, and there seat. Sometimes a motion to reconsider is not made at all, and there have been frequent instances where the action of the House has become the law where there appears of record no motion to reconsider in connection with such action by the House.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. If the motion to reconsider had been made before the motion to lay the whole subject upon the table, the latter motion would have carried that with it.

The SPEAKER. The motion pending is to lay the whole subject upon the table.

Mr. CONGER. And pending that motion I demand the yeas and

Mr. WHITE. May I not apply to the gentleman from Michigan to withdraw his demand for the yeas and nays? The apology on the part of both gentlemen has been ample. There is no reservation about it.

about it.

Mr. CONGER. Let the question be stated. I ask that because it comports better with the dignity of this House. It is more just and fair to the gentlemen implicated in the resolution, and will be more satisfactory to the country, that a committee should report upon it, [cries of "Regular order!"] even if that report be unsatisfactory.

Mr. WILSON. Debate is not in order.

Mr. CONGER. I demand the yeas and nays.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 99.

So (one-fifth of those present having voted in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same.

An act (H. R. No. 1760) amending section 1852 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

An act (H. R. No. 6539) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to change the name of the yacht Stephen D. Barnes, of Philadelphia; An act (H. R. No. 6593) to provide a suitable pedestal to the monument erected in honor of the late Admiral Farragut in Washington

An act (S. No. 54) to enable the Secretary of War to purchase land to enlarge and protect the San Antonio arsenal.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced the passage, without amendment, of the bill (H. R. No. 6256) for the relief of certain settlers on restored railroad lands.

CORRECTION OF RECORD.

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged question.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. WEAVER. I ask to correct the RECORD of this morning. The remarks I made on yesterday during the first part of the discussion I find published in the RECORD of to-day. Those remarks I never saw until after they were published. I want the privilege of correcting my own remarks. Of course I shall not change the sense of the remarks, nor shall I omit or alter any interruptions which were made during the delivery of the remarks. But I simply ask the right to correct my own remarks. correct my own remarks.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. If the gentleman from Iowa asks that privilege, I will ask him and the House by what authority some of the motions and proceedings that took place in Committee of the Whole on yesterday are omitted entirely from the proceedings as published in the RECORD of this morning? The motion which I made that the gentleman should confine himself to the subject-matter of the debate, and also that the committee rise, is entirely omitted from the RECORD. The answer to my inquiry on this subject from the reporters is, that the gentleman withheld his speech for revision, and that portion so withheld contains the motions, which will appear with his remarks when they are published.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman has not withheld his remarks.

Mr. WEAVER. I have not withheld my speech. The latter part of the speech is not published in this morning's RECORD, but the first part, which was published without correction, is what I desire now to have the privilege of correcting.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to have read in this connection a letter bearing upon the subject. The Clerk read as follows:

House of Representatives, December 22, 1880.

Sie: Mr. Weaver complains that his speech was published without revision. He informed the messenger that he would withhold. It was afterward sent for from the office for some purpose of ascertaining in what connection it was delivered, and he was surprised this morning to find it published.

Respectfully, yours,

J. K. EDWARDS, Official Reporter.

Mr. WEAVER. I was not at my room last night when the manuscript of my speech was left, but my colleague was there, and the remark was made to the messenger who brought the speech that I would correct it for this morning's RECORD and that it would appear in the RECORD of to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The material point stated in the Reporter's letter is that the gentleman from Iowa did make request to have his speech is that the gentleman from Iowa did make request to have his speech withheld for revision.

Mr. WEAVER. I did; but in the night some time the messenger came back to my room and stated that the manuscript was wanted at the Printing Office in order to determine the consecutive order of the various speeches during the day, and for that reason they wanted to see the numbers of the folios. I sent the pages back to the office by him and to my astonishment this morning I find the whole speech, with the exception of the latter portion of it, published in the RECORD. Now, what I want is simply the right to correct my own remarks and I hope there will be no objection. I have not had the manuscript, and I desire simply to revise it.

and I desire simply to revise it.

The SPEAKER. The usual privilege will be granted to the gentleman to correct his own remarks.

man to correct his own remarks.

Mr. SAMFORD. Is there not a portion of the gentleman's remarks which has not yet appeared in the RECORD?

Mr. WEAVER. Yes, sir; a portion of the manuscript was sent back from the Printing Office, that which contained my reply to the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BLAND.] I do not know why part was sent back and part was printed.

Mr. SAMFORD. I suppose the portion not published includes the correction I week.

Mr. SAMFORD. I suppose the period for period for correction I made.

Mr. WEAVER. Yes; and I suppose also what the gentleman from New York [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD] referred to.

The SPEAKER. A motion ought not to have been omitted under any circumstance

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. The motion was omitted and my remarks in connection with it.

Mr. WEAVER. That is not my fault.

The SPEAKER. The Chair here states that it is not competent for The SPEARER. The Chair here states that it is not competent for the Reporter or anybody else to omit from the RECORD a motion in the way that has been stated. But that has no connection with the request of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WEAVER.]

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio. I wish to inquire of the gentleman if the corrections he desires to make have reference to anything personal that occurred?

Mr. WEAVER. Not at all.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa informed the Chair that what he desired to correct had no relation to matters of personal

Mr. WEAVER. None in the world.
There was no objection to Mr. WEAVER's request.
Mr. GILLETTE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] desires to report the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. GILLETE. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. CLYMER, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 6719) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1882, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLAND. I reserve all points of order on the bill.

REFUNDING THE NATIONAL DEBT.

Mr. WARNER. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a substitute for the pending funding bill, which I propose to offer when the opportunity presents itself. It was this request which I rose to make yesterday immediately before the adjournment, when I was cut off by calls for the regular order.

There was no objection.

The substitute proposed by Mr. WARNER is as follows:

The substitute proposed by Mr. Warner is as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to the public, in exchange for lawful money of the United States, at not less than par, Treasury certificates or bonds, as the Secretary of the Treasury may direct, not exceeding three hundred and fifty million of dollars in amount, in denominations of $50, $100, $500, and $1,000, bearing interest at 3.65 per cent. per annum, and redeemable at the pleasure of the Government after one year, taken by lot and payable in six years; also bonds at not less than par, not exceeding two hundred and fifty millions of dollars in amount, registered or coupon, and in such denominations as the Secretary of the Treasury may direct, bearing interest at 3½ per cent. per annum, and redeemable at the pleasure of the Government after five years, taken by lot, and payable in ten years. Said certificates and bonds shall be payable in eoin of the United States of the present standard value, and said bonds bearing 3½ per cent. interest shall alone be received, after the passage of this act, from national banks as security for their circulation, and the certificates of bonds becoming payable in 1881.

SEC. 2. That the money received for certificates or bonds sold under this act, together with all the coin that may at any time be in the Treasury belonging to the United States and held for redemption purposes, in excess of 25 per cent. of outstanding legal-tender notes, shall be applied weekly to the purchase, until they become payable, and then to the redemption, first, of bonds becaring 6 per cent. interest and then to the bonds bearing 5 per cent. interest, until all of both classes of bonds are redeemed, and then to the redemption, first, of bonds bearing 6 per cent. frev.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to make all suitable and necessary regulations for carrying out the provisions of this act: Provided, That the expenses for engraving and issuing the certificates and bonds provided for by this act shall not exceed one-eighth of 1 per cent.

SEC. 4. That this act shall be known as "The funding act of 1881;" and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. RYON, of Pennsylvania. I desire to have printed in the RECORD two additional sections, which I shall offer as amendments to the funding bill when I have an opportunity.

There was no objection.

The amendments proposed by Mr. Ryon, of Pennsylvania, are as SEC. 6. That it shall be lawful for all banks, banking associations, companies, and corporations doing a banking business under and by authority of the laws of the United States to exchange any bonds deposited in the Treasury of the United States to secure their circulation, on the same terms and conditions provided for in the second section of this act, for the bonds authorized to be issued by this act for and in lieu of the bonds now on deposit as security for their circulation. To enable such exchange and substitution to be made, the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause notice to be given to said corporations, and give sufficient opportunity to effect such exchange and substitution.

SEC. 7. That from and after the time any bank, banking association, or corporation doing a banking business as aforesaid shall deposit bonds as aforesaid with the Treasurer of the United States equal in amount to the capital employed to secure its circulation, there shall not be levied, collected, or required to be paid and the proporation of the deposits or circulation of such bank, banking association, or corporation and all laws and parts of laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. These two substitutes or amendments, as offered

The SPEAKER. These two substitutes or amendments, as offered by the gentlemen from Ohio and Pennsylvania, had better be printed in usual bill form.

CHANNEL THROUGH SANDY HOOK BAR.

Mr. REAGAN, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back a letter from the Secretary of War, with report of board of engineers, relative to the channel through the Sandy Hook Bar of the port of New York, and moved that the same be printed and recommitted.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERNATIONAL SANITARY CONFERENCE.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to report from the Committee on Appropriations for consideration at this time a joint resolution appropriating the sum of $2,500 to meet the expenses of the international sanitary conference

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Be it resolved, &c.. That the sum of $2,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to defray the necessary spenses attending the meeting of the international sanitary conference invited to meet at Washington on the 1st of January, 1881, in pursuance of the joint resolution of Congress approved the 14th May, 1880; the said sum to be immediately available, and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State.

Mr. BLOUNT. That there may be no misunderstanding about this I desire that the joint resolution under which the meeting of the international sanitary conference is to take place shall now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution authorizing the President of the United States to call an international sanitary conference to meet at Washington, District of Columbia.

Resolved, &c., That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to call an international sanitary conference, to meet at Washington, District of Columbia, to which the several powers having jurisdiction of ports likely to be infected with yellow fever or cholera shall be invited to send delegates, properly authorized for the purpose of securing an international system of notification as to the actual sanitary condition of ports and places under the jurisdiction of such powers, and the vessels sailing therefrom.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask also that the letter of the Secretary of State which I send to the desk be read.

Mr. SAMFORD. Let the joint resolution be voted upon. There will be no objection.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have a reason for asking that the letter be read.

Mr. CONGER. Is this joint resolution a report from the Commit-

Mr. CONGER. Is this joint resolution a report from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is.

The SPEAKER. It came in by consent.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will say this to the gentleman from Michigan, and I know he will appreciate it: by a joint resolution of Congress an international sanitary conference was to be held at a time to be designated by the President of the United States. The 1st of January is the time designated. No money has been appropriated for the purpose of meeting the expenses of the conference, and this joint resolution becomes necessary. tion becomes necessary.

The Clerk read the letter of the Secretary of State, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 7, 1880.

Washington, December 7, 1880.

Sin: Referring to the joint resolution of Congress, approved May 14, 1880, "authorizing the President of the United States to call an international sanitary conference, to meet at Washington, District of Columbia," I have the honor to inform you that, in pursuance of said joint resolution, this Department, by direction of the President, on the 39th of July last, issued an invitation to all the maritime powers of the world to appoint delegates to attend an international conference, to be held in this city on the 1st day of January next, to consider the question of an international system of notification as to the sanitary condition of ports and places under the jurisdiction of such powers, and of vessels salling therefrom, with the view of concluding, if deemed expedient upon consultation, an international convention in relation to any proper subjects for international sanitary regulations.

Answers accepting the above-mentioned invitation have already been received from such a number of the leading maritime powers of the world as to assure the meeting of the conference at the appointed time. It therefore becomes very inportant, in view of the near approach of the day fixed for the assembling of the conference, that Congress should make provision for the expense of the proper representation of this Government at the conference, and also for meeting such incidental expenditures as may be made necessary by the action of this Government in inviting the conference in question to assemble at this Capitol.

I therefore recommend that the sum of $10,000 be appropriated for the purposes above indicated, said sum to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State, and to be available by the 1st of January, 1881.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

WM. M. EVARTS

Hon. J. D. C. ATKINS,

Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations,

House of Representatives.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that the Committee on Appropriations in this resolution appropriating a given sum of money confine it to the single purpose of an international system of notification, not making it applicable to any other purpose outside of the scope of the resolution, namely, the making of sanitary regulations. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be now considered in the House, instead of being referred to the Committee of the Whole.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 358) was read three times, and passed.

Mr. BLOUNT moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Several members called for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. There are many gentlemen who desire to be recognized on subjects that will not cause any debate. The Chair would like to have the privilege of recognizing them.

BRIDGET HOLIHAN.

Mr. HAWK, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6720) granting a pension to Bridget Holihan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES EWING.

Mr. TALBOTT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6721) granting a pension to James Ewing, a revolutionary soldier; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

HON. EVARTS W. FARR, OF NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. I have a resolution from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, which I ask permission to submit at this

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the Committee on Invalid Pensions desires to place upon its record its appreciation of the kindly qualities and faithful labors of their late member, Hon. Evarts W. Farr, of New Hampshire; and
Whereas its members wish to express their regret and sympathy to the country, the State of New Hampshire, and to the bereaved family of the deceased in a worthy and substantial manner: Therefore,

Resolved, That the House be requested to make the customary appropriation of the balance of the salary which would be due to him as a member of the Fortysixth Congress; and that the next Congress, to which he was elected, be respectfully requested to make a similar appropriation of the salary which would have been due to him as a member of the Forty-seventh Congress.

The SPEAKER. What disposition does the gentleween desire to

The SPEAKER. What disposition does the gentleman desire to make of the resolution?

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. I desire to have it considered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that action upon it would be facilitated by reference to the proper committee, the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. Very well. I will move that it be referred to that committee.

The resolution was referred accordingly.

Mr. COFFROTH. I move that the House now adjourn.

VANCOUVER BARRACKS, WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Pending the motion to adjourn,
The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting estimates for a building at Vancouver Barracks, Washington Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

REINSTATEMENT OF ARMY OFFICERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a petition relative to reinstatement of Army officers; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

QUINCY, ILLINOIS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War relative to the acceptance of land donated by the city of Quincy, in Illinois; which was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE FROM EVENING SESSIONS.

Mr. PHELPS asked and obtained leave of absence from night sessions on account of ill health.

LIMIT OF DEBATE ON FUNDING BILL.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. If the House will pardon me for a moment I desire to submit a proposition. I do not propose at this time AN 77 to call for the regular order, or to move to go into Committee of the Whole on the funding bill to-day, provided the House will consent that when the House shall next go into Committee of the Whole on the funding bill all general debate on that bill shall be limited to one day, to be equally divided between the friends and the opponents of the bill.

Mr. WARNER. Let that be done; it is a very fair proposition.

Mr. GILLETTE. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion to adjourn.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Will the gentleman permit me to take the sense of the House on my proposition?

Mr. GILLETTE. I insist upon the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the proposition of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. FERNANDO WOOD.] The gentleman asks that the House will now by its order restrict the general debate on the funding bill in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to one day, the time to be equally divided between the friends Union to one day, the time to be equally divided between the friends and the opponents of the bill. Pending which proposition, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] demands the regular order, which is the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COFFROTH] that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn, and on the viva roce vote the Speaker announced that the nays seemed to have it.

Mr. GILLETTE. I call for a division on that question.

The question was taken upon a division, and there were 26 in the

Before the negative vote was counted,
Mr. GILLETTE said: I do not call for a further count.
The motion to adjourn was accordingly not agreed to.
The SPEAKER. The question is now on the proposition of the gentleman from New York.
Mr. GILLETTE. I call for a division on that proposition.
The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 110,

Mr. GILLETTE (in his seat) said: There is no quorum voting.
The SPEAKER. Does any gentleman rise and make that point?
Mr. GILLETTE. I will not insist upon it.
No further count being called for, the motion of Mr. FERNANDO

Wood was agreed to.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

Mr. HOOKER. I insist upon the motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, (at two o'clock and thirty-five minutes

p. m.)
The SPEAKER. In obedience to the concurrent resolution of the two Houses, this House now stands adjourned until Wednesday, January 5, 1881, at twelve o'clock meridian.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Bullock, D. D. The Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday, December 22, 1880, was read and approved.

RESIGNATION OF SENATOR-ELECT GARFIELD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from Hon. James A. Garfield; which was read, and ordered to be placed on the files of the Senate, as follows:

MENTOR, OHIO, December 23, 1880.

SIR: On the 13th and 14th days of January, A. D. 1880, the General Assembly of the State of Ohio, pursuant to law, chose me to be a Senator in the Congress of the United States from said State for the term of six years, to begin on the 4th day of March, A. D. 1881.

Understanding that the lawful evidence of that fact has been presented to the Senate and filed in its archives, I have the honor to inform the Senate that I have by letter dated December 23, A. D. 1880, and addressed to the governor and General Assembly of the State of Ohio, formally declined to accept the said appointment and have reacounced the same.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

To the President of the Senate
Of the United States, Washington, D. C.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 13th ulitmo, an estimate of the cost of deepening the entrance to Saint Jerome's River, Maryland, so as to make it an available harbor; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 12th of March last, information concerning the alleged killing by soldiers in the office of the agent of the Poncas, in the Indian Territory, of Big Snake, a chief man of the Poncas.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the communication lie upon the table and be printed. When it is before the Senate so that we shall be able to ascertain its contents, I will move its reference to the mittee, and at that time I shall ask the indulgence of the senate to make some remarks upon it. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McPHERSON. I present the memorial of the Monmouth Battle Monument Association of Freehold, New Jersey. I ask its reference to the Committee on Military Affairs, and I would like to have it read; it is very short.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorial will be read.

The memorial was read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The State of New Jersey was the battle-ground of the American Revolution. Three important battles were fought on her soil, at each of which Washington commanded the American troops in person.

There should be monuments at Trenton, Princeton, and Monmouth, erected by the United States or by the joint contributions of the United States, the State and the people of those respective localities.

On the 28th day of June, 1878, the corner-stone of a monument was laid at Monmouth, with appropriate ceremonies, in the presence of the governor, many members of the Legislature, State officers, the National Guard, and a large concourse of citizens, on a magnificent site of nearly four acres, presented to the association, valued at $3,000.

Since then efforts have been made to obtain subscriptions to creet the monument, and more than nine thousand dollars in cash have been collected. Other subscriptions will be paid early in the spring, and it is confidently expected that within a few months sufficient additional subscriptions will be obtained to bring the amount up to $10,000.

The Monmouth Battle Monument Association are anxious to contract for the creetion of the monument at an early day, but being apprehensive that the sum of $10,000 will not construct such a monument as the people of the United States will deem worthy the important historic event, have resolved to give the Government an opportunity to aid to some extent the pariotic efforts of individuals.

This association, incorporated under the laws of the State of New Jersey, representing the people of the county of Monmouth and others who have contributed to the object, respectfully request that at the present session of Congress an appropriation be made to aid in the erection of the monument at Monmouth, the corner-stone of which was laid on the 28th day of June, 1878, of a sum equal to the amount already paid and which shall be paid in to the treasurer of this association within six months from th

FREEHOLD, N. J., January 1, 1881.

Mr. SLATER. I ask leave to present a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Oregon, in favor of an appropriation to commence permanent improvements at the mouth of the Columbia River. The memorialists make various representations, among other things that the work is one of great national importance and that the commerce of the Columbia River is rapidly increasing. They urgently ask for the appropriation prayed for. I move its reference to the Committee

Mr. JOHNSTON asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1972) providing for the purchase and printing of the manuscript treatise on logic by James Madison; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

Library.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1973) for the relief of the heirs of Nathaniel Kuykendall; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FARLEY asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1974) for the relief of Thomas B. Shannon, of San Francisco, California; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1975) for the payment of certain Indian war bond coupons of the State of California; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. FARLEY. I present certain accompanying documents, which are explanatory of the bill I introduced a few days ago on this same subject. I move the reference of the bill, with these papers, to the Committee on Finance.

Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1976) to provide for the sale of the lands belonging to the Prairie band of Pottawatomie Indians in the State of Kansas, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. Hill Lot Colored asked and by manifering appears to be included.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado, asked and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1977) to create an additional land district in the State of Colorado; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

SWORD OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. WHYTE. I am about to introduce a joint resolution for the purchase of a sword formerly belonging to George Washington. Before doing so, however, I should like to state that as during this year, in October next, by authority of Congress, there is to be a celebration of the surrender of Lord Cornwallis to the American and French forces of the surrender of Lord Cornwallis to the American and French forces at Yorktown, it is fitting that the United States should be in possession of this sword used by Washington during the revolutionary war. I find that this is one of the five swords left in the will of Washington to his nephews, this one having been left to George Lewis, and it being now in the possession of one of the heirs of that gentleman. The State of New York has within the last three or four years (as I find from an examination of the catalogue of the New York State Library) purchased two of these swords at a cost of $20,000, and is now the possessor of them. It is proper, therefore, that this remaining sword, being now the property of a gentleman who is willing to sell it, should be obtained by the Government of the United States and should be on exhibition at Yorktown celebration in October next. Therefore I ask leave to introduce this joint resolution and request its reference to the Select Committee on the Yorktown and request its reference to the Select Committee on the Yorktown Centennial Celebration.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 139) for the purchase of a sword formerly belonging to George Washington; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Joint Select Committee on the Yorktown Centennial Celebration.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 23d ultimo approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. No. 148) granting an increase of pension to J. J. Purman;
An act (S. No. 992) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Julia Gardner Tyler, widow of ex-President Tyler;
An act (S. No. 533) for the relief of Charles W. Abbot, a pay director, and W. W. Barry, a passed assistant paymaster in the United States Navy;

An act (S. No. 1583) to change the name of the schooner-yacht Nettie to Nokomis;
An act (S. No. 1776) granting a pension to Margaret S. Heintzel-

An act (S. No. 1814) to authorize the construction of a fixed bridge over the Saint Mary's River, and for other purposes.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Nathaniel Kuykendall be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

AMENDMENTS TO A BILL.

Mr. HILL, of Colorado, submitted amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. No. 769) to enable the State of Colorado to take lands in lieu of sections 16 and 36, found to be mineral lands; which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

CENSUS OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. BUTLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, requested and directed to forward, for the information of the Senate, the report of the Superintendent of the Census touching the alleged frauds in the enumeration of the inhabitants of South Carolina under the law providing for taking the tenth census.

PRINTING FOR COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.

Mr. KERNAN. I ask for the following order:

Ordered, That the notes of the hearing before the sub-committee of the Finance Committee on Senate bill No. 741 be printed for the use of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection that order will

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have the order read again.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have the order read again.

The proposed order was read.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator that it ought to be an order that the proceedings be printed; in other words, that the responsibility of the committee for the correctness of what is reported to the Senate should exist. The committee should be responsible. A mere Senate should exist. The committee should be responsible. A mere order to print the notes, what may be the notes of an entirely irresponsible person, is not a good form.

Mr. KERNAN. Allow me to state that the sub-committee gave a hearing to persons on all sides, and had the Senate Stenographer, Mr. Murphy, to take down all that occurred. We thought it would be very useful to print these notes, as all sides were represented in the hearing, for the use of the committee and of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that the matter should be printed under the direction of the committee.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that the matter should be printed under the direction of the committee.

Mr. KERNAN. The matter to be printed is not testimony; it is the arguments that were presented, and the statistics, and the views of persons on the various sides of the question as to free ships; and of course there was so much of it that printing is necessary.

Mr. HOAR. My suggestion to the Senator is a mere question of form and precedent. The Senator's order is that the notes of a certain hearing be printed. My suggestion is that the form of such an order should always be that the proceedings be printed under the direction of the committee. We had a pretty serious lesson within twelve months, in the Senate, as to the character of some reports which twelve months, in the Senate, as to the character of some reports which were furnished.

Mr. KERNAN. I have no objection to having the order amended, and instead of "notes of the hearing" let it say "proceedings before the sub-committee." I ask that by unanimous consent the order be amended in that way.

Mr. MORRILL. And "printed under the direction of the committee?

Mr. KERNAN. Under the direction of the committee.
Mr. CONKLING. Let us hear it read.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be again reported. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the proceedings before the sub-committee of the Finance Committee of the Senate on Senate bill No. 741 be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. May I inquire have these proceedings been reported to the Senate

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is not aware.

Mr. KERNAN. No, sir; the proceedings were taken by the Stenographer yesterday, and have been written out, and we desire an order to have them printed under the direction of the sub-committee.

That is the desire of the sub-committee.

Mr. HOAR. Let the first resolution be read again, for the information of the Senator, as it was originally proposed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That the notes of the hearing before the sub-committee of the Finance Committee on Senate bill No. 741 be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. If I may be permitted to state it again, the point I make is that whatever is printed should be reported to the Senate under the responsibility of the committee in some form.

Mr. CONKLING. I did not hear in the first instance the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts. I hear it now, and I agree with him entirely. I think that there is no usage or precedent which would warrant an order of the Senate to print matter committed to a committee and now before the committee, which has not been brought back to the Senate. It is not in the keeping of the Senate; it is not before the Senate. I suggest to my colleague, and I think that will answer his convenience and wish much more readily, that his committee have power now to print these proceedings. The Judiciary Committee and other committees of the Senate continually do that. All the Senator needs to do is to send to the Public Printer an order of the committee or its chairman to print this matter either in confidence for the use of the committee or publicly, as the committee confidence for the use of the committee or publicly, as the committee chooses; but the Senate, I suggest to my colleague, has nothing to do with it.

Mr. KERNAN. It was an open hearing, and what the subcommittee desire is to have power to print what there was said for the use of the committee and of the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. The Committee on Finance—I do not speak of the subcommittee, but the Committee on Finance,—a regular committee of the Senate has the undoubted right for its convenience to have this matter printed. The only awkwardness is in asking the Senate to act upon a matter which is not before the Senate at all, but before a committee, and of which the Senate knows nothing properly except that it is before that committee; but the committee has power to do just what it pleases in this regard.

Mr. KERNAN. Allow me to suggest that it is the desire to have this matter printed now. The committee will not regularly meet for a week, and it is the desire to have it in print for the committee at its next meeting. The chairman is away, and there is no call for a meeting of the committee this week.

Mr. CONKLING. Will my colleague receive another suggestion from me?

Mr. KERNAN. I shall be very happy to do so.
Mr. CONKLING. I do not think it would require a great deal of rashness on the part of my colleague individually, or my friend from Kentucky, [Mr. Beck,] who sits before him, if they were to give this order, assuming that when there was a full meeting of the committee the committee would ratify what they had done. I do not think it at all likely that any member of the committee would be repudiated and reprimanded by the full committee if, as a matter of convenience, he gave an order to print.

Mr. MORRILL. I think the usual form is for the committee to ask that such a document be printed for the use of the committee, and I take it if the resolution were in that form there would be no objectake it if the resolution were in that form there would be no objection to it. I suggest, therefore, to the Senator from New York that be modify the resolution so that the document shall be printed for the use of the committee. I do not understand that a committee has a right to send any document to the Printer and have it printed, without leave of the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. Not for its own use?

Mr. MORRILL. I think not.

Mr. CONKLING. Then I can inform the Senator from Vermont that there is one committee of this body which is proceeding not only frequently but habitually upon usurped right. Nothing is more common in the Judiciary Committee than to send to the Public Printer such matter as we think ought to be printed, and frequently in confidence for the use of the committee, so that no member of the committee is at liberty to deliver a copy of it even to another Senting. ator. It is frequently the case that we could not get along at all without a multiplicity of copying, which would swamp the whole work if we had not power to have put in print papers which we must use, and I never heard the right challenged before.

Mr. MORRILL. I am informed by an authority to which we constantly appeal here that there is no power except on the part of the Secretary of the Senate to order this document to be printed, without the direction of the Senate itself.

Mr. KERNAN. I accept the suggestion of my colleague on the sub-committee, [Mr. MORRILL,] and ask that the proceedings be printed for the use of the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be modified so that the proceedings will be printed for the use of the committee, and the question is on the resolution as modified.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXPENSES OF INDIAN WARS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, transmitting, in response to Senate resolution of June 21, 1879, reports from the Secretaries of the Interior and War, relative to expenses in certain Indian wars; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

DARIEN CANAL-MONROE DOCTRINE.

Mr. BURNSIDE. If there is no further morning business, I wish to state to the Senate that on June 25, 1879, I introduced a resolution in relation to the construction of a canal across the Isthmus of Dain relation to the construction of a canal across the Isthmus of Darien by European powers, which resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I hoped that a favorable report would be made upon that resolution, and that the committee would even go further than the resolution and express its disapproval of any such work by any corporation established under the laws of any European power with European capital. I beg now to ask the chairman of that committee if any action has been taken upon the resolution, or if any action is likely to be taken by his committee within a short time?

Mr. EATON. I can inform the Senator from Rhode Island that no action has been taken upon that subject. I have no doubt the matter will be brought to the consideration of the committee without great loss of time.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WHYTE. The morning business seems to have been concluded, and before the Senate proceeds to take up the Calendar at the point where it was left off, I desire to ask the indulgence of the Senate to take up those bills for railroads in the District of Columbia which were passed over the other day on account of an objection from the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS.] I have prepared an amendment to cover his objection. The bills are matters in which the public of this District are largely interested, and therefore I should like to dispose of them as they would have been disposed of at that time but for the objection.

Mr. VOORHEES. I hope the Senator from Maryland will yield to a motion which I desire to make. I gave notice the day before the adjournment for the recess that at the expiration of the morning business this morning I would move to take up the bill (S. No. 231) for the relief of Ben. Holladay and ask the Senate to pass it. I hope the Senator will allow me to make that motion. This is a measure which has been pending here nine years. Nine years an American citizen has been asking the Congress of the United States to consider his claim for relief. In the mean time a committee of this body has passed upon the question and reported in his favor that there is money due him. That is a year and a half ago, and in the mean time with this report pending here in his favor his property is being sold under the hammer to pay his debts, and the Senate of the United States is asked and appealed to, in vain it seems, to take up and consider the question at all. I know no higher duty of a government than to do right by its citizens. Consequently I feel that I am in the line of the strictest and highest and most sacred duty in moving, as I now do, to set aside the Anthony rule, (which would exclude the motion, by the way, of the Senator from Maryland,) and proceed to the consideration of the bill for the relief of Benjamin Holladay. It cannot be a long matter; it will take but a little while, and we shall have discharged a duty by disposing of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. WHYTE] had the floor.

Mr. WHYTE. I yielded, of course, out of courtesy to my friend

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana moves that the pending order of business, which is the consideration of the Calendar of General Orders under what is known as the Anthony rule, be set aside—

Mr. WHYTE. That motion is not just yet in order, as I had not concluded the sentence that I was about uttering.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair asks the Senator's pardon.
Mr. WHYTE. Not at all.
Mr. VOORHEES. I meant no discourtesy of course to the Senator from Maryland. The Senator knows that I am incapable of that.
Mr. WHYTE. I said I yielded in courtesy to the Senator from Indiana to learn from him what motion he desired to submit, without acquiescing at all in the motion, before he had announced to the Senator sequiescing at all in the motion, before he had announced to the Senator sequiescing at all in the motion, before he had announced to the Senator sequiescing at all in the motion, before he had announced to the Senator sequiescing at all in the motion, before he had announced to the Senator sequiescing at all in the motion, before he had announced to the Senator sequiescing at all in the motion he fore he had announced to the Senator sequiescing at all in the motion he fore he had announced to the Senator sequiescing at all in the motion he senator sequiescing at all in the senator sequiescing sequiescing sequiescing at all in the senator sequiescing s acquiescing at all in the motion, before he had announced to the Senate his purpose. I cannot give way to the Senator from Indiana for the motion which he proposes. The measure he represents is a bill to provide for a private claim, and I do not know what relation to the claim the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] may have, who is chairman of the Committee on Claims, and who is to-day absent from the Senate. from the Senate

Mr. VOORHEES. I can inform the Senator

Mr. WHYTE. I do not know what view the Senator from Missouri might have of the claim, or whether he desires to be present and be heard upon it or not.

Mr. VOORHEES. Will the Senator from Maryland allow me to inform him on that point?

Mr. WHYTE. Certainly.

Mr. WOORHEES. At the close of the last session of Congress, last June, when this matter was then earnestly pressed on the attention of the Senate, the Senator from Missouri, for the purposes of assisting in protecting property of Mr. Holladay, then under execution, rose in his place here and as a Senator and chairman of the Committee on Claims stated, as the Congressional Record will show, that there was a very considerable sum of money doubtless due to this gentleman—how much he was not prepared to say; but he conceded that the finding of the committee in his favor was right, only not making definite the concession as to the amount, and he agreed at that time that the bill should be made a special order for the first Wednesday after the meeting of this session of Congress. It was so noted in the RECORD. When that day arrived at this session, for some reason, not, however, arising out of any antagonism on the part of the Senator from Missouri, the bill again went over; and I think that I am not going too far in saying that the Senator from Missouri would not antagonize a hearing of this claim before the Senate at

Mr. WHYTE. I understood at the time, Mr. President, that the Senator from Missouri desired to take some part in the discussion of this bill; that while he might admit that there was something due to the claimant, he was not satisfied with the amount allowed in the bill. He being very familiar with the character of the claim, its details, and all its surroundings, was probably as well if not better posted than other Senators in regard to the merits of the claim, and certainly I should be glad as a Senator before being called upon to vote on this bill to learn from the Senator from Missouri, the careful chairman of the Committee on Claims, what were his views upon the subject. I cannot vote now to take this bill up on that account.

Mr. VOORHEES. All I can say is this: I gave notice on the day before we adjourned for the holidays, now more than two weeks ago, that I would at this hour make this motion; therefore it cannot be claimed that anybody who is not in his seat cannot have had full notice. I gave the notice, and if Senators are absent it would certainly be a hardship to ask this claim to go over on that account. Besides, it has been here nine long years, during which bankruptcy, public sales of property, disaster, and distress have overtaken this man, and all he asks is to have a claim heard that a committee of this body has found in his favor upon. He asks to have it heard, and if it is to be decided against him let it be done. A committee of this body, however, examined this claim under the instruction of the Senate; they took testimony more than two years ago under the instruction of the Senate, which ordered them to take it and to report whether there was anything due. That has been done, and now he humbly requests and petitions from hour to hour and day to day that this body will pass upon a report of its own committee; and for one I intend to stand here until I secure that right if it is in my power to do it.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Indiana allow me to add to his statement the fact that the committee in the first place reported a bill sending this matter to the Court of Claims, where it could have been tried on testimony, and the Government would have been heard in opposition so far as it saw fit. The Senate rejected that recommendation, and substituted a direction to the committee to try, hear, and determine the case itself, which it has done.

Mr. VOORHEES. That makes it stronger.

Mr. WHYTE. I had not yielded the floor; I had not got to the point of making my motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Maryland as entitled to the floor.

Maryland as entitled to the floor.

Mr. WHYTE. I was going on to say that, in addition to the absence of the Senator from Missouri, there is another reason which impels me to make objection at this time to taking up the case of this private claimant. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] is also thoroughly posted in regard to the merits of this claim. He is anxious to be heard by the Senate upon the subject. He has already declared, in the hearing of the Senate, his desire to make remarks upon this bill. He is absent from the Senate to-day.

These are reasons which I offer to my friend the Senator from Indiana why I will not yield to him until the Senate requires me to yield, in allowing him to make his motion in preference to the motion I have suggested.

As the organ of the Committee on the District of Columbia it is

As the organ of the Committee on the District of Columbia it is my duty to ask the Senate to consider these bills which had their place under the Anthony rule on the Calendar when the Calendar was last up, and dispose of them, the objection made by the Senator from Verment [Mr. Edmund) being met by the preparation of an amendment which I have upon my table, and which I propose to offer when the first bill is taken up by the Senate, and there is nothing to prevent the disposal of these bills within a very few minutes. They are called for by the Departments of the Government. The Bureau of Engraving and Printing are urgent to have these bills passed for the convenient transportation of their employés to that branch of the public service. The National Museum being just finished and being taken possession of, being filled at this time with the curiosities which belong to the Government, will be opened very shortly for the inspection of the citizens of the United States. The inauguration ball is to take place in that building as I understand, and for the convenience of those who visit the city at that time and for the citizens of this District it is important that these cheap means of transportation should be provided for them, and unless this bill pass now or in the next few As the organ of the Committee on the District of Columbia it is provided for them, and unless this bill pass now or in the next few days so that it may go to the House of Representatives in season, it is hopeless to expect any such conveniences to be obtained for the people during the present session of Congress.

Mr. VOORHEES. If the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Missouri are absent why does the Senator from Maryland want his bills considered to-day?

Mr. WHYTE. Because neither of those Senators indicated a desire

Mr. WHYTE. Because neither of those Senators indicated a desire to be heard upon these bills, while they did indicate their desire to be heard upon the Holladay bill.

Mr. VOORHEES. I never heard either indicate any such purpose. On the contrary, the Senator from Missouri at the last session agreed to have the Holladay bill made a special order for the first Wednesday of this session.

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senators from Indiana and Maryland will

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senators from Indiana and Maryland will allow me, I beg to state as a member of the committee that I know that the chairman of the committee desires to be present and to be heard when the Holladay bill is considered. I was informed by the Senator from Missouri that he expected to be in attendance upon the Senate either to day or very soon after to day. I have no disposition myself to antagonize the consideration of the bill in question; but I ask the Senator from Indiana to let the matter stand over for a day ask the Senator from Indiana to let the matter stand over for a day or two until the Senator from Missouri may return. I am satisfied that he will be here, or at least that he expected to be here, either to-day or to-morrow.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator from Missouri not only knew by the notice which I gave that this motion would be made at this hour, but he knew it by conversation occurring between him and me during the recess; and he made no request of me. If it was anything 'ess than the case it is, and if it was not for the suffering that it has inflicted, I would not hesitate one moment; but I feel that I should be derelict in duty if I did not ask the Senate to vote on this question now. I know the Senator from Missouri last June agreed that tion now. I know the Senator from Missouri last June agreed that it should be heard on the first Wednesday of this session. I know that he has manifested no opposition, so far as I have heard, to its being heard at any time during this session. Doubtless he would like to be here, doubtless other Senators would like to be here whose business has called them away; but why such a reason should stand in the way of an act of simple justice, I cannot understand.

Now, Mr. President, let me ask one question about the order of business. I am utterly incapable of any discourtesy to the Senator from Maryland; but I do not understand that he has made the only motion which can be made, and that is to set aside the operation of the Anthony rule. That motion I have made, and I suppose the only motion really before the Senate is the one I have made. The Senator from Maryland indicated his desire to take up another bill, but made no motion of the kind, as I judge.

Mr. WHYTE. Yes, I did.

Mr. VOORHEES. If he wants to get a motion before the Senate he should make it.

he should make it.

Mr. WHYTE. I propose to make the motion now, if I have not already done so in form. If the Senate vote it down, of course that is the end of it. I move to lay aside the Anthony rule so that I can afterward offer a motion to take up the bills I have referred to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland moves to lay aside the Anthony rule for the purpose indicated by him.

Mr. CONKLING. May I inquire what the bill is which the Senator from Maryland wishes to take up in the event that his present motion prevails?

or from his aryland wishes to take up in the event that his present motion prevails?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There are several bills, as the Chair understands, relating to railroads in the District of Columbia.

Mr. WHYTE. Several city railroad bills that were put aside the other day for the preparation of an amendment.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to so vote as to advance the consideration of the bill indicated by the Senator from Indiana. The history of that bill, as referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts and also by the Senator from Indiana, is such that I think it manifestly an act of justice promptly to pass one way or the other and finally upon the merits of that claim. Moreover, I think it an act economical of time on the part of the Senate. This bill has been taken up over and over and over again, deferred indefinitely, postponed to a day certain, dealt with in this way and in that way to accommodate present convenience, and when taken up again so faded has the recollection of it become that a Senator as familiar with it as the Senator from Indiana makes a statement and another Senator gets up and reminds him of a very important thing which in the lapse of time has passed from his mind. from his mind.

Now, I think we ought to adjudge one way or the other upon this bill; and although its merits are in no sense in order for discussion, I shall not be out of order in saying that I have myself a very clear judgment as to its merits; but be it for or against this claim, I hope the Senator from Maryland will concur with me in saying that we ought to make an end of it one way or the other. Therefore I shall vote for the motion, as I suppose the Senator from Indiana will, to postpone the present and all prior orders, but when the Senator from Maryland proposes to supersede the bill to which I refer by a street railway bill, I shall vote against that motion in the hope that the Senator from Indiana will insist upon his motion, and that we may take up the hill which he has indicated.

kake up the bill which he has indicated.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, I shall vote against taking up the Holladay bill, not from any disposition to delay it, but because the Senator from Delaware who sits at my right ordinarily [Mr. BAYARD] is not here to-day. He expected to be here and he has not come. I know that he has examined the claim and desires to be present and I know that he has examined the claim and desires to be present and submit some views about it when it is considered. I know that he was here, as was the chairman of the committee, on the day to which the bill was postponed at the last session, and supposed it would be called up then, but it was not. I hope it will not be taken up to-day in his absence, although I shall make no objection to its being taken up at an early day when he has had an opportunity to get back.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maryland, that the pending order of business, being the consideration of the Calendar under the Anthony rule, be set aside.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, it is a little singular that the first

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, it is a little singular that the first thing we are called upon to do after the recess is to take up a bill appropriating $526,000, I believe, for an old stale claim of a contractor who received his full compensation for the time of his contract. That is to say, I find that the service performed from Saint Joseph, Missouri, to Placerville, California, from July 1, 1861, to June 30, 1864, was undertaken for a million a year, and he received three million for that service.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, is it in order to discuss the merits of a bill on a motion to take it up?

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to know if it is.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to be heard on the subject whenever it comes un The VICE-PRESIDENT. Discussion of the merits is not now in

Mr. MORRILL. I merely desired to call attention to the extraordinary character of this bill that we are called upon in these early moments of the resumed session of Congress to consider to the displacement of everything else, and in the absence of two Senators on the other side who have given it special attention and who desire to be heard upon the subject. I happen to know myself that the Sena-tor from Delaware has prepared himself elaborately to consider this question. Now, it seems to me that in common courtesy to the absent Senator from Delaware, if for nothing else, we ought to defer the consideration of this question until he returns.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to remind the Senate that the Holladay bill is not before it for consideration or discussion. The pending motion is that of the Senator from Maryland, to set aside the Anthony rule in order that the Senate may proceed to the aside the Anthony rine in order that the Senate may proceed to the consideration of certain city railroad bills.

Mr. VOORHEES. I hope that motion will prevail, and then I will ask the Senate to judge whether it will take up these street railway bills or whether it will take up and consider the bill which I have indicated. But first the motion of the Senator from Maryland, I hope, will prevail to set aside the Anthony rule so that one or the other of these questions may be taken up.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I am disposed to believe that the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL,] when he comes to reflect upon the bearings of what I understood him to call "common courtesy," will question somewhat whether he is warranted at a time when his will question somewhat whether he is warranted at a time when his remarks are out of order, when other Senators have observed the rule and not dealt with the merits of the bill, in stigmatizing it in such a way as very nearly to impute some impropriety to other Senators who favor the bill referred to. Now, I will not violate the rules by dealing with the merits of this bill, but I will venture to say that when discussion be in order, I shall be ready to vindicate myself from the imputation of supporting a bill deserving any such animadversion as the Senator from Vermont has somewhat swiftly bestowed upon it. At this moment I leave it there, not being quite content to have the Senator from Vermont talk so much at large about a stale and indefensible claim thrust forward at this early moment. Not supposing that the Senator from Vermont means to do injustice to supposing that the Senator from Vermont means to do injustice to anybody, I submit to him that it is hardly the thing to speak in that way of a bill which has received repeatedly the indorsement of a committee of this body and which has been favorably stated by some of the most experienced and ablest members of the body.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. Whyte.]

The motion was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 38, noes 7. Mr. WHYTE.

Mr. WHYTE. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 257) to amend the act incorporating the Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railway Company.

Mr. VOORHEES. Now, I simply desire to state to the Senate in all candor and frankness that I hope the motion of the Senator from Maryland will be voted down in order that I may then move to take up the bill for the relief of Benjamin Holladay, as I gave notice two weeks ago I would do. That is all I desire to say now. I think with the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] that when the proper time comes I can vindicate myself from the imputation of supporting an improper measure before this body.

Mr. WHYTE. I merely desire to state to the Senate that the bill which I have called up came up during the last legislative sitting when the Calendar was under consideration, and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] made a suggestion that there ought to be an Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDs] made a suggestion that there ought to be an additional amendment to those proposed to the bill having reference to a requirement on the part of the company to keep the tracks in good order at its own expense. I did not then think that it was necessary and the company to the company t essary, owing to the requirements of the original charter of the company, but at the same time acquiesced in the view of the Senator from Vermont that it would be better "to make assurance doubly sure" by incorporating such an amendment in the bill. All three of the bills went over at that time to give me time to prepare such an amendment, which I have done. Therefore these bills do not really amendment, which I have done. Therefore these bills do not really come up out of order. They come up under the Anthony rule; and if the Senate chooses to lay them aside and take up the Holladay bill I shall feel that I have at least discharged my duty, having no personal interest in the matter whatever, but only being anxious to gratify the desire of the people of this District.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, I move to amend the motion of the Senator from Maryland by striking out the bill indicated by him and inserting in lieu of it "the bill for the relief of Benjamin Holladay."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas moves by way of amendment that the Senate consider at this time the bill for the relief of Benjamin Holladay.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that in order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is, this being outside of the morning hour.

hour.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg the Chair to refer to the rule. The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair knows no rule on the subject except the restriction contained in the resolution relating to the morning hour. Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the rule says that a motion to proceed to consider any bill shall not be amended. I may be mistaken. I shall be glad to know how it is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the rule.

The Chief Clerk read from Rule 8, as follows:

Until the business of the morning shall have been concluded and so announced from the Chair, no motion to proceed to the consideration of any bill, resolution, report of a committee, or other subject upon the Calendar shall be entertained by the Chair, unless by unanimous consent; and if such consent be given, the motion shall not be open to amendment, and shall be decided without debate upon the merits of the subject proposed to be taken up; nor shall the consideration of any subject taken up during the morning hour, except a motion to amend the Journal or a motion pertaining to the credentials of a Senator-elect or his admission to his seat, be extended, unless by unanimous consent, beyond the expiration of the morning hour.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the only limitation of which the

The VICE-FRESIDENT. That is the only limitation of which the Chair is aware, and he has examined the precedents of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that is the rule, but I beg respectfully to suggest to the Chair that this is in the morning hour, for Rule 9 directs that the moment the morning hour expires the presiding officer "shall lay before the Senate the unfinished business." We are therefore either in the morning hour, or we have the unfinished business before us.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will submit the question to the Senate. There are precedents that outside of the morning hour it is the other way. He desires to have it settled.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should be very glad to have it settled authoritatively one way or the other.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the motion of the Senator from Arkan-as, to substitute for the bill proposed by the Senator from Maryland the Holladay bill, in order?

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 29, noes 21.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think we had better have the year and nays and make it a final precedent.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is whether the motion of the Senator from Arkansas is in order.

Mr. BUTLER. Before the vote is taken I should like to have the rule read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The rule will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Until the business of the morning hour shall have been concluded and so announced from the Chair, no motion to proceed to the consideration of any bill, resolution, report of a committee, or other subject upon the Calendar shall be entertained by the Chair, unless by unanimous consent; and if such consent be given, the motion shall not be upen to amendment, and shall be decided without debate upon the merits of the subject proposed to be taken up; nor shall the consideration of any subject taken up during the morning hour, except a motion to amend the Journal or a motion pertaining to the credentials of a Senator-elect or his admission to his seat, be extended, unless by unanimous consent, beyond the expiration of the morning hour.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now read the rest of the rule. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

If any portion of the morning hour shall remain after the call for resolutions, the presiding officer shall lay before the Senate, in their order, resolutions and concurrent resolutions introduced on any prior day, and the same may be proceeded with but not beyond the expiration of the morning hour, unless by the unanimous consent of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair announced, after calling for concurrent and other resolutions and the usual morning order of business, that the morning hour was concluded and that the Senate would proceed to the consideration of the Calendar under the Anthony rule, when the Senator from Maryland made his motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, Mr. President, I ask that the Secretary may read the following rule, the ninth. It is very short.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

set aside.

Immediately upon the expiration of the morning hour, the presiding officer shall lay before the Senate the unfinished business at its last adjournment, which shall take precedence of the special orders, and shall be proceeded with until disposed of the the Senate of the special orders.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, Mr. President, my point is that, taking these two rules together, they seem to me to be explicit that, to begin with, there is to be a morning hour in which first the Journal is to be read, then petitions and memorials and reports of committees and the introduction of bills and concurrent and other resolutions are to follow troduction of bills and concurrent and other resolutions are to follow in their order. They are not the only business of the morning hour. It then proceeds to say that, "until the business of the morning hour"—not merely that particular business but "the business of the morning hour" shall have been concluded—no motion to take up a bill shall be the subject of an amendment. It then says that if any portion of the morning hour shall remain—that speaks again of "the morning hour" and a portion of it left after the call for resolutions in the series—then the presiding officer shall lay before the Senate the concurrent resolutions of the preceding day. Then comes Rule 9:

Immediately upon the expiration of the morning hour the presiding officer shall lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that is superseded by the Anthony rule which provides that, immediately after the call for concurrent and other resolutions the Senate shall proceed under the Anthony rule to the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. "Unless otherwise ordered." The Senate has otherwise ordered, and therefore the Anthony rule has nothing to do with this moment of time or the morning hour to-day because we have determined that we would waive the Anthony rule for this time, as appears to me, with great respect to the Chair. That being the state of the case, the Anthony rule has no effect now, it having been

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is aware of that, but was only constraing it in reference to the rule cited by the Senator.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very good, but there is no need to construe it if we have it not before us. It is not in operation at this moment because the Senate has voted to set it aside.

anse the Senate has voted to set it aside.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. It has expired.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That being the state of the case, we have the standing rule of the Senate, and that to my mind clearly declares that the morning hour in which Senators may be entitled without displacing the unfinished business which is to come afterward, to move to take up something, shall not be wasted by a succession of amendments to try to take up something else, but that each such motion shall be voted upon on its own merits and then if such a motion is voted down a Senator who votes it down can move to take up something else, but the case who works a down as move to take up something else, but the case who works are the case who works are down as senator who votes it down can move to take up something else. voted down a Senator who votes it down can move to take up something else. That is the rule, and I think it is of good sense and of convenience, but the most I care for is to have the Senate settle it so that we shall all understand our rights.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I believe the morning hour has expired; and now the regular order comes up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour proper expired at one o'clock

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Under the Anthony rule it goes to half past one o'clock; therefore the regular order must now come up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is after half past one.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I believe it was understood by the Senate that Senate bill No. 877 was to be the regular order on our convening after the re convening after the recess.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending order of business and which is now in order is the question whether the motion submitted by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] is in order.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I wish to say that according to my recollection it has uniformly been held that a motion to proceed to the consideration of a bill, whether made in the morning hour or out of the morning hour, is not amendable by proposing to substitute some other bill; and if the Senate will turn to the Senate Journal of the third session of the Fortieth Congress they will find that these proceedings took place:

Mr. Pomerov moved to take up a bill (S. 256.)
Mr. Edmunds moved to amend by striking out "S. 256," and inserting Resolution "S. 66."

Mr. CONKLING. What date is that? Mr. THURMAN. The third session of the Fortieth Congress.

Mr. THURMAN. The third session of the Fortieth Congress.
Mr. HOAR. Was that in the morning hour or after?
Mr. CONKLING. What is the date?
Mr. THURMAN. I am reading from the late Chief Clerk's memorandum of decisions. I have sent for the Journal, however, and when I get it I shall be able to tell the date, and also to answer the question of the Senator from Massachusetts; but I think when you come to hear the reasons stated here for the decision you will find that they apply just as well after the morning hour as before:

Mr. Howard raised a question of order: That the motion being a simple proposition to take up a subject was not open to amendment.

The CHAIR [Mr. Wade] sustained the point of order raised by Mr. Howard.

Mr. EDMUNDS appealed; and the Senate sustained the Chair.

Then our late Chief Clerk gives the reasons, which I suppose are the reasons that were stated, and I beg the attention of Senators to the ground of this ruling, because it is a complete answer to the proposition that it is admissible outside of the morning hour but not in-

Note: The ground of this ruling was that the motion to take up belonged to that class of motions, "first made, first put," and until decided by the Senate there could be no amendment to the subject of the motion until it was up; when being up it could be again removed by a motion to postpone. The motion to amend might be a reason for rejecting the motion to take up; and the fate of the proposed amendment was involved in the decision of that motion, for if it was agreed to the Senate had decided upon the question as to what business it would consider, and if rejected the alternative proposition might then be made. (See debate in Congressional Globe, January 20, 1863, 467-8-9.) Senate Journal, third session Fortieth Congress, 125.

If think that decision has been followed ever since I have had a

I think that decision has been followed ever since I have had a seat in the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator will allow me to interrupt him to say when that question arose the standing rules of the Senate contained no prohibition against moving to amend a motion to take up; but following out that decision of the Senate the rules were made to conform to it

Mr. THURMAN. I presume the reasons which our late accomplished Chief Clerk has put down here were the reasons stated by the Chair, Mr. Wade, as the grounds of his decision. Certain it is that the Senate decided then, and, according to my recollection, although I do not profess to have an infallible memory, has ever since adhered to the rule that no matter at what hour of our proceedings a motion is made to proceed to the consideration of a particular bill or subject, that motion is not amendable by proposing to substitute some other. I have sent for the Journal.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the answer to the Senator from Ohio has been already indicated, perhaps not intentionally, by the Senator from Vermont. The Senate has a rule which it had not when that decision was made, which defines a method of proceeding which before this time was debatable; and it says that when, upon unanimous consent, a motion to take up a subject during the morning hour is entertained by the Chair, if it be so taken up, the unanimous consent of the Senate having been previously obtained, in that case it is not amendable, leaving the clear inference on the principle expressio unius exclusio alterius, that in all other cases it is amendable. So the question which, before this rule was established, was debatable is now settled; and it is a question simply upon the rule that the honorable Senator from Vermont raises it, and it seems to me that it is very simple one

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator just there receive a suggestion from me in confirmation of what he is saying? I have in my hand the rule as it stood at the time when Mr. Wade ruled as the Senator from Ohio has read and the Senate confirmed it, and in that rule is no such thing as the Senator from Massachusetts, quite correctly as think, refers to as the governing thing here. There is no such im-

I think, refers to as the governing thing here. There is no such implication whatever.

Mr. HOAR. That being the case the question comes up of the correctness of the original intimation of the Chair upon the rule. Now, what does the rule say? First, it declares what shall be the business of the morning hour. Then a subsequent rule, known as the Anthony rule, adds to the business of the morning hour the Calendar. Then the rule is that until the business of the morning hour shall have been concluded no motion of this character shall be entertained but by unanimous consent. The Chair announced that all the business. by unanimous consent. The Chair announced that all the business of the morning hour was concluded, except that provided for by the Anthony rule, and then the motion was entertained and adopted by the Senate which laid aside the business which is in order under the Anthony rule. So that the whole business of the morning hour is over and ended, and has been so announced formally from the Chair, and therefore the whole subject-matter to which Rule 8 and Rule 9 apply has been disposed of. Then Rule 8, saying simply that until the business of the morning hour has been concluded and the Chair. has made that announcement, no motion to proceed to the consideration of any bill shall be entertained but by unanimous consent. The question which the Senator from Vermont made is not whether the original motion of the Senator from Maryland is in order to take up the railroad bills. That motion has been entertained as in order without asking any unanimous consent; it has been put from the Chair; it has been adopted, and it is too late to raise any question as to the propriety of that motion, if any question could be raised. Now comes in the question of the motion to amend it, and whether, that motion being before the Senate, the Chair ought to have called for the unfinished business when he announced that the business enumer-

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There is no unfinished business on the Calendar which is printed and laid on the desk.

Mr. HOAR. The Chair says there is no unfinished business; but if there were, the question whether that should have been called up it is too late to raise now, because the motion of the Senator from Maryland was entertained, nobody raising any question as to its being in order. Therefore, that motion being in order the question whether it is in order to move to amend it is a question that depends upon the general parliamentary law as defined by the rule of the Senate, which says that when a motion of this kind has been made in the morning hour, before the morning hour business is over, it is not amendable, and when made by unanimous consent it is not amendable, leaving, of course, the absolute inference that at other times it is amendable

Mr. BLAINE. Mr. President, I shald like the attention of the Senate for a moment to this point. I was voting with the honorable Senator from Indiana, but I think it is very important to maintain the rule in the Senate that a motion to take up a particular bill shall not be amendable. It is important for both sides. The honorable Senator from Indiana will observe that he does not reach the conclusion he desires by one motion the less by taking this course. If the Senate votes directly on the motion of the honorable Senator from Maryland and disposes of it in the negative, then his motion comes up. If he would substitute his motion for that of the honorable Senator from Maryland, he would still have another motion ahead, that the Senate now proceed to consider the bill, whereas if you establish the rule by a wrong decision this morning, that the motion to take up a bill is amendable by substituting another bill, and if according to the speech of the honorable Senator from Massachusetts you can still further add an amendment to the amendment, then you introduce into the Senate the dangerous practice of filibustering, because you can keep off any bill, you can keep off a direct vote on any bill. A Senator moves to take up bill A, another Senator moves to substitute bill B, and another Senator moves to amend that amendment by substituting bill C. Those two amendments are voted on. As soon as they are done with another Senator moves to substitute bill D, and another Senator moves to amend that by putting in bill E, and so you can go through the entire alphabet and you can prevent the first Senator from getting a vote on his proposition.

Now, let us stick to the old rule and vote directly upon the bill that the first Senator moving proposes. Thus you get the sense of the Senate upon it. There is no advantage or disadvantage either the one way or the other, but it is a direct issue. Then the honorable Senator from Indiana gets exactly the same test upon his motion, and he cantal the least of it by an appropriate by a right indirection. It is not be kept out of it by an amendment or by an indirection. It is taking it front face, and every bill has its day in court. Otherwise, the least little combination of three or four determined opponents of any measure can prevent under that ruling its ever getting considered in the Senate at all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair wishes to state that there are several precedents for the motion of the Senator from Arkansas, but he cannot cite them from memory. He supposed with the Senator from Massachusetts that the only inhibition was contained in the rule regulating the business of the morning hour, that outside of that the question stood on the ordinary parliamentary law. The Chair will be very glad to have the rule settled by the Senate for his guidance.

Mr. BLAINE. I was going to suggest, if it is not desirable to have it decided now, that the honorable Senator from Indiana might withdraw his motion and allow the vote to be taken on the motion of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. VOORHEES. The Senator from Arkansas made the motion to substitute, and inasmuch as it is desired to have a ruling on the point perhaps it had better stand.

Mr. BLAINE. Very well.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, if the suggestion that this motion to amend is in order be sound on the claim that is made, it is equally true, then, that this amendment, or if it were an independent motion the motion itself would be the subject of debate on the merits, because the very next clause of this eighth rule to the one which has been referred to says that this motion to take up "shall be decided without debate upon the merits of the subject proposed to be taken without debate upon the merits of the subject proposed to be taken up;" and if that only applies to a case where unanimous consent has been given, then it does not apply to this case, for unanimous consent was not given to this motion, and the Chair would have been wrong in his sustaining the objection to my colleague referring to the merits of this case under the authority of this rule. I respectfully submit to the Chair that that would be a holding that would be contrary to the universal practice and construction that the Senate has put upon these rules and contrary to the convenience and facility of disposing of the business of the Senate. But of course the Chair is not responsible for convenience and facility. He is only responsible for a uniform interpretation of the rule.

If it be in order to move to amend this motion on the ground that it is not prohibited by this rule, then it is in order to debate it, beit is not prohibited by this rule, then it is in order to debate it, because the prohibition against debate only exists under exactly the same circumstances; and if that be so I shall be glad to hear from my colleague on the merits of both these measures that are proposed my colleague on the merits of both these measures that are proposed to be taken up.

I think, Mr. President, that the error into which the Chair, if I may say so with great respect, seemed about to fall—I have never known him actually to fall into an error—and into which other Senators have fallen, is in giving a wrong construction to these words "and if such consent be given" as controlling the subsequent words. I think that is a mistake. That expression merely means that if a man gets an opportunity to make his motion (which he cannot at that particular stage without consent) he may make the motion and it shall be decided without debate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator pardon the Chair for a moment in saying that he has treated this question as wholly outside the morning hour? He has not regarded it as in the morning hour at all. He supposed the morning hour was closed and so an-hour at all. He supposed the morning hour was closed and so announced it, and he treated it (not in his decision, for he has made none, but submitted the matter to the Senate) as entirely outside the morning hour, and as standing on the ordinary parliamentary law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then standing on the ordinary parliamentary law, and not affected by this eighth rule at all, I am bound to say with great respect to those who differ with me that I think the motion to amend would be in order, as I thought it was when I made the motion some years ago to amend a Central Branch Pacific subsidy bill by substituting for it a bill to keep the public faith.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is the only ruling the Chair has in-

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the Senate of the United States, which upon all questions except that of the seats of Senators is supposed to stand by what it has once decided, thought otherwise, and decided on an appeal to it that it was not in order upon the principles of general parliamentary law to move to amend a motion to take up a bill. If pariamentary law to move to amend a motion to take up a bill. It it stands on that, then let the Senate stand by its regular decision that it has made and which is so conducive, as the Senator from Maine has so well said, to the orderly dispatch of business and to the saving of time. But I must submit, with great respect, that I think this rule was intended—until in some revision it got rather jumbled together with several other rules—to accomplish the purpose of preventing debate on a motion to take up a bill at any stage of the business of the Senate. I mean debate upon the guestien waves de la less of the Senate. venting debate on a motion to take up a bill at any stage of the business of the Senate; I mean debate upon the question proposed to be taken up on its merits; and to prevent an endless succession of amendments proposing to take up other measures instead of the one moved, which would also interfere with the orderly progress of the business of the Senate. I think, therefore, that this rule has been applied and understood not only as cutting off debate but also as cutting off amendments. I think it will be wholesome to so construe it, whether you call it within the morning hour or without.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the debate on the greeting that has been referred to on the

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the debate on the question that has been referred to on the motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Edmunds] on the 20th of January, 1869, to amend a motion made by the then Senator from Kansas, Mr. Pomeroy, to proceed to the consideration of a Pacific Railroad.

bill. And first I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the motion of the Senator from Kansas, and, of course, the motion to amend, was made after the expiration of the morning hour. The Congressional Globe of the Fortieth Congress, third session, page 467, contains in the proceedings of January 20, 1869, this:

Mr. POMEROY. If the morning business is over, I move to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 256, the bill which we undertook to take up last night, but the Senate adjourned while the question was pending about taking it up.

That shows that the motion to proceed to the consideration of that bill was not made in the morning hour, but after the morning hour. Then followed some debate, not upon the question of order at all, until the Senator from Vermont moved to amend by striking out the Pacific Railroad bill and inserting the number of another bill. The

It is the opinion of the Chair that a motion to take up a bill is not amendable by moving to take up another bill. The two propositions seem to me to be entirely independent of each other, and really the subject of two independent motions. The case is like that of a motion to refer a bill to a committee. You cannot amend that motion by moving to refer to another committee, but you may make another motion for reference, and then the rule is that the motion first made should be first put. It strikes me that this is in the same nature. The matter is entirely under the control of the Senate. If they refuse to take up this bill they can then pass upon the next named, and so on.

Now, Mr. President, to show what was the usage of the Senate, I beg the attention of Senators to what was said by the most experienced Senators in this body, those who had longest served in the body, or served as long as any others, at any rate. In the first place, Mr. Pomeroy, who had had much service here and who was recognized as very good parliamentarian, arguing upon this question of order,

The fact is that this Senate is a law unto itself-

And he was answering the very argument which has been made now, that, according to parliamentary law, the motion was amendable. The Senator from Vermont had argued that, according to parliamentary law, the motion was amendable, and in the absence of any rule expressly forbidding it, parliamentary law must prevail, and the question must be put on the amendment. In reply to that the Senator from Yearses said: tor from Kansas said:

The fact is that this Senate is a law unto itself, and there never has been to my knowledge, during the years I have been here, an instance where, on a motion to take up and proceed to business, you could substitute another by way of amendment. I have never known that done. Some Senators have been here longer than I have, and they can state their experience.

Mr. Trumbull said:

This is not a new question. I recollect its having been raised in the Senate before, and my recollection of it is that it has uniformly been decided as the Chair has now decided it, and for the reason that you cannot pile one motion upon another

Mr. Sumner said :

I cannot add anything to what he has said in the way of reason-

Speaking of the remarks of the Senator from Kansas-that I may contribute my testimony as to the usage of the Senate, and I would say that from the first time I came into this Chamber I have never known such a motion as that of the Senator from Vermont to prevail. I have known it to be made more than ence and brought under consideration, but it always fell. I may say, therefore, that the unbroken usage of the Senate is precisely as has been stated and explained so well by the Senator from Kansas.

That is, that the motion to amend was not in order.

This debate went further, but it is not necessary for me to read any more. This is the testimony of men who had served in the Senate of the United States, one of them nearly eighteen years, and one of them over twelve years, and the other over seven years, and not one single instance was cited by those who were in favor of the amendment of the Senate ever having entertained a motion to amend a motion to proceed to the consideration of a bill. I do not think we ought to depart from that usage which has prevailed in the Senate for at least the third of a century, if not from the foundation of the Senate.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, I made the motion to amend in the

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, I made the motion to amend in the utmost good faith, supposing it was strictly in order. I shall not take the time of the Senate to show why I think it in order, because I feel that the suggestion made by the Chair and the suggestion made by the Senator from Massachusetts are correct. I was never clearer in my own mind of any proposition being in order than this. But as it is likely to produce debate longer possibly than would enable us to dispose of the Holladay bill and the railroad bills both, I withdraw the motion to amend, and am willing to take a vote on the motion of the Senator from Maryland.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair nevertheless, for his own guidance, would be glad of the opinion of the Senate on the question whether the motion submitted by the Senator from Arkansas was in order under the rules. The Chair will submit that question.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. President, my recollection is that the precedents are against the motion of the Senator from Arkansas, although I understand the Chair to say that he has found some—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There are precedents in the other direction. The Chair examined the question heretofore very carefully at the suggestion of the Senator from New York at the first session of the suggestion of the Senator from New York at the first session of Saunders Sharon, Vest.

Mr. ANTHONY. Then I hope we shall settle it according to the ancient precedents of the Senate. It is too much the custom for Senators to settle questions of order with a view to the measures which they affect. I am inclined to think that there is much merit in the bill of Mr. Holladay. I have not examined it sufficiently to make up my mind, but I certainly am in favor of considering it. He is entitled to a hearing; but I think that this motion is not in order and I shall vote against it.
Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, the poet says that—Order is Heaven's first law and the Senate never seems to be so much delighted as when it gets before it some broad, grave question of order. The whole morning has been taken up. I want to vote on these bills and I do not want to listen any more to these discussions; and while it is well to be in order, I would suggest to the Chair whether the matter is not complete. A motion was made and that motion was withdrawn. There is therefore no motion before the Senate, and there can be none as is therefore no motion before the Senate, and there can be none as the question now stands. That is my suggestion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Unquestionably the Senator is correct. Mr. EDMUNDS. Why, Mr. President, a motion cannot be withdrawn after the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. HAMLIN. There were no yeas and nays ordered upon the motion made by the Senator from Arkansas.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will accept the suggestion of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] and the question is now on the motion made by the Senator from Maryland, [Mr. Whyte,] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him, Senate bill No. 257.

Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him, Senate bill No. 257.

Mr. VOORHEES. If the Senate refuse to proceed to the consideration of the street railway bill, I shall then move to take up the bill for the relief of Ben. Holladay.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. When we were last in session previous to the recess Senate bill No. 877 had been under discussion, and it was understood I think by the Senate that it would be in order when we met after the recess; and the morning hour having gone by, as it is the unfinished business as I consider, I ask that it be taken up, and I ask the Chair if he has what was said at the time before him, and if so whether I am not correct in that construction?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair's attention was not called to that matter till a short time since. He saw that the bill alluded to was not put on the Calendar as the unfinished business. The Secrewas not put on the Calendar as the unfinished business. The Secretary will report from the RECORD what the Senator from West Virginia desires to have read.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Will the Secretary report what took place in regard to the bill I am now seeking to get up?

The Secretary read as follows from the RECORD of December 23, 1880, containing the proceedings of December 22:

SURPLUS REVENUE DEPOSITS.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. Davis, of West Virginia. Several Senators are asking for the floor. It is understood, if anything can be understood in the Senate, that the regular order is the bill referred to by myself, the bill to relieve the States of the $22,000,000 deposited with them. I shall not object to any bill coming up now unless it brings on a long debate, if that is the understanding of the Senate. If not, we ought to take up that bill.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator from West Virginia yield to me for a moment.

Mr. Davis, of West Virginia. The matter may not be in proper form for a yielding; but if it is understood that that bill is the unfinished business, I am willing to yield.

The Presidence of Fricer. The Chair is informed by the Chief Clerk that it has not been treated as unfinished business.

Mr. Davis, of West Virginia. I feared that might be the case; but as it was the unfinished business when we were last regularly at business, I want it now understood that it is the unfinished business, to which I hear no objection from any one, and if the Chair so announces, I shall be satisfied.

The Presiding Officer. The Senator from West Virginia asks that the bill to which he refers be considered as the unfinished business of the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be so regarded.

Mr. Davis, of West Virginia. That will do.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If that point had been made at half past one o'clock the Chair would have felt bound to entertain it, but the motion having been made by the Senator from Maryland and de-bated for an hour without objection, he holds that that is now in order.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Chair will recollect that at half past one I rose, but the Senator from Vermont had the floor, and then as soon as I could get the Chair's attention I submitted the question to the Chair by calling his attention to it, but the question then under debate being somewhat in the nature of a privileged one

I did not press my motion any further.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair had no means of information except the Calendar before him until his attention was afterwards called to the RECORD.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is true.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate having entertained this motion for an hour the Chair must suppose it is now in order.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then am I not in order in moving to take up bill No. 877?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If the motion of the Senator from Maryland shall fail, which is the pending motion, then the Senator will be in order. The question now is on the motion of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. WHYTE. I call for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 17, nays 35; as follows:

VEAS-17 Morrill, Pugh, Slater, Thurman, Wallace, Harris Coke, Davis of Illinois, Edmunds, Farley, Johnston, Kernan, McPherson, Maxey, NAYS-35. Allison, Anthony, Beck, Blaine, Blair, Booth, Hereford, Hill of Georgia, Cameron of Wis., Platt, Rollins, Teller, Vance, Voorhees, Walker, Carpenter, Conkling, Davis of W. Jones of Nevada, Lamar, McMillan, Randolph, Bailey, Baldwin Grover. Ransom, Sanisbury, Bayard, Bruce, Cameron of Pa., Cockrell, Hampton, Hill of Colorado,

So the motion was not agreed to.

Jonas, Jones of Florida,

Mr. VOORHEES. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 231, being a bill for the relief of Ben. Holladay.

Morgan, Paddock, Plumb,

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Indiana moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, it appears to me, from the RECORD, that the unfinished business is Senate bill No. 877. It was so understood, I believe, by every Senator, for it was unanimously agreed to, and the Chair announced it, and I hope the Senate mously agreed to, and the Chair announced it, and I hope the Senate will now proceed with it, as the understanding was a direct understanding and a unanimous understanding. The bill had been under discussion for a day or two, and it was announced by the Chair that it would be considered as the unfinished business. I hope the Senate will carry out that direct understanding. I judge that I shall not be in order to move to substitute it for the bill named by the Senator from Indiana, but I hardly think that necessary, for I hope the Senator will adhere to its away menimens understanding. ate will adhere to its own unanimous understanding.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It requires unanimous consent; is it given?

Mr. VOORHEES. There was no such understanding then, and it cannot be had now. I gave notice that I should make a motion to take up this bill at this hour, two weeks ago. I was not a party to a unanimous understanding that we were to proceed with the bill indicated by the Senator from West Virginia as unfinished business. Now, I wish to say that, as the Senator from New York [Mr. Conk-Now, I wish to say that, as the Senator from New York [Mr. CONK-LING] justly and properly observed, there is an economy of time in taking up this bill and disposing of it, and then it will not be in the way of other measures. I shall be happy to co-operate with the Senator from West Virginia or anybody else in disposing of other measures after this shall have been acted on.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Chief Clerk to read the latter part of the announcement of the Chair as regards Senate bill No. 877 on the last day of our session, and I hope the Senate will listen to what the Chair amnounced, and then, of course, I shall submit to the will of the Senate the will of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Presiding Officer. The Senator from West Virginia asks that the bill to which he refers be considered as the unfinished business of the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be so regarded.

Mr. TELLER. What day was that?
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The last day of our session.
Mr. TELLER. The day before the last day, I think.
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. No, the last day.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The 22d day of December.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I want the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

BEN. HOLLADAY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 231) for the relief of Ben. Holladay.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. At a former sitting the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, adopted an amendment, which will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out all after line 8 of the bill, in the following words:

For spoliations by hostile Indians on his property while carrying the United States mails, during the existence of Indian hostilities on the line of said mailroute; for property taken and used by United States troops for the benefit of the United States, and for losses of property and expenses incurred in changing his mail-route, in compliance with the orders of the United States commanding officer.

And in lieu thereof inserted:

On account of his contract with the Post-Office Department to carry the United States mails, and in full payment and satisfaction for all losses sustained by him by reason of his having carried the mail on a route different from the one specified in the contract under the order of the military authority of the United States, and upon the request of the President, during the existence of Indian hostilities on the line of said mail-route; and in full satisfaction for the property taken and used by United States troops for the benefit of the United States.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That there be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $526,739, to be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury to Ben. Holladay, in full payment and satisfaction of all claims of said Holladay against the United States on account of his contract with the Post-Office Department to carry the United States was the contract with the Post-Office Department to carry the United States

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Are there other amendments?

Mr. WHYTE. Is there a report in that case the VICE-PRESIDENT. There is.
Mr. WHYTE. I should like to hear it read.

Mr. VOORHEES. I think the report of the committee was read at a former time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was read at a former session.

Mr. VOORHEES. I think it had better be read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the report submitted by Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, February 9, 1880, which appears in the Congressional Record for the Forty-sixth Congress, second session, from page 2946 Mr. KERNAN. If it be in order I offer at this time an amendment to the bill, which I send to the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

Ing clause and insert:

That Benjamin Holladay be, and he hereby is, authorized and empowered to institute and prosecute an action in the Court of Claims against the United States for the recovery of any amount for which the United States are justly liable to him on account of any seizure or destruction by hostile Indians of property owned and used by him in performing his contract with the United States to transport the mails on what was known as the overland mail-route, between the Missouri River and Salt Lake City, between the year 1800 and the 13th of November, 1866; also on account of any loss of property and expenses incurred in changing his route in carrying the mail in compliance with the orders of the United States commanding officer, and also for any property owned by said Holladay and taken and used by United States troops; and the said Court of Claims is hereby authorized to hear and determine said suit upon the merits, and render judgment therein in accordance with the rights of the parties.

SEC. 2. Either party shall have the right to prosecute an appeal from the judgment of the Court of Claims to the Supreme Court of the United States at any time within sixty days after the rendition thereof.

SEC. 3. If the said Holladay shall not commence said action in the Court of Claims within six months from the passage of this act, and prosecute the same to effect, then the said claims hereinbefore mentioned shall be forever barred.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, I offer this because, as I understand

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, I offer this because, as I understand the evidence, I cannot vote for the bill allowing Mr. Holladay $526,000. The evidence is entirely unsatisfactory to me that he sustained damage to any such amount. In the report you will find on page 11 this item, which seems to be one of those making up the

A. D. 1863. One hundred and seventy-three horses and 34 mules, near Fort Halleck, (page 4, printed evidence of R. L. Pease;) total value, $41,400.

Now, turning to the evidence of Mr. Pease, it would seem to consist of an affidavit which certainly would not establish of his knowledge any such loss of property, and as it is short I will read it. It is on page 3 of the printed evidence referred to in the report which has increased; just been read :

Before me, William Jackson, a notary public in and for Atchison County, Kansas, personally appeared Robert L. Pease, of lawful age, who, being duly sworn according to law, makes oath and says, namely:

From the 31st day of December, A. D. 1861, to the 21st day of March, A. D. 1862, I was one of the trustees in charge of all the property belonging and appertaining to the stage line carrying the mails from Atchison, Kansas, to Salt Lake

City, commonly called now the overland stage line, holding the same as such trustee in possession for the use and benefit of Benjamin Holladay; and as such trustee I had the chief control and management of said property during the period aforesaid.

Between the 31st day of December, 1861, and the 21st day of March, 1862, the losses to said stage line were reported to me as such trustee by the officers and employés thereof, and number of mules and horses taken from said stage line by hostile Indians amounted to one hundred and seventy-three; and that this number of animals employed in said line were so taken by said Indians there certainly can be no doubt. None of said animals were ever recovered to my knowledge. I was agent for said stage line at Denver City, Colorado, during the summer of the year 1863, and during that time thirty-four head of stage animals (mules) were taken by Indians off said line, near Fort Halleck. The Indians were pursued, but none of the stock recovered.

The loss of this lot of animals was reported to me, and that they were so taken by Indians there is not any doubt at all.

R. L. PEASE.

y Indians there is not any doubt at all.

R. L. PEASE.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 17th day of November, A. D. 1865.

WILLIAM JACKSON,

Notary Public.

LOSS AND DAMAGE DONE AS PER AFFIDAVIT OF R. L. PEASE.

From December 31, 1861, to March 21, 1862, on the road, 173 horses stolen or destroyed, $200 each $34, 600
In summer of 1863, 34 head of mules, near Fort Halleck, $200 each 6, 800

That makes up the $41,400 which the report cites the evidence of Mr. Pease to establish. I find nothing else to establish it, but I do find a little evidence that the committee speak of in their report from a Mr. Murdock which would go to the contrary, if gentlemen will look at it from pages 67 to 80. He says that there were a few mules taken, but that they were returned or got back again.

Mr. INGALLS. Who says that?

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. Murdock, as I understand his name to be. His testimony begins on page 67. What he says about the price is not so very important, but I will refer to that:

O. Did you know anything about the value of mules is that the contract of the same of the contract of the c

Q. Did you know anything about the value of mules in that country at that

A. There were mules and horses bought there at Halleck of pilgrims coming over the plains. I should say that $100 or $125 would be a fair value of the majority of the mules used by the overland stage line.

Mr. TELLER. Whose testimony is that?
Mr. KERNAN. Mr. Murdock's.
Mr. TELLER. That is the bugler.
Mr. KERNAN. I think it is said he is a bugler and was only twenty-three years old, and there seems to have been a gentleman there to cross-examine him. That was about the price. Now look at page 69, where he speaks about the return of the mules:

at page 69, where he speaks about the return of the mules:

Q. You may state what you know, if anything, about Indian disturbances on the old line and on the new line during the time that you were there.

A. There were six or seven head of mules taken from Pass Creek Station, the second station west of Fort Halleck, in the spring of 1863. They were taken by the Ute Indians, and were returned to Halleck Station, and a bounty of $5 claimed for the return of the mules.

Q. Were they captured by some one and taken back?

A. The Ute Indians claimed that the Sioux had been over and stolen some ponies from them, and they wanted to borrow the mules to hunt for their stock. The station agent refused to let them have them, and so they took them anyway. The agent came down to Halleck immediately after, and invited us, and we went in pursuit, but were unable to overtake the Indians. The stock was brought back to Halleck Station some time afterward, to George Launsberry, who was keeping the station at that time, and they claimed $5 reward for the return of the stray animals. Along in July, 1853, there was a bell-mare shot at the second station east of Halleck by what was supposed to be Ute Indians.

Q. Have you noticed the affidavit of Mr. R. L. Pease?

Q. Have you noticed the affidavit of Mr. R. L. Pease? A. Yes, sir. Mr. Pease makes the statement that it was reported (I don't know that he makes the affidavit direct) that the mules were stolen. I was at Fort Halleck at that time, and it was about that time that the six mules were taken or bor-

Mr. McDONALD. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from New York—

Mr. KERNAN. Let me read what I am going on with.

Mr. McDONALD. It is simply a matter of fact.

Mr. KERNAN. Very well.

Mr. McDONALD. The mules spoken of by Murdock were taken in 1863, while those coved by the affidavit of Pease were from December 1861 to March 1862.

ber, 1861, to March, 1862.

Mr. KERNAN. No, the thirty-six or thirty-four—it is printed both ways—are thus spoken of in the testimony, on page 3:

I was agent for said stage line at Denver City, Colorado, during the summer of the year 1863, and during that time thirty-four head of stage animals (mules) were taken—

In another place it is said thirty-six-thirty-four head of stage animals (mules) were taken by Indians off said line, near Fort Halleck. The Indians were pursued, but none of the stock recovered. The loss of this lot of animals was reported to me.

He was examined about it, and you will find that the committee themselves contrast the evidence and say they would rather rely on Pease. Now I will read to you what Murdock says about it:

Q. Have you noticed the affidavit of Mr. R. L. Pease?

A. Yes, sir. Mr. Pease makes the statement that it was reported (I don't know that he makes the affidavit direct) that the mules were stolen. I was at Fort Halleck at that time, and it was about that time the six mules were taken or borrowed. There were not thirty-six mules stolen from that station by Indians, or by anybody else, at that time.

You will find that he is cross-examined about it, and that it is the same transaction. As to the thirty-four or thirty-six that he speaks of, all I mean to say is that the evidence to establish this $41,400, dropping out Murdock, is that of a man who simply says it was reported to him. There is no evidence that he knows it himself. I give that as a specimen of a very large portion of this claim. I am not going into it in detail, though I have looked over the evidence. There is very little of evidence. There is no evidence, in my judgment, to prove any considerable number of these animals were stolen for which compensation should be made by the Government.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think the Senator from New York is under a misapprehension. If he will allow me—

Mr. KERNAN. I think the Senator had better wait until I get

Mr. WILLIAMS. I only want to refer the Senator to a matter of fact now

Mr. KERNAN. Will my friend point to me the evidence of any men who say they knew, had personal knowledge, that fifty mules were stolen of this great number? The report of the committee refers to Pease alone for this item of $41,400. Here is what they say:

A. D. 1863. One hundred and seventy-three horses and 34 mules, near Fort Halleck, (page 4, evidence of R. L. Pease;) total value, §41,400.

They refer us to the evidence, and in their report they discuss the testimony of both and say Murdock was a bugler, a young man, and that they prefer not to rely on him. The difficulty is that what Pease says is not evidence, taking all that is said, giving him the utmost credit. He says he held this property as trustee, that it was reported to him that there were so many animals lost or stolen, and that there can be no doubt of it. I shall be very glad to hear gentlemen who can show that there is evidence here authorizing us to give any such amount for property of the value and character here stated to have amount for property of the value and character here stated to have been stolen. I am entirely desirous that this man should have justice, and therefore have proposed the substitute.

This is an extraordinary case in many ways. In the first place, the first report of the committee was that they thought the evidence was too loose, and they proposed to send it to the Court of Claims on affidavits. When it came here Mr. Christiancy, it will be remembered, in 1878 moved to strike out that provision saying that it was not in 1878 moved to strike out that provision, saying that it was not proper to send it to the court on affidavits; the court might think they were called upon to allow the claim on affidavits if contrary evidence was not presented. Therefore, on the yeas and nays on the motion of Mr. Christiancy that clause was stricken out of the first bill and it Mr. Christiancy that clause was stricken out of the first bill and it was provided in substance that the claimant should go to the Court of Claims to recover, on competent evidence, all that he was entitled to. Then the friends of the bill, after that was put in, moved to refer it back to the committee. It was on motion of Mr. Mitchell, who then was on the committee, and had charge of the bill. I think if we mean to do justice by this bill we shall set a wise precedent if we send the case to the Court of Claims under a fair bill, saying that the court shall allow Mr. Holladay any amount which is established by evidence and which he is fairly entitled to. Without pretending now to do more than state the reasons for this amendment, I may say that I have looked through the evidence and cannot find any proof now to do more than state the reasons for this amendment, I may say that I have looked through the evidence and cannot find any proof to justify us giving half the amount proposed. I have offered this substitute that it may be printed and examined. It seems to me it would be dangerous to set the precedent that we shall order the Treasury to pay on the facts stated in this report, because almost all the facts stated in this report are in the first one, and the committee then said the evidence did not sustain the case, and therefore it ought to go to the Court of Claims. We amended the bill to send it there are legal evidence, and not one reports affidavits, and then it was sent on legal evidence, and not on ex parte affidavits, and then it was sent back to the committee. I think we had better give this man a bill authorizing him to go to the Court of Claims and establish his claim. If he can prove fairly what he is entitled to, let that court be authorized by law to award him judgment, and then he can receive his pay from the Treasury.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President—

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Arkansas before he proceeds allow me to make in a single sentence an explanation of one fact? The Senator from New York, it seems to me, has failed to understand in his statement, at any rate he has not stated correctly as I underin his statement, at any rate he has not stated correctly as I understand it, the original action of this committee. This man had no legal right to go into the Court of Claims originally. He came to Congress and Congress kept him year after year dancing attendance, putting him off until witnesses were dead, and there had been no time when he could take depositions in perpetuum or depositions where there should be an appearance by the Government and a cross-examination. It seemed to the committee that while it was desirable to send him to a court where the Government could be heard, and where all the living witnesses might be cross-examined it would be a great outto a court where the Government could be heard, and where all the living witnesses might be cross-examined, it would be a great outrage on the part of this Government in its treatment of that citizen to say, "You shall be deprived absolutely of any advantage to be obtained by the affidavits which were taken of men who are now dead, but who knew the circumstances when they were alive;" to keep the man until it is impossible for him to have his case by legal evidence, without any remedy whatever, and then when the witnesses were dead turn around and say, "Oh, we are willing now you nesses were dead turn around and say, "Oh, we are willing now you should have a remedy, but you must prove your case wholly by legal evidence, and if your witnesses are all dead it is your fault that your case was not heard when they were alive." That is the attitude the Senator from New York seems to think an honorable government ought to take with respect to its citizen. The committee said, "No; we will send this man and his case shall be argued before a judicial tribunal against his claim by the Attorney-General of the United States, and his assistants; the United States may go to the Supreme
